It does not follow that he shall be approached with the mace if he is approached by the authority of the Speaker in the person of the officer of the House; and the Speaker on yesterday said, as the RECORD will show, that he had directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that the gentleman from Kentucky was seated. All was done in kindness and gentleness by the Speaker pro tempore toward his colleague. There is nothing to complain of. Nobody can complain of either the Speaker pro tempore or the Speaker himself in their treatment of the gentleman from Kentucky; and the only complaint is that they have exceeded in lenity and not in severity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. I do not desire to discuss the doctrine of this case at this time. A time will come for that. All that I now ask is that the Journal, which should be a faithful record of the proceedings of the House, shall state the facts as they actually occurred.

The gentleman from Kentucky did refuse to take his seat upon the order of a man who had laid violent hands upon him and bore no symbol of office. When, however, that citizen left him to assume evidence that he was an officer of the House and under the Speaker's command the gentleman took his seat; and when the representative of the Sergeant-at-Arms approached or turned to approach the gentleman from Kentucky he was, as all the gentlemen around us here well know and will say, already in his seat. And the Journal should show, not that he took his seat under official constraint, but that, if he had made a mistake in assuming that no citizen had the right to force him by violence off his feet when addressing the Chair—when he saw that the authority of the House was speaking to him he had taken his seat; and I ask that this correction be made in the Journal.

Mr. CONVERSE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me a question?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has had long and wide experience in parliamentary law, whether there is any rule of the law which requires an officer of this House to carry with him the mace or other symbol of authority when he is obeying the instructions of the presiding officer of the House or when serving a writ or process or performing any other duty that he is by the law required to perform?

Mr. KELLEY. As there will be, Mr. Speaker, time enough to discuss that question when it arises, I shall not proceed to discuss it now. The question before us is whether the Journal states the facts as they occurred or whether it misrepresents them. I ask that it state them correctly.

Mr. REAGAN. The Journal is correct as read. It states the facts as they occurred. The only pretense for making this question is a purely technical one, which ignores the actual facts of the case.

The gentleman from Kentucky knew the Sergeant-at-Arms as well as the Speaker and every other member of the House knew him. He heard the order of the Speaker to the Sergeant-at-Arms to cause him to be seated. The pretense now that he did not bring the mace is, I repeat, a mere technical pretense, in order to make an issue to the disadvantage of the Speaker when he had discharged the duty which devolved upon him—with perhaps the exception stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that he extended too much leniency and listened too long to the abuse of the patience of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. REAGAN. I was going to move, and I do move, to lay the proposed motion to correct the Journal on the table.

Mr. REED, of Maine, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the gentleman from Texas will kindly withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. REAGAN. I would be glad to hear the views of the gentleman from Maine, but we have a great deal of important business and we should not waste more time on this matter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I simply desire one moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Texas, as the gentleman from Maine well knows, is not debatable. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEILEY] has moved to correct the Journal——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like to state—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is not debatable, as the gentleman from Maine knows perfectly well. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has moved to correct the Journal as indicated, and the gentleman from Texas moves to lay that motion on the table.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN'S motion, there were—ayes 138, noes 94.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before the roll is called I would like to have the clause of the Journal which it is proposed to correct reported again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there be objection it will be again read.

Several members objected, and called for the general order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am satisfied so far as I am concerned. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 95, not voting 64; as follows:

So the motion to correct the Journal was laid on the table.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. GARRISON with Mr. BARR.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. LACEY.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. BRUMM, on this vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, on this vote.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, for to-day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER rose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no further objection, the Journal will stand approved.

Mr. KEIFER. I object. I now move that the Chair appoint a committee of five members to examine and report upon the question of fact, as made by members around me, with reference to the proceedings yesterday in connection with the Sergeant-at-Arms and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]. I may state, in support of this motion, that it is in accordance with the rule in the English Parliament; indeeed, it is the only way to have the fact recorded, and it is the right of every member, no matter what the judgment of the House may be, to have the facts recorded. The House has no right to vote, by a majority vote, that a fact which has occurred in its proceedings shall not be recorded in the Journal.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker. The motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] moves that the Chair appoint a committee of five members to examine and report as to the correctness of the Journal as read by the Clerk. That motion the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moves to lay on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON. Is the motion subject to the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is too late to make the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] have the right to make that motion while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is on the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] had concluded his remarks.

Mr. KEIFER. I had not concluded, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had made his motion, and in the silence that ensued, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] not addressing the Chair, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] rose and made the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. KEIFER. I paused, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of having the Chair state the question, which had not been stated up to that time; and before the Chair had stated the question the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] took the floor to move to lay my motion on the table. I claim the right to have the Chair state the motion that I have made, and then to proceed to discuss it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not recognize the right of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to require such service at the hands of the Chair until he has concluded his remarks; but in order to be entirely fair, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] further.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not make this motion in any captious spirit at all——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But before he discusses the proposition the point of order can be entertained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will overrule the point of order if the gentleman desires to make it, and will hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was about to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has passed upon it, and the gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not make this motion in any captious sense at all, nor to occupy the time of the House, but to preserve the integrity of the records of the proceedings of this House. I do not know personally the facts in relation to this matter that is claimed to have been omitted from the Journal, but all around me, I may say regardless of party, there is concurrence in this: that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] took his seat before the Sergeant-at-Arms arrived with the mace.

Now, whether that is correct or not depends upon the facts as they may be disclosed by a large number of honorable gentlemen here. The point I make, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not the right of a majority of this House to say that a fact which concerns the proceedings of this House and is a part of them shall not be recorded upon the Journal. Indeed, I think that the House, with a little deliberation, would not attempt to prevent a record being made of the proceedings as they took place. There may well be a difference of opinion as to what did take place; it may be that a majority of the House, either from not knowing anything about the matter, or from information received, might vote down a motion such as that submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]; but in parliamentary bodies whenever there is an allegation of inaccuracy in the Journal, or of omission from the Journal, it has been the practice to appoint a committee to inquire into the facts and report to the House, in order that the Journal might be corrected. The Journal is of that sort of paramount importance that in the organic act of the nation it is made mandatory upon each House of Congress to keep a journal of its proceedings. Now, is that journal to be kept in accordance with the vote of the majority of the House, in accordance with their wish as to what shall be recorded, in accordance with the whim of the majority of the House (if I may use the expression) at the time the record is made up, or is it to be kept in accordance with the fact? To illustrate, suppose the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], or any other gentleman, has an important proceeding here upon a bill, and it is entirely omitted from the Journal by mistake or otherwise, I insist that that gentleman himself, even if no other member agrees with him, has a right to have the Journal show exactly what did take place—precisely what did take place. It is not for the judgment of the House to determine whether or not it shall go upon the record, but whether it is the fact.

This, Mr. Speaker, comprises substantially all I desire to say. It is laid down in Jefferson's Manual, page 139, that in cases of this kind the House may take proceedings to have the facts ascertained which should go upon the Journal. The language is:

> On information of a misentry or omission of an entry in the journal, a committee may be appointed to examine and rectify it and report it to the House.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, how does this debate come up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is that a committee of five members be appointed to inquire into the facts and report to this House as to the correctness or incorrectness of its Journal.

Mr. REAGAN. I moved to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will repeat the statement already made, that the Chair, supposing the gentleman from Ohio had finished his remarks, recognized the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who moved to lay the motion of the gentleman from Ohio on the table. But the gentleman from Ohio, claiming that injustice was done him, the Chair, in order to be entirely fair, recognized the gentleman from Ohio to proceed again. That gentleman now seems to be claiming an hour, and is yielding certain time to other members.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Has he the right to do so under the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that it is the gentleman's right, if he claims it, under the circumstances.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does he claim it?

Mr. KEIFER. Not the whole hour; no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the only anxiety I feel about this matter is that the House should do itself justice. This is not a matter of personal popularity or personal unpopularity. It is a question of what is due to the House in the statement of a fact upon its Journal. I simply desire to say to the House that I was personally an eyewitness of the transaction, and that the Journal does not, according to my recollection, state the fact as it occurred.

I do not desire for one moment to enter into the question of the right or wrong of the transaction; that will come up under another form of proceedings. But here is a proposition to correct a misstatement in the Journal. It seems to me the House owes it to itself to make that correction in some form or other. I do not know that a word need be added to what I have said. The House ought to ascertain whether the correction should be made, if there is any dispute.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I shall be obliged to vote for this resolution, because it is proper, without any regard to who is right as to the matter of fact. There is an issue, and the only way to try that issue is before a committee. We have no standing committee that has jurisdiction of this question; therefore a special committee ought to be appointed.

I may believe that the Journal is exactly correct; other gentlemen believe it is wrong. The fact that anybody feels an interest in having it corrected creates a necessity for ascertaining the truth. This is but a repetition, for the purpose of emphasis, of what I have already said.

Mr. KEIFER. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY].

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, upon this question valuable time is being consumed which there is an imperative demand should be devoted to the transaction of the public business. I have conversed with several gentlemen on this side of the House, and I find the opinion to prevail generally that the shortest and quickest way out of this imbroglio will be to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Ohio—appoint this committee, and let a report be made in regard to the facts touching this transaction, and thus dispose of it without consuming the time of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I now desire to yield for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a point of order. Was not a motion made to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not before the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I began the remarks with which I preceded my motion on this subject by disclaiming all personal feeling in this matter. I can not do so at this time. I have a deep personal interest in this question as now presented. I have made a statement as to a matter of fact which I had witnessed, and which was witnessed by my neighbors all around me. This honored member of the Democratic party who now stands near me, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT], stood as near as I did to the scene of the transaction, and would, I am quite sure, tell a committee that my statement was to the letter accurate.

Mr. HUNT. I believe the gentleman's statement was correct.

Mr. KELLEY. I believed the gentleman would say so. The man himself who came as a citizen and claimed to be executing an order addressed to an officer of the House, and whose conduct has given rise to this discussion, has, if I am not misinformed by several gentlemen, said that my statement of the facts was accurate.

As has been said, it is due to the member involved that the Journal shall speak of him truthfully. It is due to the honor of the House, in whose behalf I proposed the amendment, that it shall recite the truth and not falsely record the angry impulse of a majority on the floor. Therefore I ask as a measure of justice to the House that the parliamentary usage of a committee to inquire where in a moment of excitement an issue has been raised shall be followed so it may be corrected.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. KEIFER retained the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to know what the gentleman from Ohio proposes to do?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not propose to occupy any more time at present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must occupy his time or yield the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say that I think this is a case of much ado about nothing. Just as it now stands it seems to me it is beyond the authority of the other side of the House, or of this House, to do anything except to go forward and have this committee appointed and the fact ascertained.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We will not do anything, of course, if we take up the whole time with this trash.

Mr. WASHBURN. I sat in my seat, and I know, unless my senses misled me, that the statement in the Journal is not correct. Now, can any one of us afford to refuse to have that correction made? I can not see that anybody is to be harmed by it. Let the correction be made and let the Journal stand as a true record of our proceedings.

Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WASHBURN. And then let us proceed to business. So far as I am concerned, I have heard enough of this whole trifling proceeding.

Mr. OATES. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield the floor for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has yielded the floor. [After a pause.] The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield for a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to yield for a question.

Mr. OATES. Is not the Journal correct so far as it goes, the trouble being in the fact that it is not explicit? ["No!" from the Republican side.] It states the Sergeant-at-Arms went and got his mace and then returned, and that, after he had returned, Mr. WHITE took his seat. If you had inserted the words that Mr. WHITE had taken his seat "before the deputy sergeant-at-arms had again reached him," you would have the whole thing. It is not an error in what is stated, but in not stating enough to make it explicit.

Mr. REAGAN. Now I desire to go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the whole of this means that gentlemen on the other side of the House, for the protection of the man who has been interrupting the proceedings of the House and producing unnecessary delays by a course of conduct that ought not to have been tolerated, now desire to dictate to the Democrats on this side that they shall make an apology for the Speaker having performed his duty as he did. That is all there is of it. The Sergeant-at-Arms by the command of the Speaker went to the desk of that member and tried to get him to take his seat after he was called to order and requested to do so by the Speaker; but he refused to be seated. The Sergeant-at-Arms went back to his desk and got his mace, under the idea perhaps that it would add to his authority; but when he returned the member was seated. It seems to me we ought not to consume further time, that common decency, in view of the history of this transaction, forbids that we should go on to spend more time on this subject.

It is asserted that it is an outrage on personal rights. Now, if the question of right could be considered, the whole question of right, we would consider the outrage on the rights of this House and on the interests of this country by delaying its proceedings day after day by dilatory and filibustering motions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. By whom?

Mr. REAGAN. By the very gentleman you are now trying to make a martyr of; the gentleman you put up—the gentleman Mr. REED put up. I am tired of seeing Democrats rise here and apologize for efforts on the part of the majority in trying to control this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It has been our fate long enough——

Mr. REED, of Maine, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will suspend.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire the words of the gentleman from Texas be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The words will be taken down.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Texas has been called to order, and he has not taken his seat while the words are being taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The words of the gentleman from Texas have been called for, and when they have been supplied by the Official Reporter they will be read. The gentleman from Texas having been called to order will take his seat. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Let the words be taken down if the gentleman wants them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will suspend until the language of the gentleman has been reported to the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that under the rule itself the only privilege of the gentleman from Texas now is to take his seat until the words are reported to the House. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman is still standing. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is in order for every member on the floor to take his seat; and the Sergeant-at-Arms will see that all members are seated.

Mr. REAGAN. Since the gentleman from Kentucky is so sensitive about the rules, I will take my seat. [Laughter.]

[The assistant sergeant-at-arms, with the mace in his hands, proceeded through the Hall until order was restored and members had resumed their seats.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the language to which the gentleman from Maine excepts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOUTELLE. By whom?

Mr. REAGAN. By the very gentleman you are now trying to make a martyr of; the gentleman you put up—the gentleman Mr. REED put up. I am tired of seeing Democrats rise here and apologize for efforts on the part of the majority in trying to control this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It has been our fate long enough.

* * * * * * *

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read clause 5 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read clause 4 of the same rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and if the case require it he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] takes exception to the language of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I simply ask the Speaker to rule upon the question of order as to the right of the gentleman to mention my name in the connection in which it has been mentioned by him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas violated the rules of the House in using the language read by the Clerk?

Mr. REED, of Maine. That the gentleman was out of order in making a personal allusion to me in the course of his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not regard the language of the gentleman from Texas as a transgression of the rules of the House in the connection in which it was used.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed.

Mr. CASSIDY. In order?

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Texas should be allowed to proceed, Mr. Speaker, but I think that the gentleman was out of order in naming the gentleman from Maine. I therefore move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by moving that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is proper.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Texas was unquestionably out of order in mentioning by name the gentleman from Maine; and although we are in the habit of doing it on the floor every day, when attention is called to it it is a practice that ought not to be indulged in.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have no resentments or animosities whatever in the matter; but I think the rule ought to be enforced with regard to members mentioning the names of other members on the floor of the House in debate.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague from Texas was perfectly in order in mentioning the name of the gentleman from Maine in the manner that he did. It will be remembered that a direct question was asked of my colleague, and in response to that question he named the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. COX, of New York. Under the rule the gentleman had no right to name a member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already passed upon the point of order, and the gentleman of course has the right to appeal if he sees proper.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair decides that the language of the gentleman from Texas was not out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such has been the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, in view of that decision, from which no appeal was made, I make the motion that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And the gentleman from New York supplements that by a motion that the gentleman be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say that I used the name of the gentleman from Maine in response to a question; and if that is the objection I cheerfully withdraw the personal reference to him.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have no objection beyond that.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have stated once that the motion which was offered this morning, and which has been disposed of, did not embrace the whole question. That was true as far as it went, but it did not embrace the whole case. The circumstances before the House and all that transpired in reference to it are facts in the knowledge of the House. All of the circumstances took place in view of the members of the House and to their personal knowledge, and yet it is proposed that there shall be an investigation by a committee to know what are the facts which are already in the knowledge of the House. What can we know that we do not now know after a committee shall act upon the subject? I warn Democrats of this side of the House that if they consent to this investigation they help to put the Speaker of this House in a false and disagreeable attitude in having done his duty in the mildest possible manner; and they undertake to apologize for what has been done, not to get new facts, but to get a report from the committee and involve another partisan discussion and waste of time upon this subject. More consumption of time, more waste of time, for it has been manifest to this House for days, for two weeks nearly, that the purpose was to defeat necessary legislation and appropriations by dilatory and filibustering motions.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas if there has been any more filibustering on this side, on this bill or on any other bill, than there has been on the other side on the Mexican pension bill, on the public-building bills, and other measures that could be named?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am discussing the question before the House and I do not propose to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to lead me into a general discussion. We are now within three weeks of the final adjournment. The appropriation bills, many of them, are not yet passed. It will require extraordinary expedition to pass them. The gentleman from New York does not need an answer from me; he does not need an answer from any other member, that this House has had its time willfully wasted by filibustering and dilatory motions.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not; but I propose to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point that the gentleman from Texas is not now speaking in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is not in order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems to me this is a very plain matter. It was complained by gentlemen on the other side of the House that the Journal was incorrect in the very small matter as to whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] was sitting or standing when the officer came the second time with the mace—a very small matter.

Mr. KEIFER. Let it be corrected then.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Ohio has had the floor and will allow me to proceed. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] rose and called that matter to the attention of this body; and the opinion of the House was that it was a matter of too small significance to be entertained, and it tabled the motion. That is the whole of it.

I think any gentleman must concede that there is nothing in this matter of correcting the Journal in this particular, unless, as has been suggested, it is preliminary to something else behind of which we are not advised.

Now, after the House has deliberately determined that this is a matter of no consequence at all, and I think every gentleman's judgment will lead him to that conclusion, the very moment it is suggested, after that has been deliberately done on a yea-and-nay vote, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] rises and wants to raise a committee to examine this great question. And they are to come back and make their report, and whatever further time of this House they are to occupy and whatever purposes they may have is then to be disclosed.

As has been suggested by the gentleman from Texas, we are approaching the end of the session. We have crowded upon us the consideration of many important matters, including appropriation bills, the delay of which may involve the country in an extra session of Congress. I do believe it is our duty now to close up this small matter and to go on with the business in which the country is so deeply interested.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] on the table, and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. The call for the previous question is not necessary.

Mr. REED, of Maine, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Chair has decided the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] was in order in the remarks he made, and it would seem unfair they should go unanswered, as they are easily answered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no power over that. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I appeal to the sense of fairness of the House——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] moves to appoint a committee of five members to decide on the correctness or incorrectness of the Journal in the particular indicated; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moves to lay that motion on the table.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 127, noes 17.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point as to a quorum is not made by any gentleman rising from his seat.

Mr. BOUTELLE, Mr. ANDERSON, and others rose, and made the point that a quorum had not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes gentlemen for the point that a quorum has not voted when they rise from their seats and make it. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. REAGAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 51 members voting therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to lay upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 32, not voting 136; as follows:

The Clerk read the names of members voting. The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion of Mr. KEIFER was laid on the table; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there be further objection to the Journal it will stand approved as read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Journal is approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2084) to amend chapter 464 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to provide for a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana;"

A bill (S. 2342) declaratory of the meaning of the act of July 12, 1866, entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax;" and

A bill (S. 2615) to authorize medals commemorative of the completion and dedication of the Washington Monument.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for the printing and distribution of additional copies of the treaties and communications transmitted to the Senate by the President in his message of January 23, 1885.

The message further announced that the Senate had adopted a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, authorizing and requesting the President to communicate to the governments of all nations in diplomatic relations with the United States the resolutions adopted by the international conference held at Washington in October, 1884, for the purpose of fixing a prime meridian and a universal day and to invite their accession to the same.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] will suspend for a moment until the Chair can make an announcement. The Chair announces the appointment of Mr. CLAY and Mr. KEIFER as tellers on the part of the House, provided for in the concurrent resolution of the two Houses on the subject of counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 327) providing for the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John H. Evins, late a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina; and

A bill (H. R. 5674) for the erection of a public building in the city of Tyler, in the State of Texas.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1339) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Pittsburgh, Pa.; and

A bill (H. R. 1013) for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.

DAVID'S ISLAND, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War for the construction of a sea-wall around David's Island, New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SAINT LOUIS RIVER AND BAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and examination of Saint Louis River and Bay, Wisconsin and Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

FORT POINT CHANNEL, BOSTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the Chief of Engineers of a survey and examination of Fort Point Channel, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of A. L. Rogers, without leaving certified copies thereof. Also the papers in the case of J. B. Hale, leaving certified copies thereof.

Mr. LANHAM, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers presented by him in the claim of V. F. Gorrissen; there having been no adverse report thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in obedience to the constitutional requirement as to the counting of the electoral vote, in accordance with the Revised Statutes fixing to-morrow as the day on which those votes shall be counted, as by concurrent resolution of the two Houses the time for the count has been fixed at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and as it will be inconvenient for this House to meet at that hour and more convenient to meet at an earlier hour, I move that the session of the House to-morrow commence at 11 o'clock. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is a privileged motion not connected altogether with the rule, because the fixing of the hour of the meeting of the House has generally been referred to another committee than the one on the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], for the reasons he has stated, moves that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS. I move that hereafter the hour of meeting of the House be 11 o'clock every morning.

Mr. RANDALL. To that I will urge no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I think we had better not undertake to make a change permanently now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is made in order that the House may to-morrow, in the exercise of its power and in obedience to the requirements of the Constitution and law, discharge a special duty.

Mr. RANDALL. That is my object.

Mr. KEIFER. To that there certainly should be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As amended by the motion of the gentleman from Texas. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on his proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not in order to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would hold an amendment in order if any gentleman insists upon such a motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say in this connection that the members of the Committee on Rules have consulted—perhaps informally—and I think I may say it is the intention of the committee to introduce a proposition that on and after Monday next the House shall meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me suggest that the Committee on Appropriations must have considerable time this week to prepare its bills, and the members of that committee cannot be here as early as 11 o'clock every day.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the fact that it is the intention of the Committee on Rules to report a proposition that on and after Monday next for the remainder of the session the hour of meeting shall be 11 o'clock, I would prefer that the gentleman from Texas withdraw his motion.

Mr. MILLS. I do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and others called for the regular order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, on some day last week, I think it was Friday, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] made some remarks which I thought reflected upon me. I replied in terms which I thought just, under my understanding of his meaning and purpose. Personal explanations have been made in person between the gentleman and myself, and I am satisfied he intended nothing offensive or unkind to me. Feeling free therefore to do so, I take great pleasure in withdrawing all of my remarks which were offensive to him, and to express my regret that under any misapprehension I should have said anything which was unkind or offensive to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that upon the occasion to which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] has referred I had no purpose of making an attack or reflection upon him. Whatever language I used upon that occasion was not used with that intent, but to emphasize the position I occupied upon the question that I was discussing. I have known the gentleman from Louisiana since he has been a member of the House, and in all our intercourse I have found he always has been earnest in defending the rights of his constituents, and at the same time, as I believe, has intended to be just. On the occasion therefore to which he has referred I have no doubt he labored under a misapprehension.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now "let us have peace" and the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PHELPS) rises, as the Chair understands, to present a privileged report.

CHARLES A. VAN BOKKELEN.

Mr. PHELPS. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back with a recommendation that it be adopted the resolution of inquiry which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all the correspondence and other papers in the hands of the Government relating to the case of Charles A. Van Bokkelen, a citizen of the United States, imprisoned for a year past, as alleged, at Port au Prince, Hayti.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order now for one hour is the calling up, under the special rule, of bills, resolutions, &c., for consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to inquire whether it is not in order to move to dispense with this proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that we may dispense with this proceeding in order to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Several members objected.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of a joint resolution coming up in this hour as unfinished business, having been called up on last Saturday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 4) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution was read during the last hour devoted to this business and upon the conclusion of the reading the hour expired.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House I will ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report [to accompany H. Res. 293]:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 293) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, respectfully report:

That they have examined into the facts of the case as exhibited in the different laws passed, and the reports of the Quartermaster-General, and previous reports of committees upon this subject.

By the act of February 27, 1875, "to provide for settlement with certain railway companies," the Secretary of War and Attorney-General were authorized and empowered jointly to adjust and settle the claims of the United States against the Mobile and Ohio and other railway companies named therein for property purchased by them of the United States in the years 1865 and 1866. The Secretary of War reported to the Senate (Ex. Doc. 57, Forty-fourth Congress, first session) that under the provisions of that act an abatement of 25 per cent. was found equitable and just in the valuation of the property charged, and that he made that deduction and settled with certain of the roads on that basis in accordance with the provisions of the law. He reported further that he had been unable to make any settlement of the account with the Mobile and Ohio Railway Company for the reason that a settlement on the basis determined on as equitable and just, and on which settlement had been made with the other companies, would bring the Government in debt to the company, and that no means had been provided in the act cited for paying any balance in favor of the company.

In the annual report of the Quartermaster-General, made to the last session of Congress, attention is called to the condition of the accounts of the Mobile and Ohio Railway Company, and legislation is recommended for their settlement on an equitable basis.

In the report of Colonel Chandler, he says:

"Three acts of Congress have passed, under which compromises have been effected and the accounts closed. * * * But it was found not possible to close the account of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, because, on an application of the principle considered equitable, a cash payment from the United States to the railroad company was necessary, as the railroad had already paid over $500,000 on its debt, and it was considered that the law did not justify a settlement which would bring the Government in debt. In this case, it is suggested that Congress be asked to have some equitable law to close the long-standing account."

The committee believe that the law intended that settlement should be made with each company on the same basis. The fact that settlement on the basis adopted requires the return to the Mobile and Ohio Railway Company of money overpaid by it should not be taken advantage of by the Government from any failure in the law to provide for it.

This resolution is to direct the settlement to be carried out with the Mobile and Ohio Railway Company.

We report the resolution back and recommend its passage.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary for me to proceed at any length for the purpose of re-enforcing the report of the Judiciary Committee. However, it will be proper for me to inform the House that this bill at former sessions passed both Houses of Congress, but at no time has passed both Houses at the same session.

The act of 1875 provided for the settlement of the accounts of a number of railway companies named in the act. The Mobile and Ohio Railway Company was one of those so named. The settlement with the other companies brought them in debt to the Government, but the auditing officers found that an adjustment of accounts between the Government and the Mobile and Ohio Railway Company would bring the Government in debt to that company, and the act of 1875 having made no appropriation, it was impossible to make the adjustment of accounts which the act contemplated.

Under these circumstances the Judiciary Committees of both Houses have in a number of instances recommended the passage of a law which should permit the adjustment of this account. The Judiciary Committee now recommend that the joint resolution which has passed the Senate shall receive the approval of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have in my hand the report made by the Judiciary Committee, but it is not very full, and I hope the gentleman from New York will state how much this railway corporation owed the Government and how much was paid before the act of 1875 was passed.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I state in answer to the gentleman from Indiana that there is no evidence from which the committee could obtain information as to what balance would be found on an adjustment of these accounts. The railway company previous to the passage of the act had purchased $500,000 worth of rolling-stock from the Government and had paid therefor the sum of $440,000. The basis of adjustment between the Government and other railway companies named in the act if applied to the transaction with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company would bring the Government somewhat in debt. There has never been any ascertainment whatever, for it appears when the officers charged with the duty of auditing the accounts found what was likely to be the result they stopped further proceedings and made no ascertainment whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it occurs to me that the Judiciary Committee ought to have ascertained the amount of the original indebtedness and the amount that would have remained after deduction of 25 per cent. I concede it is quite clear from the report and my recollection of the transaction that this corporation should have been credited with 25 per cent. According to the views expressed by the Quartermaster the amount of deduction contemplated by the act of 1875 should not exceed 25 per cent. The Quartermaster seemed to think 25 per cent. deduction from the original price of the property sold to the corporation was reasonable.

But the statement simply comes to us as to the payment by this company of over $500,000, as shown here by the report; while there is no statement as to the original indebtedness of the corporation nor are we informed as to the amount involved in this measure. That information ought to have been given to the House in some shape.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. In further reply to the gentleman from Indiana I will state that if it had been possible for the Judiciary Committee to ascertain the amount properly payable to the Ohio and Mobile Railway Company there would have been no necessity at all for the passage of this joint resolution. The joint resolution is passed for the purpose of having an adjustment of this account on the spot—in the place where the railroad is located and where the evidence exists. There is no evidence before the Judiciary Committee on which it could audit the account.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am anxious to have this resolution again read if it can be done in the time allowed in opposition.

The joint resolution was again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the effects of this measure are so briefly stated in the report——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate under the rule has expired.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Objection was made by ten members, whereupon the joint resolution was withdrawn.

SAC AND FOX INDIAN RESERVATION IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That with the consent of the majority of the chiefs, headmen, and male adults of the Sac and Fox (of the Missouri) tribe of Indians, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be surveyed, if necessary, and sold the remainder of the reservation of the Iowa Indians, lying in the States of Nebraska and Kansas. The said lands shall be appraised, in tracts of forty acres each, by three competent commissioners, one of whom shall be selected by the Sac and Fox tribe of Indians and the other two shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That after the survey and appraisement of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and hereby is, authorized to offer the same, through the United States public land office at Beatrice, Nebr., at public sale, to the highest bidder. In cases where improvements have been made by any Indian or for the United States upon such lands, such improvements shall be separately appraised: Provided, That no portion of such land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case for less than $8 per acre, and to none except such as purchase the same for actual occupation and settlement, and who have made and subscribed on oath, before the register of said land office, and filed the same with said officer of the land office at Beatrice, Nebr., that it is his good faith and intention to settle upon and occupy the land which he seeks to purchase, and improve the same for a home; and, except in case of the death of the purchaser, unless said party shall have executed his declared intention by making improvements and being in actual occupation of said land, by actual residence thereon, at the time for making the second payment, he shall forfeit the payment already made, and the land shall be subject to resale as hereinafter provided. Each purchaser of said lands at such sale shall be entitled to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land, and no more, except in cases where a tract contains a fractional excess over one hundred and sixty acres. If the excess is less than forty acres, is contiguous, and results from inability in the survey to make township and section lines conform to the boundary lines of the reservation, and no other objection exists, the purchase of such excess shall be allowed. Such purchaser shall pay one-fourth of the purchase-price at the time said land is bid off, one-fourth in one year, one-fourth in two years, and one-fourth in three years, with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; and where there are improvements upon the lands purchased which shall have been separately appraised, the purchaser shall pay the appraised value of such improvements at the time of purchase, in addition to the amounts hereinbefore required to be paid. No patents shall issue until all payments shall have been made; and on the failure of any purchaser to make payment as required within ninety days he shall forfeit the lands purchased, and the same shall be subject to entry and sale, at the appraised value thereof, or shall be again offered at public sale, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine.

SEC. 3. That if any member of said Iowa tribe of Indians residing at the date of the passage of this act upon any of the lands authorized to be sold by the second section of this act, and who has improvements thereon, shall elect to remain on the lands occupied by him, such lands shall be withheld from sale as provided for herein; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a certificate to issue to the person so electing as follows: If he be the head of a family, to one hundred and sixty acres of land, and if a single man, eighty acres of land, the land so selected to include his improvements, and to be accepted in full satisfaction of his interest in and to the said reservation, and of the moneys or fund realized from the sale thereof. The certificate provided for herein shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus certified, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, or in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State in which said land is situated, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever; and if any conveyance shall be made of the lands thus allotted, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void; and such lands during such time shall not be subject to taxation, alienation, or forced sale, under execution or otherwise.

SEC. 4. That the proceeds of the sale of any improvements belonging to individual Indians shall be paid to the Indians to whom such improvements belonged. The proceeds of the sale of any improvements belonging to the United States shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States; and the proceeds of the sale of said lands, first deducting therefrom the cost of the survey, appraisement, and sale, and the expense of removing the Indians as hereinafter provided, shall be placed to the credit of said Sac and Fox Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians expressed in open council, secure other reservation lands upon which to locate said Indians, cause their removal thereto, and expend such sum as may be necessary for their comfort and advancement in civilization.

SEC. 6. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause a patent to be issued to the Sac and Fox (of the Missouri) tribe of Indians for the reservation that may be selected for them under the provisions of the preceding section.

SEC. 7. That the patent authorized by the preceding section to be issued to said Iowa tribe of Indians shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land therein described in trust for the sole use and benefit of said Sac and Fox tribe of Indians.

SEC. 8. That whenever the Indians who may be properly residing upon the said reservation referred to in the last preceding sections shall desire allotments of lands in severalty, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments to be made to such Indians in quantity as follows:

To each head of a family, one hundred and sixty acres.

To each single person over the age of 21 years, eighty acres.

SEC. 9. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in the preceding section by the Secretary of the Interior, the President shall cause certificates to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which certificates shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the fee of the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or in case of his decease, of his heirs, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to the said Indian, or his heirs, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever; and if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians expressed in open council, as provided in section 1, cause the removal of that portion of the Sac and Fox tribes residing upon said Sac and Fox reservation in Nebraska and Kansas to the reservation that may be secured for them, and expend such sum as may be rendered necessary by such removal, and for the comfort and advancement in civilization of said Indians; and the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of such expenses and for the expenses of the survey, appraisement, and sale of said Sac and Fox land; and the amount so expended shall be reimbursed to the United States out of the first proceeds of the sales of said lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS in the chair). Is there objection to taking up this bill for consideration?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the report be read, or let us have an explanation of it.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that after having stated this case to the members on the floor there will be no objection to this bill.

This is one of the most carefully prepared bills that has ever been brought before this House; and I desire to state at the outset that the bill was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and concerns a reservation lying in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, consisting of 8,014 acres, no more.

It is provided in the bill that the lands shall not be sold for less than $3 per acre, and that they shall be sold to the highest bidder. Provision is also made that actual settlers are to have these lands in quantities not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

There are residing on this reservation at the present time seventy-five Indians only, the balance of the tribe being on a reservation in the Indian Territory, that has been already set aside for their use by executive orders. There are two or three amendments only for the purpose of correcting clerical errors and names of tribes that I desire to offer as the bill progresses. If there is any gentleman on this floor who desires any other information on the bill I shall cheerfully give him an explanation, for I understand all about this reservation.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman from Nebraska what is to be done with the Indians now on the reservation?

Mr. WEAVER. It is provided in the bill that they are to be placed on the reservation where a large portion of the tribe has already been located in the Indian Territory.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Are these Indians willing to relinquish the reservation and go with the rest of the tribe?

Mr. WEAVER. They have applied for the passage of the bill, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended it. There is no reason in the world why it should not pass.

Mr. RANDALL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they have asked for this themselves?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. That fact ought to be set forth in the report. The report has not yet been read.

Mr. WEAVER. I will state further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Indians are amply protected——

Mr. RANDALL. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. WEAVER. I was going to state that it is further provided in the bill that the lands can not be sold until the Indians make further application.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Where is the money to go which is to be derived from the sale of these lands?

Mr. WEAVER. Into the Treasury, and the Indians get the benefit of it as well as of the interest on it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Indians are to be benefited, then, by this change?

Mr. PERKINS. I will answer the gentleman and say yes; and it is also provided that the lands are to be sold only to the highest bidder, the minimum price being fixed at $3.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) is as follows:

The accompanying bill provides for the sale of the Indian reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians, lying in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and for the removal of the Indians to such reservation as may be secured for them, with their consent, by the Secretary of the Interior.

The lands are valuable, and are located in Brown County, Kansas, and Richardson County, Nebraska, in a fine agricultural section, and are surrounded by finely cultivated farms, and by churches, schools, and thrift and prosperity, and in consequence of which will bring a large sum for their occupants. There are only 8,014 acres of the land, and in its present condition it yields but little to its occupants, and contributes but little to their advancement, comfort, or support, can not be taxed, alienated, or disposed of, and it does not in any way contribute to the growth, development, or material prosperity of the communities of which it constitutes an integral part. There are about seventy-five of these Sac and Fox Indians, the most or nearly all of whom are residing on this reservation. These lands are situated the same as the Iowa Indian lands in Kansas and Nebraska, the condition of which your committee has heretofore reported to the House, recommending their sale substantially as provided for by the provisions of this bill.

Your committee are advised that it is the wish of many of the Sac and Fox Indians that this reservation should be sold, and that the proceeds may be used in the manner provided for in this bill; but if in this your committee are mistaken, the bill is so drawn that nothing can be done under it without the consent of the chiefs, headmen, and male adults of the tribe, and no harm would result from the passage of this bill. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians, expressed in open council, secure other lands for them upon which to locate, and cause the removal of the Indian tribe, and expend such sum as may be necessary for their comfort and advancement in civilization in so doing.

These Indians wear the American dress, speak the English language, and are quite well qualified for the duties of citizenship and to care for their own, and many of them desire to go to the Indian Territory, where they think the conditions are more congenial and the opportunities for development and improvement better than upon their present reservation. And yet the bill is so framed that if they should find lands that could be obtained for them where the conditions would be more desirable than the Indian Territory, such lands could be procured for them by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of a reservation.

The land now occupied by them is but little cultivated and developed, and has become so valuable in consequence of the development of the surrounding country that, in the judgment of your committee, the proceeds realized from its sale would do very much toward making the Indians comfortable where cheap lands could be obtained for them, and would give them a fund for educational purposes that could be used for their good.

The bill provides that the land shall be appraised by three disinterested appraisers, and shall be sold at not less than the appraised value, and in no event at less than $3 per acre. It also provides that such Indians as have improvements on the lands shall be permitted to retain them if they so desire, and shall have certificates of allotment issued to them by the Secretary of the Interior for the land upon which the improvements are situated, as follows: If the head of a family, to one hundred and sixty acres; if a single man, to eighty acres. The conditions of certificates, and the circumstances under which they may issue, are suggested in the bill as reported by your committee, and it has been prepared with such care as to do justice to the Indians as well as to the purchasers of their lands, and it retains nearly all the important provisions of the original bill.

The bill has also been prepared so as to give the lands to actual settlers who should desire them for purposes of cultivation and for a home, and to prevent them from falling into the hands of speculators and those who would hold them, at the expense of the communities, for years as a speculative investment, and, in the judgment of your committee, it is better for the Indians, as well as better for the communities in which the lands are situated, that the land should be disposed of as provided in the bill; and hence your committee report it to the House, recommending its favorable consideration and passage, as a substitute for House bill 5350.

During the reading of the report the hammer fell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in support of the bill has been exhausted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I take the floor in opposition and ask for the completion of the reading of the report in my time.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report as above.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed under the rules for debate on this bill is exhausted. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill to make the rate of interest on page 3, line 34 of the bill, 6 per cent. instead of 5 per cent.

Mr. WEAVER. I agree to that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the portion of the bill, as I understand, that provides for the rate of interest on the purchase-money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that amendment being made.

Mr. WEAVER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, section 1, strike out the words "Iowa Indians" and insert the words "Sac and Fox Indians."

In line 4, section 2, insert after the word "Beatrice" the words "or Lincoln."

In line 14, section 2, insert after the word "Beatrice" the words "or Lincoln."

In line 15, section 2, strike out the word "and" between the words "faith" and "intention."

In line 41, section 2, after the word "required" strike out the words "within ninety days" and insert "by this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEAVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF CHESTER ASHLEY

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call up for consideration from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 1779) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley, and I desire to amend it by substituting a Senate bill having the same title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman call up the House bill from the Private Calendar or the Senate bill from the Speaker's table? He can do either under the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will call up the Senate bill from the Speaker's table, the bill (S. 591) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Chester Ashley, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,100, in full for rent of building in the city of Little Rock, Ark., for the use of the Army, from July, 1865, to the 31st of March, 1866.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir.

The report (by Mr. FERRELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1779) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley, having considered the same, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report of the Committee on Claims, first session Forty-eighth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

"[Senate Report No. 582, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 591) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley, have considered the same, and report as follows:

"Chester Ashley was the owner of a house in Little Rock, Ark., which was occupied as offices for headquarters of the Department of Arkansas from July 7, 1865, to March 31, 1866. On May 10, 1866, Henry Noble, colonel and assistant quartermaster, issued to said Ashley a voucher for $1,100 for the rent of said house, being at the rate of $125 a month during its occupancy by the United States forces. The voucher was presented to the accounting officers by Ashley's administrator, and the claim was rejected, the act of Congress of February 21, 1867, prohibiting the settlement of claims for the use and occupation of real estate in the insurrectionary States.

"It has been the uniform policy of this committee to recommend the payment of claims for rent of buildings in the insurrectionary States where an agreement was made for its payment by proper authority. This claim evidently comes within this rule, and the committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I shall not make any extended remarks on this bill unless some questions are asked. This is a regular case; it has been approved by a committee of the Senate and passed the Senate, and it has been approved by the very painstaking Committee on War Claims of the House. I am ready to answer any questions.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will explain a little further than the report seems to explain—first, why this rental was not paid by the quartermaster or through the Quartermaster's Department in the regular way.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The report shows that.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will explain that if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Very good. But I desire to ask two questions: First, was this contract made between the quartermaster or assistant quartermaster there and the owner of the property?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It was, as the report shows.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And had the quartermaster the right to make that agreement?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. He had, as the committee believes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And why, on that state of facts, was not the rental paid at the time by the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Whatever may have been the reason, the Senate committee and our committee felt it was unjust that this claim should not be paid.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to the fact that in 1867, the early part of the year 1867, after claims of this kind had accrued, there was a statute passed by Congress forbidding their payment. I had occasion, the gentleman will permit me to state further, to investigate that question recently; and even where there had been a contract regularly entered into——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As in this case.

Mr. McMILLIN. As in this case, the officers of the Government were not permitted to pay by reason of that retroactive statute.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I can understand that; but that does not explain why it was not paid in the year in which the property was used or in the next year; why it was not paid at the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. STORM. It was because of the law preventing the payment of claims at that time, the renting of the property having taken place in an insurrectionary State.

Mr. MILLS. There were cases of that kind all through the South.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if it is not true that a contract was made by the Army officer for this property, and if the Government did not use the same and have never paid for it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There is no doubt about that. That is perfectly plain; both committees state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I had no doubt about it myself; I wanted the gentleman to state that fact.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But still my question is not answered: Why this was not paid through the Quartermaster's Department at the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I suppose the chairman of the Committee on War Claims can inform me.

Mr. GEDDES. This fact plainly appears from evidence submitted to the committee. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will observe the claim was presented by the administrator shortly after the close of the occupancy of the premises. It sufficiently appears that it was on account of the sickness of the party and his subsequent death that it was not presented at an earlier date, and that only the short time of one year intervened between the time of occupancy and the time the claim was presented.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is sufficient explanation there. Now, let me ask one question further. Was this agreement or contract for the rent approved by the Quartermaster-General?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. It was.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It has had the approval of the Quartermaster-General?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Oh, yes; the report shows that.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, AUGUSTA, ME.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I call up Senate bill 235, and ask its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Augusta, in the State of Maine, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, internal-revenue office, pension office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $150,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Maine shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. MILLIKEN) was read, as follows:

That Augusta is the capital of the State, with a population of 8,666, showing a small increase during the last decade. It is situated on the Kennebec River, in the center of population in the State, has a fine and extensive water-power, has large industries in the manufacture of cotton, lumber, boots, and shoes, &c., and has good railroad facilities, and is surrounded by thrifty and growing towns and cities within a radius of twenty miles.

The post-office business of Augusta for the year ending June 30, 1883, was as follows, namely:

Cash receipts of office	$83,878 13
Stamped third-class matter with stamps not purchased at the Augusta office	48,051 09
Receipts from money-orders issued	37,086 02
Receipts from money-order drafts	3,650 00
Receipts for money-orders deposited by postmasters	183,571 00
Amount of money-orders paid	139,288 95
Amount of money-order money deposited with Postmaster Goddard, at Portland	84,179 00
Amount deposited with assistant treasurer at Boston, Mass.	72,480 30
Total postal business of the office	652,184 49
Total number of money-orders issued during the year	2,467
The number of money-orders paid during the year	21,936
Total number of sacks of newspapers sent from the office during the year	47,378
Total number of circulars sent	5,709,180
Total number of pieces of mail matter handled by letter-carriers	1,332,663
Total number of pieces of mail matter handled during the year	18,173,928

In the amount of second-class mail matter for the year ending June 30, 1882, Augusta ranked as the seventh post-office in the United States, New York city being first; Chicago, second; Boston, third; Philadelphia, fourth; Saint Louis, fifth; Cincinnati, sixth; Augusta, seventh. Augusta's post-office receipts show a large increase each year since 1879, when they were $51,440, and are likely to increase in future, for they are in great part due to large publishing houses located here, which do a business which extends all over the globe, and has been increasing for more than a decade. They have extensive permanent buildings and the very best class of printing machinery, and, together with the cotton and lumber industries here, have a continually growing business.

We also find that this vast mail is handled in two separate buildings, more than three hundred feet apart, which is both inconvenient and unsafe, as these buildings have no fire-proof vaults, and is very expensive to the Government.

For these unsafe and inconvenient buildings the Government pays a rental of $3,300 per year; and though they are the best that can be had, they afford but poor returns in the accommodations which they give for the rental paid. It is estimated by Mr. Manley, the present postmaster, that $3,000 per year might be saved to the Government in rental and by reason of the superior facilities which a properly constructed building would afford.

There is a United States pension office at Augusta, which distributes annually $2,500,000 on account of pensions. The internal-revenue office is also located at Augusta, and at least one term of the United States court is required to be held there on account of its central location in the State and the commercial interests which center here. Augusta is at the head of navigation on the Kennebec River, and in the midst of a large and rapidly increasing manufacturing and commercial community.

A bill similar to the one accompanying this report passed the Senate of the Forty-seventh Congress, and was favorably reported to the House, but on account of the illness of Mr. LINDSEY, who had charge of it, was not called up on the Calendar.

Your committee would therefore recommend that bill H. R. 702, accompanying this report do pass, limiting the cost of said building and grounds, when completed, to the sum of $150,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] whether he will not consent that the bill may be amended by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 11 of the engrossed bill, the following:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $150,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I accept that amendment. I would have placed it in the bill originally if it had been suggested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I was about to propose an amendment; but the one suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and accepted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] is substantially the same, so I will not offer mine.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and accordingly it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DR. THOMAS J. JONES.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of Dr. Thomas J. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Dr. Thomas J. Jones, of Warren County, Kentucky, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, for medical services rendered the Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers during the months of October, November, and December, 1861.

The report (by Mr. FERRALL) was read, as follows:

This claim is for medical services alleged to have been rendered the Eleventh Regiment of Kentucky Infantry Volunteers during the months of October, November, and December, 1861, under appointment of Col. P. B. Hawkins, commanding the said regiment.

Colonel Hawkins in his affidavit states "that he appointed the said Dr. Thomas J. Jones pro tempore as the attending physician on the sick of his regiment, there being no regular surgeon appointed; that he knows the said Dr. Thomas J. Jones attended to the sick of his regiment most faithfully, day and night, for over three months."

Under sections 1304, 1305, and 1306 of the Army Regulations of 1863, pages 313, 314, and 518, commanding officers of United States troops had authority, in proper cases, to employ private physicians.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, report herewith a substitute for the bill, appropriating the sum of $300, and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALSELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 275) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour allotted to this business has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour is dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the feature of this bill which seems to command most attention and which is of the most practical importance is that in relation to the compensation of railroads for transportation of the mails. Undoubtedly the committee is impressed with the importance of some reform in regard to that matter of expenditure. Under the act of 1873 the compensation paid to railroad corporations for transportation of the mails was very materially increased. The limitations which were provided prior to that time were removed and a very material and striking increase of compensation to railroads provided for, while since that time the expenditure of the Government for service on the star routes and by steamboats has been largely reduced. The cost of transporting the mails by railroad has steadily increased notwithstanding the reduction since of the 15 per cent. in 1877 and 1878, and at a rate that ought to arrest the attention of Congress.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, a statement showing this extraordinary increase. The entire expenditure for transporting the mails by railroads, including the postal-car service in 1881, was $11,031,000. The estimates for 1886, after a lapse of only five years, for the same service was $17,559,205; an increase of $6,528,205.

Mr. HORR. That includes the Union Pacific, too.

Mr. HOLMAN. It includes the estimates as they stood both in 1881 and in 1886.

Mr. MONEY rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Give me a moment to state the figures. Indicating the increase in five years of $6,528,205, an increase greatly beyond any just and fair increase which would arise from an increase in the postal service.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana state what is the increase of mileage of railroads within that period, and also the bulk of mails carried over them?

Mr. HOLMAN. I sought to state, if my friend will allow me, a moment ago that it was manifest that the increase was far beyond the increase of the postal service and far beyond the increased mileage of the railroad system.

Mr. HORR. Mathematics will not show that, Judge.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will still be that five years ago $11,031,000 covered the cost of the railroad postal service, which now reaches over $17,500,000. I think a mere statement of the figures is a sufficient indication that the basis of the adjustment of this service is wrong.

Mr. HORR. But in that statement there are included $1,100,000 of the Union Pacific expenses, which were not in the estimates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend largely overstate the amount? I think the mail service on the Union Pacific roads could not reach that sum. But if I understand the estimates, in 1881 they were made upon the same basis as in 1886; and I think my friend will discover such to be the fact. I think the estimates in 1881 as in 1886 were intended to cover the Union Pacific system as well as the other roads. If the figures are correct, and I think they are correct as far as the estimates are concerned, then it is manifest that the expenditures in this branch of the public service are growing far too rapidly, and in some manner this increase ought to be arrested.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will permit me to proceed without interruption, since I have but seventeen minutes. The gentleman and others, unfortunately for me, occupied the greater part of the time allowed for debate, and I think occupied it well, so that I have but seventeen minutes at my disposal, and I trust I may be permitted to use the time without interruption.

Upon the basis of the increase, to which I have called attention of the committee, from 1881 to 1886 the expenditure for the next fiscal year, 1887, will have reached over $20,000,000; that is to say, for the year 1886 the increase will be $3,184,205 over the year 1885, and in 1887 will exceed $20,000,000. This is startling increase in a single year!

Mr. HORR. But that all comes from extra weight of mails carried by the roads. It can not be derived from any other source, for they can not get it from any other source.

Mr. HOLMAN. The increase in 1886 over 1885 results from weighing, and that is the very thing that ought to arrest the attention of Congress. The increase from one year to another, from 1885 to 1886, is the enormous sum of $3,184,205, if I understand these estimates.

Mr. MONEY. Will my friend allow me to call his attention to the fact that the rate of increase in the receipts, which is the measure of mail transportation, was for the years to which he refers as follows: The rate of increase in the receipts for 1880 over 1879 was 10.8 per cent.; for 1881 over 1880 it was 10.4 per cent.; for 1882 over 1881 it was 13.8 per cent.; and for 1883 over 1882 it was 8.6 per cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to yield to my friend from Mississippi and permit him to call attention to the figures; but the gentleman has had his time, and I am satisfied he could hardly expect me to consume my time by allowing him to call up figures, when I seek to present the same facts in a different form.

Mr. MONEY. I simply called the gentleman's attention to that in order that he might consider them in connection with his argument.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the ratio of increase is not so important or definite as the actual increase in expenditure. It has been proposed, if possible, to adopt some system that would cure the extraordinary result of our weighing system recognized by the act of 1873 and the preceding years.

Congress in 1883 provided by law for a commission of experts to examine and report to Congress what system could be adopted that would fix the railroad transportation of the mails at just and reasonable rates, and reform the injustice resulting from this system of regulating the compensation by weight of the mails. That commission has made an exhaustive report on this subject, and, since attention has been called to that report of the commission during the discussion of this question, I ask the Clerk to read the passage marked, for the purpose of showing the final conclusion reached by them in reference to this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

This careful analysis of the returns of all the railroads in the United States points to the conclusion that as the average yield per car mile is about 26 cents, if the roads receive 5 mills per linear foot per mile run, or at the rate of 25 cents for a 50-foot car, at the ordinary speed of twenty miles per hour, they will be getting a rate corresponding closely to the returns from all passenger traffic combined, which on the face of it would seem to be both just and reasonable, and the commission feel constrained to make this further qualification, that the regularity and frequency of the service, the freedom of railroads from liability, the certainty of the compensation, the exemption of the carrier from those expenses ordinarily attending passenger traffic, all combine to strengthen the conviction in the minds of the commission that the rate herein recommended is both just and reasonable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under discussion during the last session of Congress we were then informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] who addressed the committee touching this question to-day that the plan proposed last session to reduce the compensation to railroads by a reduction of 5 per cent. was not a reasonable plan, and that the plan proposed by this commission was an intelligent and wise plan and would reduce the cost of the transportation of the mails over the railroads at least a million of dollars, if my memory is correct.

The commission claim that the plan proposed by them will reduce the cost a million dollars a year. That plan is embodied into this bill. This report proposes to pay the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails a sum substantially equal to what they would earn by the employment of the same space in the transportation of passengers. And yet they said substantially that that basis is not exactly a fair one to the Government; that there is no responsibility in the transportation of the mails, not so much even as in the transportation of freights. There is no responsibility; it is freight transported virtually at the risk of the Government, and the only liability incurred by the railroad corporation is simply that of seeing that the mails are properly and promptly delivered; that and nothing more; while the transportation of passengers is subject to great and important responsibilities.

Now, sir, the commission propose as the unit of the adjustment of compensation to railroads the payment of 5 mills per linear foot of car space occupied by the mails per mile for a speed of twenty miles per hour or less. It is said by my friend from Michigan that that basis will greatly exceed the present cost. And that impression had reached the subcommittee, of which he and myself are members and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is chairman having charge of this bill. Therefore the majority of that committee have reached the conclusion that the basis should be reduced 20 per cent., and that instead of paying 5 mills per linear foot of the car space occupied it shall be 4 mills. My friend from Michigan thinks that is too low.

Now, I have only this to say about it, the same that I was compelled to say nine years ago when this subject was first before the House and reported substantially in the same form in which it is now, except that then the limit of weight was not taken into account in fixing the amount of space to be occupied. That has been added as the result of the investigations of the commission. When the matter was then pending (I had charge of the bill) I was compelled to say to the Committee of the Whole, then considering the bill, it would be impossible to tell the exact effect of the measure until a practical test had been made; and I am compelled to say that is the conclusion I have reached now. I think the plan must be tested practically before the exact result can be determined. The railroad postal service is a vast and complicated one. There are so many roads, and the service varies so greatly in the wide range between the great trunk lines running many trains daily and the small roads doing but little service and running once a day, that no amount of calculation will disclose the exact results.

But the plan is strongly recommended. It is recommended by the superintendent of railway mail transportation, and by this commission it is recommended—a commission appointed under the authority of Congress—a commission of very competent gentlemen. And yet I am compelled to say for myself that I do not believe it can be stated with reasonable certainty what will be the cost until the effect of the proposition shall be determined by actual experience. But I regard it of the highest moment that the plan reported by the commission shall be tested as far safer and better than the law under which we are now acting.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Both the Post-Office committees of the House and of the Senate have also agreed to it.

Mr. REAGAN. Would it interfere with the gentleman from Indiana if I should ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to inquire of the gentleman for information whether the committee or subcommittee know what would be the cost of the railroad service of the trunk roads, for instance, under this method?

Mr. HOLMAN. We have all of us made more or less calculations as to the effect on particular routes in different parts of the country; on the plan as proposed and on the basis of 4 mills for every linear foot car space, I think it will be found there will be some material reduction on the basis of 4 mills. I think that is certain, and that there will be a material reduction even on the trunk lines below what is now paid. And I think I can safely answer the gentleman from Texas that at 4 mills there will be paid a good deal, perhaps a great deal, less than will be under the present law when the next weighing occurs, which will be in the coming spring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate on this bill allowed by order of the House has expired. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For compensation to postmasters, $12,300,000.

Mr. HORR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Strike out "$12,300,000" and insert "$13,000,000."

Mr. HORR. I offer this amendment simply for the purpose of avoiding a deficiency in the coming year. We appropriated for this service in 1885 $11,000,000. In 1884 we expended $11,283,830.87; that is, we expended in that year over $280,000 more than we appropriated in the bill of last session for the current year. Now the Department estimates that this year there will be a deficiency of $875,000; so that it will cost for this current year for that item $11,875,000.

The Department estimates that it will cost $13,000,000 to meet the expenditure next year. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that it makes no difference whatever whether we appropriate this money or not as far as the postmasters themselves are concerned. They retain their salaries out of the money collected, and consequently it is a simple matter of book-keeping. All I desire is to appropriate enough money to prevent a deficiency bill next year. And this amount is needed for that purpose. It does not affect the expenditure itself one mill, nor can it do so, because the compensation is fixed by law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The appropriation for the salaries of postmasters in this bill is an increase of $1,300,000 above the appropriation of last session. It is an increase of nearly $3,000,000 over the appropriation in 1883. The expenditures last year for this purpose up to the 30th of last June did not exceed $11,283,830. This year we have recommended an appropriation of over $1,000,000 more money than was expended last year for the salaries of postmasters. The subcommittee made careful inquiry as to the amount that would probably be needed to compensate postmasters, and it was my firm conviction that $12,000,000 would cover every necessary expenditure for that purpose; but the general committee, after thoroughly considering the question, in order to cover all possible danger of a deficiency, authorized an increase upon that sum of $300,000. It was the opinion of the members of the committee generally, as I understood, with perhaps the exception of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], that the appropriation of $12,300,000 would avoid the possibility of any deficiency whatever.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman say that, from a single man connected with the Department, he has ever had any estimate or statement that the amount in this bill is sufficient to meet the requirements of this branch of the service?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say this: That the estimate of the Department is purely speculative. The Department estimates that there will be a percentage of increase corresponding to that of some years past; but that is altogether a speculative estimate. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] to the fact that notwithstanding we appropriated last year $1,300,000 less than the appropriation in this bill, the Department has not yet sent to the Committee on Appropriations any request for a deficiency.

Mr. HORR. They do not have to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Wait until I get through. I know what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] is going to say. He is going to say that an inquiry was sent to the Department—perhaps by some individual—and that some of the officers of the Department have said that it is probable that there will be a deficiency of $700,000 or $800,000.

Mr. HORR. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, suppose there should be; still we appropriate here a half a million more than that possible deficiency and the deficiency of last year. If there should be a deficiency—and that is only a matter of speculation—of, say, $800,000, then it would only require for the current year, up to June next, $11,800,000. Now, in order to guard against the danger of a deficiency next year, we have added over $500,000 to that amount. I am quite convinced, Mr Chairman, that if the sum recommended in this bill be appropriated there is no danger of any deficiency.

Let me say further, that I think the increase in the aggregate amount needed for the salaries of postmasters will be much less in the future than it has been in the immediate past. The bulk of the increase last year resulted from the fact that we increased the salaries of postmasters, and the law was made retroactive so as to embrace arrears of salaries for the six months preceding. It was that unexpected retroactive feature of the bill that swelled the appropriations in 1884. But no such question will arise under the present bill. There are no arrears of salaries to be appropriated for, and I am convinced from the investigation I have made that with an appropriation of $12,300,000 we shall have a surplus to be returned into the Treasury rather than a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this paragraph has expired.

Mr. HORR. I move to strike out the last word. The speech which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has made is precisely the same speech made by him upon the Post-Office bill last year. I do not find fault with it because it is a repetition, for good things will bear repeating. [Laughter.] He stated at that time that the amount which we put into that bill would cover, in his judgment, more than the expenditures of the year for the compensation of postmasters. I tried then to get him to increase it $750,000, and told him I feared his estimates were made in a sort of general, hazy way, without any definite computations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yet, although we only appropriated $11,000,000 last year—$1,300,000 less than the appropriation in this bill—there has been no demand for a deficiency.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not time yet.

Mr. HORR. But notwithstanding the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] said that the amount in the bill would be sufficient, we are now told by the officer in charge of that branch that if the expenses continue for the next six months as they have been for the last six months there will be a deficiency of $875,000. I told the gentleman at the time that that deficiency would have to be made up, but he would not believe it, and now he comes here and claims the same thing again.

Mr. Chairman, I have an idea that these are the actual facts of the case. The officers up there in the Department have made their estimates carefully, upon mathematical bases, while my friend from Illinois has simply said: "I guess we can keep this bill down if we cut out six or seven or eight hundred thousand dollars; so let us cut it out, and let it go at that." It does not do any harm to the service in the end, Mr. Chairman; I do not care much about it, only I would like, if possible, to have a little business principle infused into this bill at this end of the Capitol. I am going to insist on that as far as I can, but if the House will not consent to it, then let the bill go over to the other end of the Capitol and let them do there as they did last year—insert the business principle into it for us, as they will do.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on pending amendments is exhausted. As the Chair understands, the formal amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman in charge of this bill asserts that no executive communication has been received by this House with reference to the supposed deficiency in compensation of postmasters, I wish to remind him that we are not within six months of the time when such a communication may, according to the usage, be expected. Postmasters are paid under a general statute, and they take from the revenues of their offices the compensation they are allowed under the law. The compensation of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes is regulated by the actual amount of business done in their office, so that they can determine to the very cent the compensation that they are allowed by law. The compensation of postmasters of the fourth class is determined by the amount of stamps canceled in their offices, so that they also know exactly the compensation they are to receive.

The gentleman refers to the appropriation for 1884. I hold in my hand the estimates of deficiencies for 1884, now before the gentleman's committee, and I find there the following: "Three hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars, amount retained by postmasters in excess of appropriations."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is to meet a deficiency in the appropriations of the last Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course. But never mind that. We can not have from the Department a statement of the deficiencies for the present fiscal year until the meeting of the next Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The appropriation for the year in which that deficiency of more than $300,000 occurred was only $9,250,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. I grant that. But I am calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that the estimate of deficiency for postmasters' salaries during the present fiscal year will not come to this House until the meeting of the next Congress. That is all I have to say on this point. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, of course the Committee of the Whole will do as they please about this matter——

Mr. HOLMAN. A single word before my friend from Illinois proceeds. It is conceded that no harm will be done if we make a mistake about this item.

Mr. BINGHAM. None whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. The subcommittee believe that the amount proposed in the bill is sufficient. If it is not sufficient, no injury can be done to this branch of the public service.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. HOLMAN. So I submit we ought not to spend time over this matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. I agree to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I merely wanted to supplement what my colleague on the committee has said by calling attention to the fact that we this year have raised this appropriation over $3,000,000 beyond the appropriation for 1884. Is it possible that the salaries of the postmasters of this country are growing so rapidly that it becomes necessary to increase this appropriation every two years to the extent of more than $3,000,000? If this be the fact, the time has come when we should see whether we can not reduce the salaries of postmasters.

Mr. MONEY. You can do it by decreasing the business. There is no other way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I do not ask a reduction of their salaries. I am confident, from what I know of the appropriations of the past few years, that this sum named in the bill, $12,300,000, will pay every dollar of the salary of every postmaster in the land. I have no fear whatever on that point. It was out of abundant caution that the subcommittee recommended the increase this year to $12,000,000; and it was still further out of abundant caution that the general committee added $300,000.

I see no reason whatever for an increase upon this item of the bill, except a wanton desire to swell these appropriations far beyond what may be needed for the public service.

Mr. HORR. What does the gentleman mean by "wanton" with reference to this matter? Will the amount of the appropriation affect the amount expended to the extent of one cent?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I admit it will not; but where is the honesty or good sense of appropriating vast sums of money where there is no need for it?

Mr. HORR. What can there be "wanton" in the appropriation if the amount of expenditure is fixed by law?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is a wanton disregard of a proper sense of economy to appropriate large sums of money for which there can be no need.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the making of this appropriation as proposed cause the salaries of the postmasters to cost any more?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all; and if the sum appropriated should not be quite large enough, as said by the gentleman from Indiana, no possible injury can result.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can anything be saved by cutting the appropriation down?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But we should not appropriate more than will be required.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HORR to strike out, in lines 25 and 26, "$12,300,000" and insert "$13,000,000," it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 40, noes 55.

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $5,100,000.

Mr. HORR. I move, in line 28, to strike out "one" and insert "three;" so it will read "$5,300,000." And I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say a word, Mr. Chairman, in reference to these Post-Office appropriations. Now, the appropriation for the current fiscal year is $4,900,000. There is in addition a deficiency estimate for $75,000 more, which has not yet been passed upon. For some months it has been impossible throughout the length and breadth of the country to get any allowance for clerk-hire for separating offices or for offices of the first and second class. The truth is, where the salary is less than $2,000 the postmaster pays his own office-rent, his own clerk-hire, and except where there are star routes or cross railroads, where he is required to distribute or separate the mails, and where occasionally a small allowance is made for separating—and there is within my own knowledge in my own section, and I understand it is so throughout the country generally—this class of postmasters have not only to pay their own clerk-hire, their own office-rent, for their own fuel and lights, but they have to draw on their own salaries—and it is equally true of fourth-class offices—to pay for the large amount of work which is thrown upon them.

I thought last year this appropriation was not sufficient. I still think so. For the coming year I believe the full estimate ought to be given, if you expect to have good service for the convenience of the people. I must say I am not as anxious about it this year as I was last year. [Laughter.]

You gentlemen are soon to take charge of these offices, or rather your party is soon to administer the affairs of the Post-Office Department as well as of the other Departments of the Government. Whatever party or Executive may administer them, in my judgment there should be sufficient money appropriated to carry on the service so as to give the people the amplest facilities. I do not think this bill recommends enough, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. Still I would be frank and say that if you gentlemen on the other side of the House do not want an increase, for one I am not going to push it on you. That is all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the committee will observe the fact that the increase for this service over the present year is $300,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, $200,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, $200,000; and gentlemen will see that this is a very material increase. Mr. Gresham, the late Postmaster-General, issued an order to the postmasters, as gentlemen will remember (and I hope gentlemen will not forget that fact), in which he admonished them that clerical force was not intended to supersede their active participation in the duties of their respective post-offices; that the postmaster was expected to render efficient service in the discharge of the duties of his office. I admit this had more direct reference to the postal-order system than to the general duties of post-offices; but it was a significant fact, and it is a fact which Congress should take notice of. The attention of postmasters was called to the fact they were to render a proper degree of service in connection with the post-offices over which they were placed. I believe, sir, with an increase of $200,000 a year you are making ample provision for that branch of the service. I am in favor of appropriating all that is necessary, and $200,000 increase is undoubtedly sufficient. Any amount above that would, in my judgment, be unnecessary and extravagant.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for the purpose of explanation. I want to know how it is that the allowance for clerk-hire for Birmingham, Ala., which has gross receipts——

Mr. HOLMAN. What page?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Page 681 of the Postmaster-General's report. I wish to know why it is that the office of Birmingham, Ala., is allowed but $1,652 for clerk-hire, while in the same State the office of Selma, which has receipts of only $600—over a thousand less than Birmingham—is allowed $2,223. Also, why the city of Vicksburg, Miss., which has $100 less of gross receipts than Birmingham, is allowed $3,000 for clerk-hire. I wish to know if there can be any explanation why such difference is made in these offices. You will find the same running through the whole report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is some explanation for this. Undoubtedly in some degree the distribution of the clerical force is arbitrary. The Postmaster-General assigns clerks to post-offices according to his own discretion. I should take it for granted that postmasters who are most persistent in asking assistance in the way of clerical force would be most likely to obtain it. There is another explanation to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, and that is this: Some of these offices are distributing offices for other points to a greater extent than others. In such cases there would be a larger amount of clerical service required in proportion to the amount of revenue received than in some other offices. There in some instances may be found the explanation of the difference he states. But the distribution of this fund is entirely under the control of the Postmaster-General, and he is necessarily besieged with applications for increase of clerical force, and favoritism undoubtedly prevails in the service, which accounts in a large degree for the difference in the clerical force of different offices.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have just this to say: that if it was clearly understood how this appropriation will be applied under the law and under the discretion of the Postmaster-General there should be no difficulty in voting for the amendment and the recommendation of the Department. There are almost six hundred first and second class post-offices, as well as 2,300 separating offices. This appropriation is disbursed and distributed among this number of offices. These offices return to the Government 60 per cent. of the postal revenues. There are 8,240 subordinates in the clerical force of the first and second class post-offices. This does not include the separating offices, where the average is about $240 to the 2,300 separating offices.

The appropriation for this year is in deficiency $75,000. As recommended by the committee your bill appropriates $200,000 in addition to the allowance for the present fiscal year. But we know to-day that the allowance for the present fiscal year is $75,000 in deficiency. Therefore for the next fiscal year, upon the information that we possess to-day, the bill appropriates but $125,000 additional.

That appropriation to this class of post-offices, which pay 60 per cent. of all the revenues and gross receipts from your service, will give to this vast body of offices but one hundred and fifty-six men at $800 a year compensation. It will not give an allowance to any of the separating offices, nor will it promote a single man in the service to-day, that numbers 8,240.

I want to say in this connection, representing a large city constituency as I do, that there are grave and serious apprehensions that the business interests of our community will be seriously hampered if a full and fair appropriation is not made for our postal facilities. Under the general statute to-day the Postmaster-General to all outlying sections of the country can locate post-offices; and again under the general statute the postmasters will receive their compensation. But to the districts that have a fixed post-office, like New York and Philadelphia, we must make and we must demand for our convenience appropriations under the general appropriation bill for clerk-hire and carrier force; and I further make the statement that the business of the Department will not be carried on under the meager increase of $125,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the current year gives the entire amount called for by the Department. Every dollar estimated for by the Postmaster-General was given by Congress for the current year; but it seems that the Postmaster-General—and I am willing to admit it—did not make quite as large an estimate as should have been made, as appears from the present condition of things in the Post-Office, and for that reason a deficiency of $75,000 is asked for.

Now, in order to avoid a deficiency for next year we have given an increase of $200,000, which will be $125,000 more than the appropriation that is made for the current year and the deficiency for this year which is asked for. But, as I have said, we gave all of the estimates for the current year——

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, does not the gentleman know that you cut down the estimates nearly $5,000,000?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield to the gentleman now for an interruption. I say all was given that was estimated for.

Now, this is an item of the bill that we can increase to any amount, and still the pressure and demand will come up for higher appropriations and a larger number of clerks. One reason in my judgment why General Gresham, who was a most excellent officer, asked for no more than he did was because he discovered that the clerical force was not properly distributed; that in some offices there were more clerks than there ought to be, and in some offices there were less than there ought to be in accordance with the amount appropriated. The report which the gentleman from Alabama has read confirms that conviction of the late Postmaster-General, for it is well known that in some States where the population is much less than in others they have received a large allotment for clerical force—twice as much as is given to others. I can give the House the reason for it and the authority for believing that there ought to be a readjustment or redistribution of the clerks in post-offices. My authority is the late Postmaster-General himself in his report at the last session of Congress. I read from page 11 of the report of the Postmaster-General last year upon this very question. What is his language? He says:

> Postmasters, backed as many of them are by influential friends, have in some cases been unreasonable in their demands for allowances, and it is not surprising that some of them have received more than their share of the appropriation, while others have received less.

My friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seems to feel considerable anxiety that we may not provide appropriations enough to employ all the clerks that will be needed under the incoming administration. I want to say here, sir, at the very threshold of the incoming Democratic administration, that I want to see it prove itself true to the first fundamental Democratic principle of economy; I want to see the incoming Democratic administration practice what we have been preaching under Republican administrations. [Applause.] I want to see the expenditures of the Government kept within reasonable bounds. But if I could be convinced that this appropriation is not large enough I would be perfectly willing to accede to the demand that is made.

Mr. BINGHAM. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I renew it. I confess I am surprised there has not been a very large reduction in the appropriations for this branch of the service; that there is not a reduction in salaries, and that the employés are not called upon to work more hours. I did expect the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] would present a bill here that would point directly in the direction of economy.

Now, if the next administration is to be economical, I, for one, am opposed to making appropriations so that they can turn a large surplus into the Treasury. I think that would be unwise, and it seems to me the gentleman from Illinois instead of having increased any of these appropriations should have decreased them.

We have been lectured here for the last eight years on the excessive appropriations for the Post-Office Department, and now I understand the gentleman from Illinois has brought in a bill here actually increasing the appropriations for the different branches of that service; and I have risen, sir, only for the purpose of expressing profound surprise that that should be the fact.

What does the great Democratic party intend to do? This is the first appropriation bill for this Department, the money voted by which is to be expended by the incoming administration; and here the country is presented with a bill which proposes to increase the amount. It does seem to me the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] have been somewhat derelict in their duty.

Mr. HORR. I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. I am very glad to hear my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] indorse the accuracy, ability, and integrity of Postmaster-General Gresham: because the estimates upon which this bill was drawn were made by that gentleman. In the bill the gentleman has presented here he has cut down the estimates of his ideal, and proposes to have an incoming administration run this Department for $3,000,000 less than this ideal of his says it can be run with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman from Michigan say that Postmaster-General Gresham prepared these estimates? He had been appointed judge before the estimates were prepared.

Mr. HORR. The estimates were made before Judge Gresham went out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I venture the assertion that Judge Gresham did not pass on these estimates.

Mr. HORR. Last year you cut down the estimates of the same Postmaster-General $4,000,000, and had it not been for the wisdom of another body that has to revise these bills our service would be to-day with a deficiency of over $4,000,000.

The gentleman from Illinois says he does this because he wants to keep good the word the Democrats have been giving to the people that they are to run things economically. Bless your soul, Brother TOWNSHEND, do not trouble yourself about that. [Laughter.] Nobody understood you intended that in earnest. But let me say to you right here, if you run these Post-Office matters as economically as the Republicans have done in the last four years you will get the encomiums of the people of this country. You can not carry the mails and do this work for any less money than it is being done for now; and, as I said yesterday, it will be a sorry day for this nation when the Post-Office bill of one year is smaller than the bill for the year preceding it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I agree with you.

Mr. HORR. It must be in the necessity of things larger.

Now, what I have offered here is to give a little money to help out the distributing offices that are growing up all over the United States. Wherever a railroad line is run, and star routes cross it, an increase of work arises, and it takes clerks to distribute that mail. Do you think the Democrats will distribute it without pay? [Laughter.] Will you get some Democrats to work at it for nothing? My impression is, Mr. Chairman, that if this work is to be done, and Democrats are going to do it, they will have to eat and drink like other men. So far as I know they are not visionary either on eating or drinking. [Laughter.] It is an actual business with them, and I propose simply to give money enough to keep this service in a respectable condition. But if you do not want it, all right; I am not going to worry over it.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The question was taken on Mr. HORR'S amendment to strike out $5,100,000 and insert $5,300,000; and there were—ayes 92, noes 31.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

After line 28 insert the following:

"And postmasters are authorized, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, to assign at any time any clerk or employé of their respective post-offices to duty in any branch thereof: Provided always, That any employé shall be paid from money-order funds for such time as he is engaged in money-order work."

Mr. MONEY. Postmaster-General Gresham made a ruling that no clerk or employé of the Post-Office paid in whole or in part from the allowance for postal funds should be employed in the money-order business, and issued an order (No. 12) to that effect.

The result is that a clerk who is paid to transact the money-order business can not be put at any other work whatever. The money-order business may not occupy him one-third of his time, yet under this ruling of the Postmaster-General (which is a proper construction of the law) the postmaster can not put the clerk at any other work. And, vice versa, a clerk engaged in ordinary postal business can not be detailed to assist in the money-order department even though he may have nothing else to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over informally for the present, so that my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] may offer this proposition later, after the matter has been examined.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection at all to that arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, this paragraph will be passed over for the present with the understanding that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] may offer his amendment at a subsequent time.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word dollars, in line 28, insert:

"Three million five hundred thousand dollars of which shall be paid to clerks in first-class offices, $900,000 to clerks in second-class offices, and $700,000 to clerks in third-class post-offices."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment that it proposes new legislation and increases expenditures.

Mr. AIKEN. The gentleman is mistaken; there is not a word of increase in the amendment. On the contrary, it looks directly to economy, and therefore it seems to me that it is not amenable to the point of order. I hold, sir, that it is legislating in the direction of economy to say exactly where and how the public money shall be spent, and not allow any officer of the Government to distribute it where he pleases, to the advantage of his friends and the disadvantage of other servants of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule upon the point of order.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not care about the point of order; but is it in order, Mr. Chairman, for me to say a few words on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not subject to the point of order, as it merely provides for the distribution of the money appropriated in the bill, and does not increase expenditure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why, sir, it increases the appropriation $300,000.

Mr. AIKEN. It does not increase it a dollar—not one dollar. It looks to the economical distribution of the money appropriated by the bill, and it is entirely germane to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the amendment does not increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let it be read again.

The Clerk again read the amendment as above printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. AIKEN. If the committee will allow me to explain my own amendment they will be at least edified.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have made the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. The proposition contained in this amendment does not reduce expenditures; it does not reduce the amount appropriated by the bill or by the present law. It simply provides for the mode of distributing a certain portion of the money appropriated in the bill, and that mode is contrary to the provisions of an existing statute. I will call the attention of the Chair to the present law, if it is important in this connection; but it can not be important, because under clause 3 of Rule XXI, an amendment, to be in order, must reduce expenditure, and this does not reduce expenditure but merely provides for the disposition to be made of the money.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Chair to decide that this amendment is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not subject to the point of order, and will submit the question to the committee on its merits.

Mr. AIKEN. Then I hope the House will hear me while I proceed to explain the amendment, and I will not submit to interruption.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is so much confusion in the Hall that I did not hear the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. When the ruling of the Chair was understood by me I at once rose to take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and on that appeal I desire to say but a word. I ask the Clerk to read clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask the Clerk to read sections 3859 and 3860 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3859. The Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail-routes as distributing or separating offices; and where any such office is of the third, fourth, or fifth class he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

SEC. 3860. The Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York city, and to the postmasters at offices of the first and second classes, out of the surplus revenues of their respective offices, that is to say, the excess of box-rents and commissions over and above the salary assigned to the office, a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, lights, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals, to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts, and no such allowance shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those two provisions of law determine the manner in which this clerical service shall be furnished to the various post-offices. Clause 3 of Rule XXI requires it shall affirmatively appear that a legislative provision upon an appropriation bill retrenches expenses. This amendment not only proposes to change the law as read by the Clerk, but it does so without any pretense of retrenchment. On the contrary, it provides for the payment of the money in a different mode and under different authority from that provided for by existing law. And the method of payment proposed in the amendment must eventually result in a very heavy increase of expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Before submitting this appeal to the committee the Chair desires to say that in ruling originally upon this question he gave but little thought to it. The attention of the Chair, as well as the committee, having been now especially called to the matter, the Chair desires to give the reasons for the decision that he made.

In the opinion of the Chair the third clause of Rule XXI does not apply to this provision at all. If the provision now proposed as an amendment had been included in the bill as reported—appropriating $3,500,000 for clerks of the first class, $900,000 for clerks of the second class, and $800,000 for clerks of the third class—it seems to the Chair the provision would not have been a change of existing law or obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. VALENTINE and Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to conclude his statement of the grounds of his ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me a single additional word. The Chair must perceive that the present law applies to first and second class offices, while this provision extends to third-class offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The question whether an amendment increases or diminishes the amount proposed to be appropriated does not necessarily bring it within or exclude it from Rule XXI, as the Chair understands. It frequently happens that appropriations for a given year are larger or smaller than for the preceding year. But that consideration does not change the fact that this is a work already existing, and that Congress must appropriate the necessary amount therefor.

The Chair is not passing upon the question whether more is appropriated for these various classes of offices than ought to be appropriated; but simply rules that it is within the province of the House, in making appropriations, to designate the particular objects for which the appropriations are made; and by such a specific designation of objects Rule XXI is not violated.

Mr. VALENTINE. Has the Chair noticed the fact that this amendment entirely excludes fourth-class offices, and does thereby change existing law? Under this amendment not one dollar of the present appropriation can be used for the fourth-class offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would entertain an amendment to provide for fourth-class offices. It must not be supposed that the Chair is bound to suggest necessary or proper amendments to this bill; the Chair merely rules upon the question whether a proposition is subject to the point of order.

Mr. OATES. Now let us have a vote on the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has appealed from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision stand as the judgment of the committee?

The Committee of the Whole having voted on the question,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt, and would prefer to appoint tellers. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] The Clerk will count the vote.

The question having been again taken, there were—ayes 54, noes 34.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN], on which the gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. In order to meet the objection urged by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] I ask consent of the committee to amend my own amendment by inserting after the word "third" the words "and fourth."

Mr. VALENTINE. Will that be sufficient?

Mr. AIKEN. This gives a discretionary power to the Postmaster-General to the extent of $800,000, but not as to the bulk of the money appropriated.

Now, it seems to be the desire of the House to know how I have arrived at this suggestion for the distribution of this money. I simply took two or three annual reports of the Postmaster-General and added up what they report had been disbursed for the benefit of these respective offices. Taking the first class, then the second class, and then the third class, I found the amount given the first-class offices even in the last fiscal year to be $85,000 less than is allowed in my amendment, so that this sum may be added next year to what has been expended this year for first-class offices. I take it that will be quite sufficient, as the past year we have had an increase of only three first-class offices.

Then I took the second-class offices and found it in the same way. I added up the amount disbursed through them for clerk-hire for two or three years, and discovered that the amount I have inserted in this amendment will give a margin of $130,000 surplus to be expended for the incoming year. And I simply ask that the Postmaster-General be required to disburse the remainder of the appropriation in securing clerical help to the third and fourth class offices.

Mr. Chairman, I stated yesterday that second-class offices got 17 per cent. on their net revenue for clerk-hire, and last year this amounted to only $820,000. Third-class offices paid nearly $600,000 more into the Treasury than second-class offices, and they received less than 17 per cent. The entire amount they received, although numbering 2,160, was only $420,000. This amendment gives them at least $350,000 more for the next fiscal year, leaving $150,000 for fourth-class offices, which is more than was distributed last year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with that explanation, it does seem to me this is a perfectly legitimate distribution of this money. It does not curtail the authority of the Postmaster-General in disbursing the entire sum, but simply appropriates so many dollars for each class of Presidential offices, thereby securing justice to the many overworked postmasters of that class.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to oppose the amendment, but principally for information. I have heard the explanation of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me suggest the shortest way out is to take a vote, as I am satisfied the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from South Carolina is mistaken in this matter. He asks you to make an apportionment of this money. He has told you how much it will give to one class, how much to another, and how much to another. Now, what benefit is to come from subdivision and separation of the amount?

Mr. AIKEN. I will simply say postmasters of the third and fourth classes throughout the United States, working twelve and fifteen hours a day many of them, have to take the money out of their own pockets to pay for clerk-hire, and in my amendment these postmasters will have that money supplied to them by the Government without one dollar being taken from the first and second classes.

Mr. BAYNE. I am afraid the gentleman's amendment will cripple the other classes, and I believe it should be voted down. [Cries of "Vote!"]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

It further announced the passage of an act (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word. I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be well for the committee to understand what this amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] does. Under the law, as it now is, any clerk as such can be authorized, paid for, either in third or fourth class offices. For the first and second class offices there is a provision of law which allows the Postmaster-General in case of separating offices to make allowance for clerk-hire. It is not for clerk-hire technically speaking. So I wish the committee to understand that if this amendment is adopted it makes an appropriation pure and simple for clerk-hire at forty-five or forty-six thousand post-offices not now entitled to it under the law. A man, therefore, who holds a third or fourth class post-office, where there is no cross-route, where there is no separating to be done, may apply and receive a portion of this appropriation for clerk-hire. Now, that effort has been made several times heretofore and has been opposed, and especially from that side of the House, with great force and so far successfully. And I undertake to say, that if this amendment is to be adopted, instead of $800,000 you want a million or two millions to satisfy the demand.

That is all I desired to say, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

For payment of letter-carriers and incidental expenses of the free-delivery system——

Mr. ANDERSON. I rose to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will permit the Clerk to read the section through before submitting an amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment at the point where the gentleman from South Carolina offered his amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires unanimous consent to present the following executive communication and also to lay before the House some personal requests of members.

There was no objection.

SILVER DOLLARS AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House of February 3, 1885, relative to the alleged refusal of certain banks and banking associations to receive silver dollars and silver certificates in settlement of their balances, reports from the Treasurer of the United States and the Director of the Mint; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FERRELL, until Thursday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROSECRANS, for to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. HITT, for to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROGERS, of New York, for one week from the 11th instant, on account of business.

TICKETS FOR THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say for the information of the House that the tickets printed and issued under the resolution passed on yesterday for the reserved galleries of the House on to-morrow during the count of the electoral vote are now in the hands of the Doorkeeper and subject to the order of members.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARKANSAS.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas (by request), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8182) for the regulation of the Hot Springs reservation, at Hot Springs, Ark.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLICATION OF TREATIES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit in obedience to the statute the following concurrent resolution of the Senate for reference.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 9,500 additional copies of the treaties and conventions transmitted to the Senate by the President in his message of January 23, 1885, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate; 3,000 copies for the use of the House; 4,000 copies for the use of the Department of State; and 1,000 copies for distribution, by the Department of the Interior, among public libraries not depositories under existing laws, each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress to designate two libraries to whom copies of the work shall be thus sent. And the Public Printer is also authorized to print and have bound 2,000 additional copies to be sold at actual cost and 10 per cent. added.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. BREITUNG, by unanimous consent the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1374) to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PENSION BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, it was ordered that Senate pension bills on the Speaker's table be taken therefrom and appropriately referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded, which is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to insist upon the demand?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. DUNN. I renew it.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I ask to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it be in order to move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it would not. By unanimous consent, on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, this morning it was ordered, instead of a recess to-day, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting recommendations of the Supervising Architect to extend the limit of cost of the public buildings at Hannibal, Mo., and Brooklyn, N. Y.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the act of July 15, 1870, a full and complete inventory of all the property belonging to the United States in the buildings, rooms, offices, and grounds occupied by the Department of the Interior; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, laid on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of Dr. Thomas J. Jones, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of the Legislature of Nebraska; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Memorial and joint resolution concerning the people of Nebraska and the lands known as the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company lands, and the bill now pending in Congress for the relief of the settlers upon said lands.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas there are many settlers and purchasers of the public domain in the State of Nebraska who have patents from the United States for said land, the title to which is now disputed by an adverse claim derived originally from grants of land by Congress to a certain railroad company, known as the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company—i. e., Kneevals and Mitchell land claims;

Whereas such dispute of title is a very great injury and wrong to many persons who have spent many of their best years in toil, deprivation, and expense upon such lands, and has resulted in the confiscation of the homes of many of our best citizens residing upon and owning said lands, and their eviction therefrom;

Whereas a bill is pending in Congress for the relief of the settlers upon said lands, which bill has passed the Senate of the United States, and is now pending in the House of Representatives thereof: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Nebraska, That the passage of said bill would be but an act of justice to those of our citizens who are interested therein.

Resolved, That we earnestly urge upon Congress and every member thereof, regardless of their political affiliations, their immediate attention and favorable action upon said bill.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of this memorial and joint resolution.

H. H. SHEDD,
President of Senate.

Attest:

SHERWOOD BURR,
Secretary of Senate.

ALLAN W. FIELD,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

Attest:

JAMES F. SEDIKER,
Chief Clerk of House of Representatives.

Approved February 6, 1885.

JAMES W. DAWES,
Governor.

I hereby certify that the within memorial and joint resolution originated in the senate and passed the Legislature February 5, A. D. 1885.

SHERWOOD BURR,
Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
Office of Secretary of State.

I, E. P. Roggen, secretary of state of the State of Nebraska, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing copy of a memorial and joint resolution concerning the people of Nebraska and the lands known as the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company lands, and the bill now pending in Congress for the relief of the settlers upon said lands, approved February 6, 1885, with the original rolls on file in this office, and that the same is a true and perfect copy of said memorial and joint resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Nebraska. Done at Lincoln this 6th day of February, A. D. 1885, of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and ninth, and of this State the eighteenth.

[SEAL.]

E. P. ROGGEN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Sarah Jane De Coursey, of Philadelphia, and others, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 438) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Capt. Lambert Wickes; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. GARLAND. I present the petition of a large number of citizens of the city of Hot Springs, Ark., praying for certain legislation in reference to the Hot Springs reservation. Accompanying the petition is a bill which the petitioners desire me to introduce to carry out the views set forth in the petition. At the proper time I shall introduce the bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade and the Philadelphia (Pa.) Maritime Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 7163) to regulate the forms of bills of lading and the duties and liabilities of ship-owners and others; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Charles H. Mendum, James P. Boutell, John Sise, G. R. Laighton, W. C. Walton, Andrew P. Preston, Joseph W. Peirce, and Andrew J. Penhallow, of Portsmouth, N. H., praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2631) to regulate the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2632) making appropriations for the constructon, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NORTHERN MONTANA INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill on the Calendar which I think will cause no debate. The friends of the measure are very anxious to get it to the other branch, where they think they can get it through if it is passed by the Senate now.

Mr. ALLISON. If it leads to no debate, I shall consent.

Mr. DAWES. If it causes debate, of course I shall withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to have taken up at this time the bill (S. 2609) to provide permanent reservations for the Indians in Northern Montana, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up a bill that I am quite sure will not lead to any debate. It is House bill No. 7496, reported from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have taken up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 7496) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. With other Senators I have for a week past been urging the Senate to take up House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar in their order. I gave notice three or four days ago that until that was done I should object to the taking up of any one House bill on the Calendar other than a regular appropriation bill. I therefore, according to the notice, object.

Mr. SHERMAN. I then move, the Calendar being in order, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I concur with my friend from Tennessee in the view that we ought to take up House bills and act upon them, but now that I have called the bill up and it is a small matter to which the Senator from Tennessee has himself agreed in committee, I ask him that he allow the bill to pass, and I shall hereafter join him in taking up the House bills in their order. We shall not have time this morning to do what the Senator proposes, or I should be willing to pursue that course this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not even notice the character of the bill that the Senator wishes to have considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a House bill reported from the Committee on Finance, which the Senator himself has approved. As we can not now take up under a general order the House bills on the Calendar, I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not interfere with this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate will now consent that we shall, after the morning business, proceed with the consideration of House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar, we can at least agree to that, it will not delay the Senator from Ohio more than a day or two. I do not understand that the question of time is important in this particular case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit again to the Senator from Tennessee that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the bill be read by its title.

Mr. PLATT. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. PLATT. My point of order is that although Senators have been standing very near me and talking very loud, I have been unable to hear what has been said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will resume their seats, and the Senate will be in order. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7496) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. The regular order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the privilege of moving to recommit a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. The Chair will hear the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to recommit a bill now upon the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist upon the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Calendar under Rule VIII will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to take up at this time the joint resolution (S. R. 111) referring the controversy between the United States and Venezuela, in respect to the awards of the mixed commission, to the President. I asked for the consideration of it yesterday——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAPHAM. I asked for the consideration of the joint resolution when I reported it from the Committee on Foreign Relations yesterday, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], under a misapprehension, I think, objected to its consideration.

The joint resolution refers to the President the distribution of the fund now in the State Department under the Venezuelan award. There is about half a million dollars lying there belonging to the claimants under the award. In 1883 we passed a joint resolution authorizing the President to open negotiations with Venezuela. He submitted the draught of a convention to the representative of that government, who has finally rejected it; and Venezuela has taken the strange position that, by virtue of that resolution, we vacated all these awards, and that government refuses to pay any more money. There is no alternative left to us now but to leave to the President the distribution of what money is in our Treasury.

I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution indicated by him.

Mr. HOAR. The motion is now only to take up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to take up.

The motion was not agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the reading of the report will be resumed.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. LAPHAM. I can not consent to that this morning, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed, at page 23, the reading of the report submitted by Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, April 8, 1884.

The reading having proceeded five minutes,

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to make a suggestion and at the same time a request to the Senator from New York. The reading of the report is unnecessarily, as I think, occupying the time of the Senate. I am not myself willing to believe that the Senator from New York desires to unnecessarily use up the time of the Senate, or that he desires to put himself in the attitude of having delay for the sake of delay. I think he is a more courageous opponent than that would indicate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the reading of this report may be dispensed with, that the residue of the report be printed in the RECORD, and that this bill may then go over until to-morrow at the time when the Calendar shall be reached, giving the Senator all the time he could have anyhow by reason of continuing the reading of the report. That is all I now ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with and that the residue of the report be printed in the RECORD and that this bill be passed over, retaining its place where it now stands on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I object to that part of the request which asks that the remainder of the report be printed in the RECORD. It would be of no material service to anybody to print a fraction of the report. The report itself is a very long one. Did the Senator mean to print in the RECORD the whole of it?

Mr. PLUMB. I am not particular about its going into the RECORD, if there is any point about that.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator said the remainder of the report. I object to printing the report in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. It is printed in the RECORD now as a matter of course unless the Senate otherwise orders. Every report read at the desk is printed in the RECORD as a matter of course. Now, if the reading goes on it will be printed in the RECORD, and both the time of the Senate be taken up and the columns of the RECORD be filled with it. The request of my honorable friend from Kansas is that so much of the regular order as implies the Senate taking another hour to have it read, when of course it will go into the RECORD, may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he knows of no rule which requires a report when it is read to go into the RECORD, that the Reporter consulted the Chair about this voluminous report already in print when its reading at the desk first began, and the Chair advised the Reporter that there was no rule which required it to go into the RECORD, and that to put it there would be a useless waste of public money.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire of the Chair if that has not been hitherto the general, I do not know whether the uniform, rule that all the proceedings of the Senate, including anything read in the Senate, were printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the recollection of the Chair that has not been the uniform rule. Frequently the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD merely states that "the report was read." It has very often happened that where a report was brief, it was set out in full in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I think that is the general rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At any rate the Chair took the responsibility of advising the reporter not to reprint this long report in the RECORD as part of the proceedings, as it was read piecemeal from day to day. Whatever responsibility there is about it belongs to the Chair and not to the Reporter; he only took the advice of the Chair as a matter of economy of space and money. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LAPHAM. I have no objection to this case standing over until to-morrow. I think to-morrow will be a better day to take it up for consideration; but I am unwilling this morning, without any understanding, to say anything on the subject of its disposition. If the bill can stand over until to-morrow without prejudice, I think meantime we can come to some understanding.

Mr. PLUMB. No; I have had no thought about it. There was no understanding proposed by me. Let the Senator himself be responsible for obstructing the business of the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am not responsible. This is a very instructive and able report, and I think the Senate ought to hear it. If, as I understand, it is not to go in the RECORD, it ought certainly to be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; let us have it.

Mr. PLUMB. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

The reading having been continued for ten minutes,

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the reading of the report may be for a moment suspended while I inquire whether it is the understanding of the Senate that after the count of the electoral vote the Senate is to return to the Chamber for the purpose of continuing business to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair of course is unable to answer.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood that, and I ask for the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. We must return here.

Mr. GARLAND. How long does the Senator from Kansas suppose the count will take?

Mr. INGALLS. The proceedings at the last occasion of counting the electoral vote consumed an hour and forty minutes. I suppose they can be concluded to-day by 2 o'clock, unless there is some interruption not now anticipated.

I will suggest, in order to bring the matter to a decision, that there be unanimous consent that after the proceedings in the House the Senate return to this Chamber for the purpose of continuing legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate hears the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas. The Senate will of course return to its Chamber.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand of course that the Senate will return to this Chamber; but I ask unanimous consent that there may be a decision on which we can act, that at the close of the proceedings in the House, on the return of the Senate to this Chamber, legislative business for the day shall be resumed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate hears the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. The custom heretofore has generally been that the first man who gets back and can get the attention of the Chair, before a quorum has arrived, rises and says, "I move that the Senate adjourn."

Mr. INGALLS. That I desire to avoid.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is understood that the Chair will not put the question on adjournment until there is a quorum present to act on it, I think there will be no difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is bound to say that under the rules a motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. HOAR. The custom of the Senate has been to return to its Chamber and to receive the report of the proceedings in joint convention, and pass a resolution in regard to those proceedings. Four years ago that resolution was passed in each branch, not as a concurrent resolution—the concurrence of the other branch was not asked for—but each passed the same resolution, and actual concurrent action became unnecessary. We shall return to our Chamber in all human probability to-day before 2 o'clock, which is the hour at which the morning business is concluded and the general business of the day is begun till within a day or two. There will be plenty of time to have three or four hours for useful legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be understood that the Senate is expected to proceed with its regular business on its return from the House of Representatives. The reading of the report will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report and continued it till 11 o'clock and 55 minutes a. m.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, with a view of saving time in reading the report further, that if the Senate will consent that the views of the minority may be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow morning I will let the reading be suspended and have the bill stand over until to-morrow morning. The minority views are not long.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no pride of opinion about the majority report, but it seems to me that there ought to be a full statement of the case, and that if any part of it goes in the RECORD it ought all to go in.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have no objection to the whole of it going in; I should rather prefer it. I do want the views of the minority to be incorporated in the RECORD; they are not lengthy.

Mr. SHERMAN. This involves a very large expense, and it is an absolute waste. No man who will take this report and read it in the ordinary document form will read it in the close print of the RECORD; therefore it is a mere wanton waste without cause. Any one can get it in more convenient form, for he can read it in document form, while if it is entombed in the RECORD it will never be seen.

Mr. GARLAND. It is now four minutes of 12; and I suggest that the Senate take a recess for the execution of the order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution directing the Clerk to inform the Senate that the House was ready to receive the Senate at 12 o'clock m. to proceed, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution of the two Houses providing for a meeting in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock will now be executed, and the Senate will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate, headed by the President pro tempore and Secretary, and preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, thereupon proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its sitting.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the tellers who were appointed on behalf of the Senate, in pursuance of the concurrent resolution of the two Houses to ascertain the result of the election for President and Vice-President of the United States, beg leave to report that the two Houses met in joint convention in pursuance of the resolution, and that thereupon the certificates of the electors of the various States of their votes for those officers were opened by the President of the Senate and delivered to the tellers, and on being examined it appeared that the votes of the several States had been cast in accordance with the list which I hold in my hand and will send to the Chair.

From those votes it appeared that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States for the term of office beginning on the 4th of March, 1885, was 401, of which a majority was 201. The state of the vote for President of the United States appeared to be—

For Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, 219.

For James G. Blaine, of the State of Maine, 182.

The state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States appeared to be—

For Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, 219.

For John A. Logan, of the State of Illinois, 182.

Which result having been delivered by the tellers to the presiding officer, the presiding officer declared that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, had received a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors as they appeared in the certificates and by the list of the tellers, and so appeared to have been elected President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1885; and that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, appeared to have received a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed as they appeared in the certificates read by the tellers, and so appeared to have been elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be placed on file.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution——

Mr. CONGER. Before that is offered I should like to have the last clause of the statement as to the declaration and the effect of it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will read the declaration the President of the Senate made at the meeting of the two Houses, for information:

> And the President of the Senate makes this declaration, only as a public statement, in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, of the contents of the papers opened and read on this occasion, and not as possessing any authority in law to declare any legal conclusion whatever.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the proper mode of presenting my view upon that question I do not know that I understand; but I desire here as one of the Senators of this body to say that I entirely dissent from the declaration that the President of the Senate has no other power in announcing the electoral vote than to merely announce the facts. I do not know by what authority a question so long in dispute, and perhaps with the views of the Senate and of the people of the United States almost equally divided, should be attempted to be settled by making a statement of one view of it a part of the declaration. I merely speak of it, however, to express my dissent from that declaration of the presiding officer that he is only to make a statement of the result and has no other power in the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also wish for myself, as I have recorded my opinion on this question at other times, to assert and put upon the record my statement that the declaration made was the declaration of the gentleman who presided on that occasion expressing his own opinion, and should not be taken as a precedent except so far as it may command the judgment of mankind hereafter. I believe that the President of the Senate exercised a constitutional power when he presided over the joint body to-day and counted the vote, and that his announcement is the conclusive end of all argument upon the question, and that doing so he not only gave his own opinion as to the result of certain papers that were presented to him, but he made the only constitutional declaration that is provided for under existing law of who shall be President of the United States after the 4th of March.

I simply rose to enter my caveat now so that this declaration of the presiding officer shall not be regarded as concluding what I consider to be his constitutional duty and which he has performed with ability and propriety.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I conceived it to be my duty as one of the tellers to report to the Senate only so much of the proceedings of the two Houses as seemed to me to be of the substance of the ascertainment and declaration of the result. I did not, therefore, in the report which I made, communicate the various declarations or statements of the presiding officer, as I supposed he understood, as has been said by the Senator from Ohio, that the declaration which has been adverted to was a declaration of his own understanding of the significance of the official act, and in no way entered into it as giving it authority or as affording any precedent or weight for the future guidance of the representatives of the American people in the two Houses except so far as the very great and deserved weight which attaches to the opinion of so eminent a constitutional lawyer may make it a precedent hereafter.

I desire to introduce a resolution——

Mr. INGALLS. Without entering, Mr. President, upon the discussion of a question which is and probably always must remain an open one, I wish on this occasion to express my dissent absolutely from the conclusions contained in the declaration of the President pro tempore of the Senate, and to say that in my judgment it should not be held in any way as a precedent governing the action of that officer or of this body upon similar occasions hereafter.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to express my concurrence in what has been said by the Senator from Kansas. In my judgment the duty devolved upon the Vice-President of the United States in the matter of counting and announcing the vote for President of the United States is a high constitutional duty; and the declaration made by the President pro tempore of the Senate to-day in my judgment is not in accord with the requirements of the Constitution.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, I had occasion eight years since to examine this question. I find from the journals of the convention which framed the Constitution that the clause of the Constitution relative to counting the electoral vote as acted on and adopted read that the President of the Senate should then and there open all the certificates and the votes should then and there be counted in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, making the Senate and House of Representatives mere witnesses of an act to be performed by the presiding officer of the Senate.

Following that, the first resolution adopted on the subject was a resolution of the convention in which they recommended among other things that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate for the "sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the electoral votes for President"—just that language exactly—and that was done. Following that precedent of the fathers, Vice-President Adams counted and declared the result, and announced himself to have been elected President of the United States. I believe, sir, that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the presiding officer of this body should perform the duty of counting the votes as well as of receiving and opening the certificates.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think it very profitable at this stage of the session to reopen the great debate of eight years ago; but I think, as all the suggestions which have been so far made upon this question have been made upon one side, it is proper to remind the Senate and the country that by a very large majority the Senate of the United States expressed eight years ago on the fullest debate its dissent from the propositions which have been advanced by the several Senators who have spoken, in that concurring with some of the greatest constitutional authorities we have ever had in this country, including John Marshall, Oliver Ellsworth, if my recollection is not at fault, Daniel Webster, and Abraham Lincoln. And a late eminent Senator from the State of New York stated in my hearing that every member of the Senate but eight had in his hearing expressed sentiments which were in conflict with those which have been expressed by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New York. At any rate, whether that statement was true or not, a computation which I myself made showed that all the then Senators of the United States, with eighteen exceptions, a very small minority of the body, were on record expressly and distinctly declaring that the President of the Senate had not the power to count the vote under the Constitution in any sense of the term of counting the vote, which implies the right to decide what votes should or should not be taken into consideration in ascertaining the constitutional result.

I myself believe that the President of the Senate derived for the count of to-day an authority from the concurrent resolution which the two branches have passed, and that his declaration of the count which the two branches witnessed and which was the result of the report of the tellers representing the two branches, in their presence, without their dissent, uttered by the authority of the two branches a constitutional declaration and proclamation of the result. Our ancestors were jealous of executive power. They were in the habit of continuing the same person in the public service year after year and official term after official term, and I believe they would have deemed it monstrous if the supposition had been suggested then that the Vice-President of the United States, the constitutional President of the Senate, who as they originally established the Constitution was one of the two leading candidates for the office of the Presidency (because there was no voting for a Vice-President in those days, as everybody remembers), and who of course would be in the ordinary course of events one of the leading candidates at the election the result of which was to be declared, should be clothed with the enormous power under the Constitution of determining the question whether he himself were duly elected President, and that there should be under the Constitution and laws of the United States no possible appeal from his decision. I hold that to be a proposition repugnant utterly to all we know of the opinions, practices, and conduct of our ancestors who framed the Constitution.

It was true in almost every State in the Union, with one or two exceptions, at that time, as it is true in a large number of the States since (I think there was but one exception at that time), that the two Houses of the Legislature ascertained the result of the election of the Executive. So it was in my own State; so it was in Virginia; so, I think, it was in every State but New York.

I do not desire, however, to go into this interesting question at this time, except that as Senators have thought proper to put on record their opinion and there has been no dissent from it, I wish to state emphatically my dissent. I agree with the Senator who first spoke, and I have no doubt that the occupant of the Chair agrees, that the declaration which he made was no part of the constitutional proceeding, any more than his calling the two Houses to order or other statements which he was bound to make in the exercise of his duty; but that it was his individual expression of a judgment as to the scope and extent of an official act which he performed. It seems to me it was entirely proper for the presiding officer to make that declaration, although no part of the constitutional proceedings, because otherwise he might be supposed to be undertaking to do what, as he viewed the question, would have been an act of usurpation.

Mr. CONGER. When I called attention first, after the reading of the report, to this subject, I did it not with any view of entering into any discussion upon the question one way or the other, and I did not suppose without some proposition being made that the discussion would be entered into; but I did feel as if it was the right of any Senator here to dissent from any mode of declaration not authorized by law or by the Constitution as a precedent. It was for that purpose and that only, giving all due weight and superior weight to the opinion of the presiding officer and his own view of this question, that I desired to dissent from that declaration as in my judgment a wrong construction on the power of the office upon a point long disputed and still in dispute in the Senate and House and among the people of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state, with the indulgence of the Senate, that the Senate, in the opinion of the Chair, is in no way responsible for the declaration that the President of the Senate made on the occasion referred to. Neither the Senate of the United States nor the House of Representatives had conferred any authority upon the President of the Senate to make any declaration. There is no law, within the knowledge of the President of the Senate, which provides for any proceeding, except the Constitution. The President of the Senate was of opinion, and still is, that a concurrent resolution is not a law; and if the concurrent resolution providing for this occasion had contained any direction to the President of the Senate that was inconsistent with his views of constitutional duty, he would have been bound to disregard it, or preferably, as he certainly would have done, he would have resigned his office and allowed the Senate freely to elect some gentleman whose opinion coincided with that of the majority.

No Senator need feel bound as a precedent by anything the President of the Senate said. He was exerting a constitutional duty in opening the certificates and superintending the making manifest of what they contained; and he stated on his own responsibility, and on that of nobody else the negation of an implication that might have arisen from a different statement of the result; that is all.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask leave at this time to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I had the floor to offer a resolution, and yielded. I think the Senator from Kansas should not interpose other business.

Mr. INGALLS. It bears directly on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to offer a resolution at this time. It will be read.

Mr. BAYARD. It will be read for information, I presume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information, after which the Chair will call for objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. INGALLS, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate does not assent to the concluding declaration of the President of the Senate in the announcement of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States made in the presence of the two Houses of Congress this day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that it may lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made and the resolution goes over.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask present consideration:

Whereas the Senate having met the House of Representatives in accordance with the fifth section of the act of 1st March, 1792, relative to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the electoral votes having been opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses of Congress and counted by the tellers appointed on the part of the two Houses, and it appearing that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States is 401, of which a majority is 201; and it further appearing that Grover Cleveland, of New York, had received 219 votes for President of the United States, and that Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, had received 219 votes for Vice-President of the United States, which number is a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed, and the same having been duly declared by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Senate is of opinion that the Constitution and laws have been duly executed, and that no further declaration of these facts is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CONGER and Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to say that this resolution is in the usual form. It is exactly the resolution adopted four years ago.

Mr. INGALLS. But the declaration is not in the usual form.

Mr. HOAR. The declaration contained in it is the declaration of four years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The resolution will be printed and go over.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House concurred in some and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN F. FOLLETT of Ohio, Mr. WALDO HUTCHINS of New York, and Mr. J. G. CANNON of Illinois managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7522) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to withdraw that amendment. As I said yesterday, I offered it with the understanding that it was agreed to by all the members of the Senate Committee on Public Lands. There appears to be some difference of opinion in that committee in regard to it, and I am not willing to take the responsibility of fathering the amendment myself and thus imperiling the bill. I however take occasion to say that I do not see any harm in the amendment itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon withdraws the amendment submitted by him yesterday.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to add to the first section of the bill the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash except for fees and commissions in the disposal of public lands at the land offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and pre-emption rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office which I sent to the desk may be read in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1885.

SIR: In reply to your personal inquiry of this date relative to outstanding certificates of deposit issued on account of surveys, and the effect upon such certificates of H. R. No. 7004, providing for the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws, &c., as reported with amendments from the Senate Committee on Public Lands, I have the honor to state as follows:

The amount of such certificates now outstanding arising from deposits made since July 1, 1880, is $395,441.12. A small amount arising from deposits made prior to July 1, 1880, also remains outstanding.

Such certificates are issued under sections 2401 et seq., Revised Statutes, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1879 (20 Statutes, 352), and August 7, 1882 (22 Statutes, 327), providing that settlers in unsurveyed townships may make deposits for the expenses of the survey of such townships.

The certificates are receivable from the settlers who made the deposit in part payment for their lands, and are also made assignable by indorsement, and when so assigned are receivable in payment for lands entered by settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws in the land district in which the deposit was made. Certificates issued prior to August 7, 1882, are so receivable in any land district.

The effect upon these certificates of the repeal of the pre-emption law would be to ultimately restrict their use to commuted homestead cases. They would, however, meanwhile be used in payment of lands to which existing pre-emption claims attach, and under which entries have been or may be made. Such entries, present and prospective, cover many millions of acres.

The amendment of the homestead law, extending the period requisite for commutation, would have the effect to defer the present use of the certificates in that class of cases.

It does not occur to me that there would be any objection to extending the use of the certificates so as to make them receivable in payment for public lands generally. I think that with such provision the value of outstanding certificates would not be impaired.

I respectfully call your attention to the fact that agricultural-college scrip issued under the act of July 2, 1862 (12 Statutes, 503), is locatable on lands subject to sale at private entry, and under section 2278, Revised Statutes, may be received in payment of pre-emption claims. By construction such scrip is also received in commuted homestead cases. Military bounty-land warrants are receivable only in like manner. Private land scrip issued under the acts of June 2, 1858 (11 Statutes, 294), and July 22, 1860 (12 Statutes, 85), and the supplemental acts of March 2, 1867 (14 Statutes, 544), June 10, 1872 (17 Statutes, 378), and June 28, 1879 (20 Statutes, 274), can be used only in the same way.

The pending bill makes no special provision for this class of cases. In event you should desire to consider an amendment covering these cases, as well as certificates of deposit, I make the following suggestion in connection with your request that I submit appropriate forms of amendment in the matter of certificates of deposit:

Add to section 5 the following:

"Provided, however, That this section shall not be construed to prevent the location of military bounty-land warrants or of agricultural-college or other scrip issued under existing laws upon any unoccupied and unappropriated lands now subject to such location: And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions) in the disposal of public lands at the land-offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and pre-emption rights."

The reason for the exception of fees and commissions in the above form of amendment is because of the small and irregular sums in which fees and commissions are payable and the trouble which would be involved in adjusting differences.

I return herewith your memorandum of points of inquiry submitted.

Very respectfully,

N. C. MCFARLAND,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not understand fully the purport of this letter. I ask whether the effect of the amendment will be to extend the power of the certificates of deposit, by making them good outside of the land district in which they were issued?

Mr. DOLPH. I think not, but I was about to make a statement of what the amendment is.

After this bill had been reported my attention was called to the fact that there had been issued under existing laws certificates to parties who had advanced money for carrying on the public surveys. The amount of these outstanding certificates is now about $400,000—a little under that sum. They are receivable in payment for pre-emption claims, and, by construction of the Department, are also receivable in payment for commuted homesteads, which is but another form of pre-emption.

If by this bill we repeal the pre-emption law, of course we impair the value of those outstanding certificates; and if we require, before a homestead entry can be commuted, thirty months' residence instead of six months' residence, of course the number of commuted homesteads will be much smaller than at present, and thus we shall almost repudiate these obligations which have been issued upon the faith of an act of Congress.

In my judgment only two courses are left for Congress in this matter. One is to authorize the redemption of these certificates at the Treasury of the United States when they are presented and pay them in cash from the Treasury; the other is the one proposed by the pending amendment to authorize their receipt in payment for other public lands sold for cash as a compensation to the holders, if the bill under consideration should become a law, for the loss caused by the change, which would prevent their being used to the extent at present allowed in payment of pre-emption claims.

I made an inquiry of the Commissioner of the General Land Office concerning this matter; and his letter in answer to the inquiry states the manner in which the passage of the bill under consideration would impair the value of these certificates; and he also states that he sees no objection to allowing these certificates to be used in payment for other lands of the United States sold for cash, except as to payment for fees of officers, and the only objection to that is that it would require a system of book-keeping which he does not desire to enter upon.

The effect of the amendment will be to allow these certificates to be used until they are all redeemed, in payment for any other class of lands where the United States receives cash—mineral, coal, and other lands for which payments are made in cash; and I think such a provision would be an equivalent for the restricted use of them which the passage of this bill would cause. I am not particular about it, but I would not like to have the bill pass the Senate, inasmuch as I reported it from the Committee on Public Lands and might be held in some sense responsible for its effect, without having the matter brought before the Senate, with the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the subject.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, this is an amendment of a very important character. It repeals legislation upon the statute-book enacted but a few years ago. When that legislation was before the Senate it occasioned a very interesting and lengthy discussion. If I remember the provisions of the law aright, parties were authorized by the law to proceed and make certain surveys of public lands, and they were to receive certificates in compensation for those surveys, which were authorized to be used in payment of public lands within the land district in which the land was situated. This amendment repeals all those sections. I have not had an opportunity of examining the proposed amendment. It has not been submitted to the Committee on Public Lands during the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that after the bill was reported the letter was received, and it has been called to the attention of the committee. Then, after the bill was reported, I was authorized by the committee to offer this amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Was it fully considered there?

Mr. DOLPH. I think so.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is certainly legislation of an important character. The issuing of scrip subject to location upon the public lands of the United States has been a fruitful source of corruption and fraud, and so great had these become that it was with great hesitation the Senate enacted the legislation already upon the statute-book. I am opposed on principle to creating any scrip or authorizing the issuance of any scrip which shall be assignable and locatable upon the public lands of the United States. If the scrip is to be issued in compensation of services of any kind or in the liquidation of any obligation of the Government——

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator I think is entirely under a misapprehension. This is not scrip. These certificates are already issued; and they are merely obligations for so much money. They do not authorize the location of any land; but a homesteader or pre-emption claimant may secure one of these certificates and turn it in in lieu of money when he pays for his claim. If we repeal the pre-emption laws we will have $400,000 of these certificates outstanding, which represent so much money paid for the benefit of the Government under a statute of Congress which provides that these certificates may be used to pay for pre-emption claims not only by the parties advancing the money, but they are assignable and may be used by any pre-emption claimant.

The only object of the amendment, which was drawn in the General Land Office, is to prevent the repudiation of these certificates, and, as they will not be redeemed in payment for pre-emption claims hereafter owing to the repeal of the law, and as they are not likely to be in demand for paying for commuted homesteads, to allow them to be used in payment for mineral lands and timber lands on the Pacific coast. Those are, I think, all the cases in which they can be used under the amendment. We supposed that would be a fair compensation for restricting their use under existing laws in payment for pre-emptions; but they are not scrip; no one can locate land with them. They will be simply made an equivalent to so much money receivable in payment for all public lands, as they are now in pre-emption and commuted homestead cases.

Mr. McMILLAN. These certificates were issued to persons who desired to make surveys of lands for their own benefit. They were issued in order to remunerate them for making surveys in advance of surveys regularly made by the Government of the United States. Persons were unwilling to wait until the Government surveys were extended to lands upon which they wished to enter, and this law was passed for the purpose of enabling them to go on and survey the lands in advance of the Government, and they were to be compensated for the surveys by the issuance of this scrip; and so far as it was authorized to be used its use was limited to the district in which the lands surveyed were located.

Mr. DOLPH. This amendment does the same thing.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the limitation?

Mr. DOLPH. The same limitation as at present—that is, the certificates shall be received at the land office at which such certificates are now receivable in commuted homestead and pre-emption entries. They are receivable in the same way precisely.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is the limitation that broad?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir. The Senator will see it in the latter part of the amendment; they have been made assignable by law already.

Mr. McMILLAN. If that is the construction——

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me I should like to ask a question. I should like to know, if the Senator is advised, who is responsible for the correctness of the surveys made under the law referred to. How have they ever been ascertained?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Oregon will answer that.

Mr. DOLPH. The money is placed to the credit of the Government and expended by the surveyor-general the same as any appropriation made by Congress for carrying on surveys. The surveys are carried on by the surveyor-general. They are reported by him. They are approved by the General Land Office. It is merely an advance to the Government representing so much money paid out by the Government.

Mr. CALL. The surveys are carried on under the supervision of the surveyor-general?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLAN. The money being deposited by the individual who desires the land surveyed. I have not had an opportunity of examining the proposed amendment as carefully as I would desire to do, but if the construction given to it by the Senator from Oregon is correct, it relieves it of my objection. Still I am opposed to making these certificates receivable in payment of the public lands because the lands surveyed may be in a portion of the country where the lands are not arable, and the district may extend to and embrace territory where the agricultural lands are the principal and prominent lands in the district. These certificates may be used for the purpose of payment by parties who choose to go and make their surveys voluntarily.

As I said, the issuing of scrip has been a fruitful source of fraud and wrong upon the Government, and it has brought the public service, so far as the land laws are concerned, into great disrepute, and perhaps is one of the elements which have led to the demand for repeal of the pre-emption law. I was opposed to the enactment of the law now on the statute-book. If these parties have taken certificates under the law they are not deprived of any right to which they were entitled. They were advised, of course, of the right of the Government to repeal any law upon the statute-book, and they took these certificates under those circumstances and are not now entitled to plead that they have a right to use them for any other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator from Minnesota will propose an amendment for the repeal of the laws under which these certificates were issued, I shall have no objection to its adoption; but we are confronted with this difficulty: These certificates are already issued. They are outstanding to the amount of about $400,000. They are assignable and pass by delivery. They can be used only to pay for commuted homesteads and in payment of pre-emption claims. The question is, what shall be done with them? Every one in this body knows that if the pre-emption law is repealed and no provision made for the payment of these certificates the holders will come here for relief and Congress will make appropriation to pay them in cash, with interest, out of the Treasury.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office says he sees no objection to extending their use so that they may be received in payment in lieu of cash for all lands subject to cash entry. I think that would be the best way to dispose of them—to provide a method by which they may be paid in land. By this amendment we create no new right. These certificates are not scrip. No man can locate land with them. If the amendment prevails they could only be used as now within the district in which they were issued.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Government has received funds for the payment of these surveys there would be no hardship in the Government paying the certificates in cash, because it would be paying for service which the Government itself should have performed and which it would in time perform.

Mr. PLUMB. There ought to be no misunderstanding about this matter. If this bill should not be passed, the people who hold this scrip can go on and make use of it according to the law as it now stands, which provides for its use from time to time in the entry of public lands. In making this repeal the committee have simply thought it not wise to take away the right which was conferred by a previous law under which this scrip has been acquired. We do not enlarge it at all, and I presume all that is now outstanding can be located only in the land district in which the surveys were made. That was the effect of the law of a few years ago; it was so limited; and I think the Senator from Minnesota would not advocate the taking away of a right simply because we happen to be amending and changing our land system.

The amendment itself adds nothing at all to the value of what these people have, but only preserves their rights as they are; and that I think is very much wiser legislation than it is to attempt to take away a right on the theory that perhaps at a future time Congress under some impulse or other may make a money compensation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I now offer an amendment to section 3, which I send to the desk to be read, and then I will state the necessity for it in a moment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed in section 3 to strike out all after the word "entry," in line 8, to the end of the section, as follows:

And obtaining a patent therefor, the proofs of actual settlement and cultivation thereof to be filed at least six months prior and as preliminary to the application for the patent, and in the same manner and to the same effect as is provided and required in section 3 of this act as to final proofs and the issuance of patents.

And to insert in lieu thereof these words:

And before the expiration of five years from obtaining a patent therefor from the Government as in other cases directed by law, on making proof of settlement and cultivation as provided by the laws in force granting pre-emption rights.

Mr. DOLPH. The necessity for this amendment will appear by reference to the statutes. We have stricken out section 3 of the bill as it came from the House, which provided a new manner of making proof in homestead entries. The latter clause of section 4 of the original bill which is section 3 of the present bill, referred to the previous section, which is stricken out, for the manner of making proof in commuted homestead cases, but it was overlooked by myself and the committee in reporting the bill. By this amendment it is proposed to strike out the last clause of section 3, which refers to the previous section which has not been adopted, and to restore the clause of the section as it stands in the Revised Statutes, so as to require the proof to be made in cases of commuted homesteads in accordance with the pre-emption law which has been heretofore in force. It is a mere formal matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS obtained the floor.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], who desires to propose an amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I have one or two more amendments to offer.

Mr. INGALLS. Coming from the committee?

Mr. DOLPH. They are not from the committee, but they are mere formal corrections of the several sections. I yield to the Senator from Michigan with the understanding that we shall go back and that I may hereafter have an opportunity to offer several amendments.

Mr. PALMER. I move to add as a new section to the bill the following:

That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th of January, 1885, there are no valid conflicting claims thereto, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon, are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CALL. The amendment has not been printed, I think.

Mr. PALMER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Florida that it was printed and put upon the desks of Senators several days ago.

Mr. SLATER. As I understand the language of the amendment, it is broad enough to cover a case that I have in my mind, where some six hundred or more persons have settled on land of this description under the homestead law. There being some question about the land being subsequently offered for sale, the effect of it will be to foreclose and turn the homesteaders out, if I understand the language of the amendment correctly. I refer to the settlers on what is known as the Ontonagon and Brulé River grant. I think it covers that case.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me to make a statement, I think I can satisfy him that the amendment does not involve any of those settlers. It provides merely that where lands have been withdrawn from market and afterward restored to market by order of the Land Office and have not been reoffered at public sale, where parties have gone on in good faith and purchased the lands at the reduced price as ordered by the Land Office, their titles shall be validated. It covers I do not know how many acres in Michigan. For the Senator's information and for the information of the Senate, possibly it would be well for the Secretary to read the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, contained in Senate report of committee, No. 1026.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. SLATER. I yield for the reading.

Mr. PALMER. Let the Secretary read what I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office referred to by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1885.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference, of a letter from Hon. P. B. PLUMB, chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate, transmitting a copy of Senate bill No. 2509, "to confirm titles to lands in certain cases," and requesting the views of your Department thereon.

The bill, though general in its nature, applies particularly to certain lands in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, which were once offered at public sale and afterward withdrawn from private entry by reason of railroad grants, and then relieved from the withdrawal, or were reduced in price by act of Congress, but were not again offered at public sale at the reduced price nor restored to private entry by public notice, but which were nevertheless entered as lands subject to private entry, contrary to decisions of the courts and the decisions and instructions of this Department. I am not informed that this state of facts exists elsewhere than in the locality referred to. Many of such entries in that locality have been patented, and such patents have not been attacked. It is held that patented lands have passed beyond the jurisdiction of the land department. Many other private cash or equivalent entries upon such lands remain of record, some of which have been held for cancellation for illegality, and all of which are liable to be so held when reached for action. These unpatented entries which are deemed illegal embrace a probable aggregate of between 100,000 and 200,000 acres.

Settlers have gone upon some of these lands with a view of claiming title thereto under the homestead or pre-emption laws as soon as their entries may be admitted, and applications to make filings or entries have been received and are awaiting action in several hundred cases.

The bill confirms titles which have passed by patent, and confirms all unpatented entries where there are no adverse claims. So far as the question is one between the United States and the private-entry man, the United States by this bill waives the illegality in the entries and makes them valid. So far as any settlement, claim, or other conflicting right has accrued up to the date of the approval of the act, the entries are not validated. The confirmation proposed is that which does not affect the rights or claims of third parties, and does not propose to adjudicate nor make rules for adjudication in cases of conflicting claims, but leaves the respective claimants in such cases to the operation and remedies of existing laws. I perceive no objection to the legislation proposed.

The only point which occurs to me as rendering the act open to any doubt in respect to its construction is the phrase where there are "no conflicting claims," in line 16. While this language seems broad enough to cover all cases of adverse rights or claims, its meaning might perhaps be rendered more certain if the words "settlements or applications" were also added, so that the paragraph should read (lines 15 and 16) "and when, at the date of the approval of this act, there are no conflicting claims thereto, or settlements on such lands, or applications to enter the same," &c.

I return herewith Senator PLUMB's letter, and copy of Senate bill No. 2509.

Very respectfully,

N. C. MCFARLAND,
Commissioner.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PALMER. I move to amend the amendment, as suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by inserting in line 15, after the word "thereto," the words "or settlements or applications."

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should be glad to have the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office read again. I do not think that the amendment comprises all that the Commissioner suggested. I shall be opposed to the amendment unless it shall so appear. I ask for the reading of the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That portion of the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, referring to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The only point which occurs to me as rendering the act open to any doubt in respect to its copstruction is the phrase where there are "no conflicting claims," in line 16. While this language seems broad enough to cover all cases of adverse rights or claims, its meaning might perhaps be rendered more certain if the words "settlements or applications" were also added, so that the paragraph should read (lines 15 and 16) "and when, at the date of the approval of this act, there are no conflicting claims thereto, or settlements upon such lands, or applications to enter the same," &c.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan does not go quite as far as the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends. I regard the amendment as very important in view of the many conflicting claims in the Western States, and particularly in the State of California, where there are cases in which a Spanish or Mexican grant which has been declared invalid has been covered by a railroad grant made by act of Congress prior to the final settlement of the question in respect to the Spanish or Mexican grant. There are cases where settlers have gone upon land claiming that it was Government land, because covered by a Spanish grant at the time the railroad grant was made, and there are other parties claiming the same land under titles derived from the railroad company. Unless we are very careful in legislating upon this subject we shall confuse these questions and make an intense conflict between rival claimants to land, which will lead to interminable litigation and difficulty.

I shall insist on the words which have been suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office being inserted in the amendment before it is adopted. That I think would save it and leave it to the decision of the courts as to which party should have the land where there are rival claims of settlers, pre-emptioners, homesteaders, and every kind of claims that there may be in the land office. We should save the rights of all parties.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from California will permit me to interrupt him, I should like to say that the amendment covers nothing except those entries where there are no conflicting claims, settlements, or applications.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The question might arise as to what is a conflicting claim. A great variety of questions might arise. I wish to save the rights of all parties and leave it to the courts to decide which is the lawful claimant to the land where parties claim under different titles and sources of title, such as a Spanish grant or homestead title, or a title from a railroad company holding the land under a railroad grant.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from California will permit me, I will state that the object is merely to validate the titles procured by innocent parties in good faith where there is no conflict of any character whatever. A conflicting claim is a conflicting claim, it makes no odds of what character it is. The only parties involved here are the United States and the holders of the certificates or patents who have bought in good faith. If there are any third parties projected into the case under any of these descriptions, as a matter of course if there is a conflict and they are thrown out, they will have their redress in the courts before the proper tribunal. This is merely to make good the action of certain United States officers who have sold land and who supposed they were doing it legally, until a recent decision of the Supreme Court, which is of this character:

All lands which were put in the market at the enhanced double minimum price prior to the 1st of January, 1861, were by the third section of the act of Congress of June 15, 1880, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre. They are not, however, subject to private entry at the reduced price until again offered at public sale.

Some of these lands were offered at private entry before being reoffered at public sale, and where there is no conflict it seems to me perfectly right and just and fair that the action of the officers of the United States should be validated.

Mr. DOLPH. I fear the amendment is not fully understood by every Senator. The facts in the case are that certain lands which had been withdrawn on account of certain railroad grants were put in the market after the expiration of the time within which the roads were to be constructed under the terms of the act and before the lands were forfeited. Some lands which will probably be affected by this amendment were sold under a wrong construction of the law by the then Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of the General Land Office. Other lands were sold by the officers of the local land offices despite the instructions of the General Land Office. The amendment will only affect lands which have been sold and paid for, and the purchase-money for which has gone into the Treasury of the United States.

While the sales were illegal, because contrary to law, still, in view of the vast number of cases of that kind now pending in the General Land Office and in the courts, in cases where, as provided in the amendments, there are no conflicting claims, where no one else is claiming the land, and it is merely a matter between the purchaser and the United States, I think the best thing to be done is to confirm the title, keep the money, and let the parties have the land and thus get rid of this annoyance.

A large portion of the lands which have been offered at private sale, sold and paid for, have been settled upon by pre-emption and homestead claimants who are pressing their claims before the Committee on Public Lands and in the Department and in Congress. The bill does not affect such cases, but I think we ought to make haste and prevent any further complications of this kind by confirming the title of purchasers, where there are no conflicting claims at the present time, and preventing any future contest between such purchasers and pre-emption and homestead claimants. It is not the object to affect any case where there is a conflicting claim. However, the amendment is not important enough to take up time, and if the Senator from Michigan desires to have it adopted I do not suppose the committee will object. But the Committee on Public Lands believed that the bill was best as reported.

Mr. PALMER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon I will withdraw the amendment to the amendment. I did not think at the time that I was invading the rights of the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan withdraws the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. As there are other amendments which it is desired to offer to the bill, I should like to have the matter go over for a little while, and in the mean time, if there are other amendments to be offered, let them be offered, in order that this measure may have a little further consideration. There are one or two amendments that I should like myself to suggest to be inserted.

Mr. PALMER. I supposed that we had got to the end of the amendments, and that was the reason I offered mine.

Mr. SAWYER. We might act upon this amendment, and then the Senator from Kansas can offer his amendments.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Before the amendment is voted upon, I shall move to amend it. I move to insert the words suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, because I think they are necessary and proper. I think the amendment has a much wider scope than was stated by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the question will be settled without further discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have not the words before me, but I wish to move such an amendment to the amendment, and take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to withdraw the amendment recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, which he proposed to line 15 of his amendment? If that amendment is withdrawn, and I am in order, I shall renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment would not be in order now. The Senator from California has proposed an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. As soon as the amendment offered by the Senator from California is disposed of, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MILLER, of California. In line 15 of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, after the word "thereto," I move to insert the words "or settlements;" so as to read:

There are no valid conflicting claims thereto or settlements, all such entries, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. After the word "settlements," as inserted by the amendment of the Senator from California, I move to add the words "or applications to enter such lands."

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the reading of the amendment in connection with the amendment just offered by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. After the word "settlements" it is proposed to add "or applications to enter such lands;" so as to make the amendment read if amended:

That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, Executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there are no valid conflicting claims thereto, or settlements, or applications to enter such lands, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon, are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to suggest what might be the possible effect of the amendment of the Senator from Florida. These are lands subject to private entry. They have been sold once at private entry and the Government has received the money for them. If some person, supposing that the first sale was illegal, has slipped up in anticipation of this act and filed an application to purchase the lands again, assuming that they are still public lands, it seems to me that might render the bill entirely nugatory as to such lands.

Mr. CALL. The amendment which I propose is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and it could have no such effect as is suggested by the Senator from Oregon. It simply saves the legal rights of a party who has made the application to enter as against the provisions of this proposed law. It is true there might be a case in which the entry was valid, but certainly being recommended by the Secretary of the Interior it is proper that it should go into this measure, for it saves what may be a legal right in the applicant. There can be no harm done by its adoption.

Mr. CONGER. The object of the amendment offered by my colleague is to save from applications for entry and from purchase lands which have been sold by the United States and paid for by the purchasers, and patents or certificates given, but over which there is some cloud to the title, because the Land Office failed to reoffer the lands at public sale. But for that omission, which perhaps was not in accordance with law, these titles would be as perfect as any patent of the United States could make them.

Since that was understood, since the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office has been rendered that the lands were not in all respects sold according to law, that they ought first to have been reoffered at sale, persons of opinion that they could take away land for which patents had been given and payments made have made applications for entry, have made applications for settlement, and they are doing it every day. The object of the amendment is to secure the rights of those who in good faith under the offer of the Government have purchased the lands, paid for them, received their patents or certificates, and have in all other respects a perfect title, only that the Government failed to offer them at public auction.

Now then, with this proposed amendment suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office every application for entry that has been made since this decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office comes in with a conflicting claim; and wherever such claims have been made (and they have been made by hundreds over the country) they conflict with the title of the original purchasers and throw them out from the benefit of this proposed general amendment. As the Senator from Oregon says, if any one has his title still, and nobody has attempted to jump his claim by an application for a settlement or a pre-emption, it will relieve those, but the others will be thrown out of the protection of the original amendment. I do not think it a wise change; I think it defeats the object to a certain extent of the original amendment, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. CALL. On the statement of the Senator from Michigan, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws his amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I am in sympathy with the purpose the Senator from Michigan had in offering this amendment, and the only thing I fear is that we shall, without intending it, make it too broad.

There are cases where, if we undertake to interfere in controversies, we ought not to make an arbitrary legislative decision as to rights. As I understand this case, the courts have decided that under certain circumstances lands were required to be offered at public sale a second time before they could be subject to private entry, and it is designed now to relieve against the effect of that decision, which was that all private entries made of lands not thus offered a second time were invalid. I think the better way would be, instead of confirming and making valid all these entries, to relieve them against the objection that the lands have not been offered a second time, and then let them take their chance as to whatever other rights they may have or as to whatever other points there may be upon them affecting their legality. I will therefore move to insert after the word "thereto," in line 15, these words:

It shall not be essential to the validity of such purchases or entries that the lands should have been offered at public sale a second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereto," in line 15, and before the amendment already adopted, it is proposed to insert:

It shall not be essential to the validity of such purchases or entries that the lands should have been offered at public sale a second time.

Mr. PLUMB. The effect of that will be, in place of declaring all these entries valid and legal as against all other objections as well as the one that the land has not been offered the second time, we relieve them from the legal effect of that failure to offer at public sale the second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. I call for the reading of the amendment that I offered, as amended by the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] and also the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Kansas, will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto, it shall not be essential to the validity of such purchases or entries that the lands should have been offered at public sale a second time.

Mr. PALMER. I think that involves it so that it will end by making the amendment very obscure.

Mr. HALE. The words last proposed ought to be put in another place.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Let the clause come in after the word "settlement," and the word "thereon" should be added to "settlement." I move to make the correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the word "thereon" be added to his proposed amendment after the word "settlement." Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose it is understood that I desired to strike out all after the word "thereto" and insert what I sent to the desk, and I will say that I do not think the word "purchases" is necessary there, but I find it used in the preceding portion of the amendment. I think the word "entries" has a well known significance and is all that is necessary. These lands must have been entered at what is called private entry; and that is the character of the entry, no matter whether they were paid for in money or paid for by scrip; but I have used the word "purchases" in order to accommodate the amendment to what I find in line 8 preceding. My motion was designed to be to strike out all after the word "thereto" and insert what I have sent to the desk. That, I think, makes the amendment exactly what the Senator from Michigan desires to have it and prevents it from going further than he has in his mind.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "thereto," in line 15 of the amendment, as follows:

The settlement thereon, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

And insert:

It shall not be essential to the validity of such purchases or entries that the lands should have been offered at public sale a second time.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I think the provision was in good shape as it was before. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Lands, recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and it is not at all doubtful. It applies to lands paid for ten or fifteen years ago, and I do not know why we should not say, as the original amendment provides, that they were paid for and regular entries were made. I prefer the language of the original proposition.

Mr. PLUMB. I appeal to the Senator's sense of fairness if it was not said that there was nothing to complain of about these titles until the Supreme Court decided that the lands were not subject to entry for the sole reason that they had not been offered at public sale a second time. If we take away that objection the titles are exactly where the parties who held them before supposed they were; and certainly we ought not to confer a new right. It is enough if we restore these people to what they supposed they had a perfect right to consider were their rights before.

Mr. SLATER. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the practical effect of this proposition, if I understand it correctly. That class of cases where citizens settled upon these lands believing that they were subject to settlement, though not subject to sale, were brought to the Supreme Court, and there it was decided that these entries were defective, and the parties will be entirely ousted if some remedy be not provided.

Another point that I wish to call attention to is this: It is true the Committee on Public Lands upon a particular class of cases approved a bill applying specifically to certain cases. Now it is proposed to make this general, not merely in that particular locality, but throughout the United States. It will be a drag-net. We do not know where it will reach, or what rights it will involve. It is dangerous legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the word "are," in line 15 of the amendment, be stricken out and the word "were" inserted. That is made necessary by the change of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the amendment of the Senator from Michigan will be so modified. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto, or settlements thereon, all such entries and the certificates and patents issued thereon are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. PALMER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Blair,	Dolph,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Brown,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hill,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Wilson.

NAYS—29.

Bayard,	Fair,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Butler,	George,	Kenna,	Vance,
Call,	Groome,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Morgan,
Coke,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Edmunds,	Jackson,	Pugh,

ABSENT—19.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Lamar,	Pike,	Walker.
Farley,	Logan,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that section 1 may be made clearer and less involved by transposing some words in it. I therefore move to insert after the word "that," in line 3, the words "section 2299 and," and to strike out from lines 8 and 9 the words "and section 2299." It is simply a transposition of words to make the sense clearer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to understand it.

Mr. DOLPH. It makes no change whatever. It is only a transposition of words to make the meaning clearer, so that one of the sections repealed shall not come in conflict with one of the sections excepted. The sentence is a little involved as it stands in the bill, and the amendment is only to make it clear.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have the report of the committee upon the bill from which it is taken read for information. It is as short a statement as can be made in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 8. That section 2347 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2347. Every person above the age of twenty-one years, who is a citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, or any association of persons severally qualified as above, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter, by legal subdivisions, any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to such individual person, or three hundred and twenty acres to such association, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $5 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situated more than fifteen miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $10 per acre for such lands as shall be within fifteen miles of such road."

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the reading of the report connected with the bill from which the amendment was taken.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH January 9, 1885:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2483) entitled "A bill to amend section 2347 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the entry of coal lands," have carefully examined the same, and report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The only change in the existing law proposed by the bill is to reduce the price of coal lands from $10 to $5 per acre where the same are situated more than fifteen miles from any completed railroad, and from $20 to $10 per acre where the same are situated within fifteen miles of such completed road.

Under the present law coal land is sold for $10 minimum and $20 maximum per acre, while the most valuable of mineral lands of all other classes are sold at $5 per acre.

So far as your committee can ascertain, there is no good reason for the difference in price which now exists between coal lands and other mineral lands. Coal is a necessary article of general and every-day use, and the interest of the consumers of coal, who constitute a very large proportion of our entire population, demands that the laws for the disposal of coal lands by the Government should be so framed as to induce the sale of the lands and the opening and development of the mines. At present prices the land can not be purchased by any but capitalists.

In the opinion of your committee, should the price be reduced as provided in this bill, the sale of coal lands would be largely increased, the opening and development of coal mines greatly stimulated, and the receipts of the Government from the sale of this class of lands instead of being diminished would be considerably increased.

Mr. DOLPH. I will make a statement in regard to this amendment, and then if there is any serious objection to it let it be made to appear.

I introduced a bill, which went to the Committee on Public Lands and was reported favorably unanimously from that committee, to change the price of coal lands from $10 and $20 per acre, the present price, to $5 and $10. I find that there were only fifty entries of coal lands in the United States last year, although there were several thousand applications to purchase. As was said in the report of the committee, we think there will be much more coal land sold at the reduced price than at the present price, and the lands will be brought within the reach of the poorer classes, whereas they can now be purchased only by capitalists and speculators, so that the Government would receive more money, the coal lands would be developed, and coal would be cheaper.

The proposition is simply to reduce the price of coal lands. In several of the States coal lands are now subject to entry as agricultural lands; in many of the States there are mineral lands which are sold at $2.50 an acre, or are subject to private entry; and there is no other class of mineral lands that costs more than $5 an acre. Gold mines, silver mines, iron mines, and every other class of mineral lands in the United States are sold at not exceeding $5 an acre.

This amendment does not reduce the price of coal lands to that extent, but reduces the price of coal lands within fifteen miles of a railroad to $10 an acre and without those limits to $5 an acre. It reduces the present price one-half. It is a question every Senator can understand upon the statement of it. I have seen nothing but favorable comments on the proposed bill from the public press and from every quarter where it has been noticed.

Mr. HARRISON. When this bill was called up those of us who had not the honor and the privilege of being members of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate understood that it was a measure to repeal the pre-emption and timber-culture clauses of the public lands acts, and to reserve the domain of the United States for homestead entries. That was a proposition general in its character and which every Senator could readily understand, and to which most of us had already given our assent.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Indiana will allow me to say that that was the understanding also of the Committee on Public Lands, and I did not apprehend that there would be legislation proposed here over the entire public domain when this bill was called up.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to have that said by the Senator from Alabama. Now we are asked, by amendments which have been proposed and are being proposed, to enter on the business of revising the land laws of the United States. For one, I desire to say to the Senator in charge of this bill that if we are to have amendments proposed here to which the attention of the Senate has not been directed, to which possibly in part the attention of the Department has not been directed, as to which we have no reports, and as to which the attention of the Senate has not been invited in advance, and of which we can have no information, except the reading of amendments at the Secretary's desk, for one I shall oppose the whole bill.

I do not think it is fair to the Senate to be loading down this bill, which had one single object, an obvious and well understood one, when it was brought before the Senate, by amendments the scope of which we can not understand as they are proposed here. A few moments ago I voted against an amendment. It may be right in itself; it may be proper legislation; but it was new to me, and I could not in the time allowed here acquire that information which was necessary to an intelligent vote, and so I voted "no." I hope this bill may be brought back to its original plan and idea, a bill for the repeal of the timber-culture and pre-emption laws of the United States, and be allowed to pass in that shape.

Mr. MORGAN. I concur with the Senator from Indiana that we are covering entirely too much ground in this bill. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Michigan for the very same reason that the Senator from Indiana has stated. I did not have time to consider that amendment as I thought it ought to be considered, and therefore I was unwilling to act upon an amendment that was so radical in its character, and might have such very strong effects on titles already granted. The amendment ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands, and be considered there before it is put on here, and so ought this amendment of the Senator from Oregon, and I hope that the Senator from Oregon will content himself with allowing the Senate to take a vote upon the two propositions that were involved in the bill originally.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that the status of this measure is this: The proposition was introduced by me as a separate bill, and it went to the Committee on Public Lands. I understood the Senator from Alabama to favor it in committee. There was a unanimous report upon it at all events. The amendment was printed and laid upon the desks of Senators a week ago. Therefore the measure has the unanimous sanction of the committee, and furthermore I understood that the agreement was that the committee would endeavor to put some of these important matters of legislation relating to the public lands on this bill, it being a House bill, in order to secure action upon them, and I so stated publicly when I proposed to call up the bill. I have offered the amendment. It is an easy matter to vote it down if there is any objection to it.

Then I have submitted and had printed another amendment which I intended to propose, being also a measure reported favorably from that committee, amending the timber and stone act, but out of deference to the opinions which have been expressed I will not offer it. As to the amendment before the Senate, let it be voted on. If there are any objections to it, let it be voted down. I can not see any; I have heard none. It has, I repeat, the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Public Lands in a report which has been read, and it has been printed as a proposed amendment to this bill, and has been on the desks of Senators for a week.

Mr. PLUMB. I say now, as I said to the Senator from Oregon privately, that I thought it was unwise to offer these amendments to this bill. I foresaw I thought exactly what we see now, that Senators would not be willing to enlarge the scope of the bill to include matters about which there had been no public discussion and about which there was no immediate emergency for action, at all events as compared with that which is believed to exist in regard to the main questions covered by this bill. I think now that it would be the wise thing to accept the suggestion made here on the Senate floor, more particularly because these matters about which the Senator from Oregon is specially concerned in regard to his own locality, the coal lands, &c., are of a kind which can be permitted to wait, however just and meritorious they may be, without in any manner inconveniencing anybody or being in opposition to the interest of the Government. I think, therefore, the best way is not only for the purpose of the passage of the bill here, but as a matter of propriety for the regularity of proceedings in our business here as well as elsewhere, because we have to have the concurrence of the House, that the bill should be kept as free as possible from extraneous matter.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, while concurring on general principles with the Senator from Kansas in regard to attaching extra legislation to this bill, I would say that the amendment offered by me and which by implication he said was not very pressing is really very pressing. It is to cure a supposed defect in the titles to a great portion of the northern part of the State of Michigan. Men have cleared farms and developed land, made it valuable, and now they are subject to conflict of title, because the United States officers did not comply with the law in the matter of advertising that the land should be offered at public sale before being restored to private entry.

That is the whole animus of my amendment, and it seems to me that all conflicts are provided for, that no injustice can be done to any one, because it only provides for those cases where the United States is one party and the present holders of the patents are the other. If there is a conflicting claim, it is thrown out; it does not come within the scope of the amendment. The object of appending an extra section to the bill was to enable the House to act on it, this being a House bill, as there is no probability of getting consideration for the proposition of the amendment in the House as a separate bill at this late period of the session.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan whether the proposition he made in his amendment has been favorably reported in the Senate from the Committee on Public Lands as a separate measure?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. At this session?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir; I think that is so, and I offered the amendment to this bill for the purpose of getting legislation. It is also recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. DAWES. When this bill came before the Senate I hailed it as a very beneficent measure, one that I thought was demanded more than almost any pending in this body. I very much fear that it is going to be defeated. There are two ways of killing a bill; one is by overloading it, and another is by voting against it. One is just about as efficacious as the other. Next to crowding all the legislation you can think of into an appropriation bill because you can not otherwise get it through another body very well, is the attempt to put all sorts of legislation on one bill; and in a body that does not have any rule which requires amendments to be germane to the main body of the bill, it is a great temptation. In the existing state of things, having as proper a regard for the rules of other bodies as parliamentary law permits us to have, we might just as well become a committee of consolidation and put all we want in one bill—there is no rule against it—and put that on an appropriation bill and send it to the other branch, and then we may have accomplished something.

Now the amendment which the Senator from Oregon proposes is doubtless a very good measure. What makes me think it is is because the Senator from Oregon advocates it. I do not know anything further about it. But this is quite certain: if every good measure that our friend from Oregon advocates is to be put upon this bill we are down at once. Here is a plain proposition for Congress to say whether the public lands shall be reserved hereafter for homestead settlers, and we have been at work upon that. My friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says we have stricken that out of the bill. Pray, then, what is in the bill? If this bill so loaded does not carry even that proposition, then we are in the position of seeking and inviting all those who can employ men for three or four months to go and settle down upon the public lands in the name of a pre-emptor or a homesteader to gather in the public lands by the thousands and thousands of acres, those lands which we have proclaimed are to be for the settler, until all our public lands shall become to be what three-fourths of them are now, held by large corporations that never die and never have any heirs to whom they can be distributed after death, and they will be held in all coming time by counties, by States, by tracts too large to make anything but a great Western State.

My friend from Oregon seems to have lost sight of that great feature of the bill and the only feature of it originally, in the desire to get those good and beneficent measures which he has considered himself all together in one bill, so that when "be it enacted" shall become efficacious and a law, little else will be required for us to do here save perhaps to look after the one bill which came from the other body to prevent the further appropriation of the public lands in vast quantities by foreign holders and by corporate bodies. Every measure my friend from Oregon has brought here has so commended itself to me that I have voted for it blindly; but now I ask him to let us have the privilege of taking his bills seriatim and try them one at a time. I give him my word that I shall alter my own judgment and course if I fail to follow him step by step if he will allow me that privilege. But let us have the question decided here by yeas and nays whether the business of appropriating public lands in these vast quantities under false pretenses and false affidavits shall continue till the last piece of our domain is gone.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for his expression of confidence in myself, but I wish to say that I think I have proved myself diligent in attempting to put this measure in proper shape, and pressing it on the attention of the Senate, and this is the first amendment to the House bill proposing new legislation I have offered. This amendment is I think germane to the bill. The bill under consideration is a bill to amend the land laws of the United States. The amendment is intended for the same purpose it was introduced some time since in the Senate; it has had the consideration not only of myself but of the Committee on Public Lands; it was reported favorably and it was presented, printed, and laid upon the desks of Senators as an amendment for their examination. I do not think that it would be either improper or contrary to the rules of the Senate to attach it to this bill, but I defer to the judgment of Senators who say the measure ought not to be attached to this bill for fear of jeopardizing its passage, and withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to make a few remarks in relation to the general bill as it came from the House.

The amendments that have been attached to the bill in the main received my approbation in the Committee on Public Lands. As separate measures, standing upon their own bottom and by themselves, I should have voted for them; but no provision can be attached to the original bill that can secure my support.

The Senator from Massachusetts speaks of the blindness of men. Why, sir, there is none so blind as the Senator from Massachusetts himself. Of all the monstrosities that have been proposed in this Congress or in any other Congress since I have been here, the proposition to repeal the pre-emption laws to my mind is the most monstrous.

Reflect a moment, sir. This country has grown to its present strength, more homes have been acquired under your pre-emption laws than under any other land laws you have passed; more of the West has been settled, greater prosperity has come to it under the influence and operations of your pre-emption laws than under any other, not excepting your boasted homestead law, valuable as that is.

Sir, if I were going to put a title to this bill that would delineate its effect, I should say, "An act to facilitate the sale of lands to corporations," because that will be the effect of the bill and its legitimate scope and operation in the far West, and I am surprised that the people's House, coming up from the people as they do, the people who understand these laws, should have been entrapped into the passage of such a bill as this. It is true there have been great frauds, numerous frauds perpetrated under these laws; but as great as they have been, as numerous as they have been, the evils that come from that source can not exceed the evils that will come to the people from their repeal.

From my boyhood to the present time I have always lived in sections of the United States where these laws were of daily application, where people were settling upon the lands of the United States and acquiring homes under them. The past season I mingled with the people. They asked me whether it was probable that the pre-emption law would be repealed. I told them that I feared it would be. Many of them said that they hoped not; that although they had been long in the West, they had not yet been able to avail themselves of its provisions and wished to do so.

Now, sir, what is the effect? Within the past twenty-five or thirty years you have covered the great body of the West with your land-grant railroads. No longer in the State of Illinois, the State of Iowa, and many other of the Western States can either a homestead or a pre-emption be procured, while the land-grant railroads have plenty of lands for sale. The people want to acquire lands on the public domain, and in proportion as you restrict their right to acquire lands, just in that proportion you facilitate the sale by land-grant corporations of the lands they are now holding and are seeking to sell.

There is another consideration to be remembered, that the lands you have yet remaining for settlement are not the rich and alluvial lands of the West as a general thing. Here and there you will find a little valley that settlers would like to have, as valuable as the lands of the Mississippi Valley; but the larger proportion, probably nine-tenths of the public land remaining, is fit only for pasturage and grazing, in which in perhaps not one quarter section in a hundred can you get a place large enough to have a field of forty acres under the plow. It is said that one hundred and sixty acres is large enough for a farm. Indeed, sir, it is enough if you can get such lands as there are in Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, and many other States; but when you go to the great plains of the West it requires much more land for a man to settle down upon and make a home. Under the operations of your pre-emption law and your homestead law together, a man could go beyond the settlements and in the course of two or three years he could avail himself of both statutes and acquire title to three hundred and twenty acres, and even then he would not be able to make as good a living as he could upon even forty acres of better lands in the West.

Mr. DAWES. I ask my friend from Oregon if he would not need a tree-culture law and also a desert-land law to carry it out in full?

Mr. SLATER. I have seen the operation of the tree-culture law, and I do not believe, as a rule, that it has been of any benefit. I think of all the laws that have been a subterfuge to cover up fraudulent entries, that has been the most vicious of all. That law I would be willing to vote to repeal, and I have been disposed to vote for the repeal of the desert act, and yet I am very doubtful whether it would be a wise provision, for the largest area of your lands now remaining for sale is of a desert character, upon which you must take water before you can expect anything to grow in the nature of cereal crops or vegetables of any description. One man, even if he gets water for one hundred and sixty acres, will not perhaps have one-quarter of that land fit for the plow. Then I say of the land you have left, a man needs from three hundred and twenty acres to a whole section of land to be able to even have the amount of stock that many a farmer in Illinois will keep and maintain well on eighty acres of land.

And yet the cry has gone up and the House has been entrapped into repealing this, one of the most beneficent laws ever put upon your statute-book, a law which has built more homes, has created greater wealth, and is more important to-day than it ever has been so far as it applies to the sections yet to be settled. But I suppose the men who represent the States that have grown up under this law have come into being since the generation that settled there. Their States under the operation of this law have grown to be wealthy. They listen to these stories, more or less true, that come from the Department, of frauds; and there are frauds, many of them, but we should meet them in a different way. They should be ferreted out and the men who perpetrate them should be punished and sent to the penitentiary. Do not repeal your law. Amend your law so as to punish those who commit frauds, and save to the men who need homes one of the advantages and opportunities of acquiring a home on the few public lands that remain to the United States.

I hope that the bill will be most emphatically defeated.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill if enacted will effect an entire revolution in the present public land system of the United States, and many of my constituents and others interested in the homestead and pre-emption system have written me stating that arrangements have been partially completed by which they expect to go on the public domain, and suggestion has been made that perhaps equity would require that in a matter as important as this the time when it is to go into effect should be a little postponed. If it would not be disagreeable to the Senator from Oregon who has charge of the bill [Mr. DOLPH], I would like to move as an amendment that the bill, if it becomes a law, shall take effect at some time in the near future, say on the 1st of June or July, 1885.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not speak for the committee; but as far as I am concerned I have no personal objection to that proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. I will then move in line 21 of section 1 to strike out the words "passage of this act" after the word "the," and insert the words "1st day of July, 1885."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 21, after the word "the," it is proposed to strike out "passage of this act" and insert "1st day of July, 1885;" so that the clause will read:

Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1885, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In line 7 of section 2, after the word "the," I move to strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert as in the former amendment, "1st day of July, 1885."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In section 4, line 7, I move to strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert, as in the previous amendment, the words "1st day of July, 1885."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to reserve for a separate vote that part of the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out the latter clause of section 3 of the bill. I wish simply to have the question divided so that the vote on striking out the last clause of the section may be taken separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas refer to the clause commencing in line 17?

Mr. PLUMB. I refer to the clause commencing in line 17, which reads:

And an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved. How shall the vote be taken on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? ["In gross."] The question will be taken upon concurring in the amendments in gross if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. At some stage of the bill I should like to have it read as it stands since it has been amended.

Mr. ALLISON. That had better be done now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better be so read now, because it strikes me that the bill has been stripped of all its favorable features but one, and I do not know what amendments have been put upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill as amended will be read.

The Secretary read the bill as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice in the reading of the first section of the bill that an amendment has been inserted requiring the land offices to receive everywhere certificates issued for surveys of public lands. I should like to have that clause read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the bill will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions) in the disposal of public lands at the land offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and pre-emption rights.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what those sections of the Revised Statutes are.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator from Iowa was not in when this matter was discussed. Those are sections which authorize any person to furnish the necessary money to extend the public surveys. The money is placed at the disposal of the surveyor-general of the district. The surveys are made in accordance with the laws of the United States and under the supervision of the surveyor-general, and returned to the Department and approved as the other cases. For these moneys certificates have been issued. There are now outstanding, as I am informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in a letter which was just read at the desk, about $400,000 in amount of these certificates. They are made assignable and may be used to pay for pre-emption claims and commuted homesteads in the district where the money was paid for the surveys.

The proviso does not extend the limit to which they may be used; but as a compensation for the repeal of the pre-emption law, and in order that the certificates may be disposed of for public lands, it extends them to the entry of other public lands where cash entries are made.

Mr. ALLISON. In the district where the surveys are made?

Mr. DOLPH. In the district.

Mr. ALLISON. I happen to know that there were great frauds in the surveys of public lands in the arid regions of our country and these certificates were spread over those portions of the country where lands were valuable. Some years ago we provided that the certificates should only be receivable in the surveying district where the survey was made, so that if people were engaged in surveying arid lands which nobody wanted for settlement they should apply the certificates to payment for such land and not be allowed to transfer them to the rich regions of Oregon, Dakota, and Minnesota.

Mr. DOLPH. This retains that provision of existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to know that I was mistaken in listening to a casual reading of the provision. As I understand the Senator from Oregon now, it does not enlarge the scope of the certificates in any degree.

Mr. DOLPH. Not as to the place where they may be used.

Mr. ALLISON. Not as to the place where they may be used.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment was drawn in the Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except that which was reserved for a separate vote, the clause commencing in line 17, and embracing lines 18, 19, and 20 of section 3.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the clause beginning in line 17 of section 3, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PLUMB. The act of 1879 required the publication by a homesteader or pre-emptioner of a notice in a newspaper for a certain number of weeks before his entry could be perfected, thus imposing a cost of from $4 to $6 upon each one of them. The bill as it came from the House repealed that act. The third section was stricken out by the Senate committee, I consenting in company with other members of the committee, without observing at the time that the section as stricken out contained that provision. I think the law of 1879 ought to be repealed, and I therefore should be glad to have the Senate reject the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and repeal that provision of law. I do not think the provision has operated as it was designed it should operate, to prevent frauds; and inasmuch as we now limit the entries on public lands to one form, and that a homestead, and as no title can be acquired under any circumstances without an occupancy of at least thirty months, there would not seem to be any necessity for the publication which is now required, and which was designed primarily to apply to homestead and pre-emption entries which could be made after an occupancy of six months.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Kansas made a statement which strikes me with surprise. If it is true I should be much more in favor of the bill than I have been. Do I understand that if the bill is passed no land can be entered except under the homestead law?

Mr. PLUMB. Only under the homestead law.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, as I understand it, every particle of public land can be bought with money after the passage of the bill just as readily and upon the same terms as it may be bought now.

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Kansas could convince me of that, it would give me great satisfaction. As I understand, the Senator from Oregon acquiescing in the motion of the Senator from Missouri, the Senate struck out all the provisions of the bill which affected in any way whatever the entry of public lands for money, and under the bill as it now stands any corporation in this country or any other, or any citizen of this country may enter any land for money which is now subject to entry in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. I made my statement too broad. I will qualify it; but still it does not touch the point that is under consideration. The committee inserted a provision which was designed to reach, and which only did reach lands in Southern States, because only in those States (except perhaps as to a small tract of land in Washington Territory) is there any land subject to private entry without settlement.

Mr. SHERMAN. For money?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; for money without settlement. We designed to put all the lands in the Southern States which are now subject to private entry (and they are chiefly timber lands, I believe) under the operation of the homestead law. The Senate failed to agree to the amendment of the committee in that regard; but in all the Northwest, and in all the other States of the Union, under the bill no land can be acquired except by occupancy for at least thirty months.

Mr. SHERMAN. Can not that be under the existing law? Is there no land now in the Northern States subject to private entry without settlement?

Mr. PLUMB. As I said, there may be possibly a handful of land in Washington Territory. With that exception I think there is not an acre in any Northern or Northwestern State or Territory which can be purchased under what is known as private entry by the payment of a dollar and a quarter an acre irrespective of settlement.

Mr. SHERMAN. That statement surprises me.

Mr. PLUMB. I was going to add that the provision of 1879 was enacted in order to throw some safeguard around the execution of the pre-emption law by requiring a publication by the pre-emptioner and also by the homesteader, because it embraces them both; but it was designed especially for the pre-emption claimant, requiring him to give notice of the time when he would make application to complete his entry under the pre-emption law. That was deemed best because of the frauds that were being committed under the pre-emption law and by reason of the belief that such a publication would to some extent prevent them.

Now we have repealed the pre-emption law; it is no longer operative, and no one can acquire title to land, except in Southern States where lands are open to private entry, unless by a settlement which shall not be for less than thirty months in duration. That, I believe, is a sufficient notice to all the world of the intention of the party, and will give ample opportunity for the protection of the Government without imposing upon the homesteader the necessity of paying from four to six dollars to a newspaper to publish his intention to enter the land.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Kansas explain the fifth section of the bill as reported by the committee?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, failed to insert section 5 of the bill, reported by the Committee on Public Lands, as an amendment. That proposed section was in these words:

That after the passage of this act no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public auction or be subject to private entry; and all offered public lands are hereby withdrawn from market, and shall be disposed of as unoffered public lands.

That was designed to prevent the entry for money of the lands now subject to private entry, of which there are none except, as I said, a very small quantity besides those in the Southern States, chiefly in the States of Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator from Kansas say that the statement of the Senator from Ohio has no application except in those States?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] shows me a statement he made yesterday, and he says there are 500,000 acres in Northern Michigan and Minnesota.

Mr. PLUMB. As I said, there may possibly be some lands heretofore offered for public sale, but they are within very limited areas, and the law as to those is not enlarged. I was not aware of the existence of any such land up there, but it must be very small in extent.

I think myself that the provision as reported from the committee ought to have been adopted. I believe it is wiser for the State of Missouri, which is especially under consideration here, and all of the Southern States, that every single acre of land in those States shall be subject to acquisition only on condition of settlement, but the Senate thought otherwise, and therefore those lands are not covered by the bill, but are left exactly as the bill found them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Senate made as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out the clause which has been read.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. In order to take the provision out of its anomalous position in the bill, I move that it be inserted at the close of the bill as a separate section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the clause which by a vote of the Senate has been retained in the bill be transposed to the end of the bill as a separate section. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that the clause be amended by striking out the first word, the word "and," and substituting "that," so as to read: "That an act entitled," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made by unanimous consent, if there be no objection.

Mr. PALMER. I move to add as an additional section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto, or settlements thereon, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon, are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HARRISON. As I had occasion to say a few moments ago, this proposition comes to me and, I think from what has been said, to other Senators in the nature of a surprise. I inquired a little while ago whether as an independent bill it had ever received the favorable report of the Committee on Public Lands, and was advised by some members of the committee that it had, and by others that it had not. I think, however, inquiry shows that perhaps not in the exact form, but in something like its present form, it was reported favorably to the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands, but unaccompanied by any report.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will permit me I will state that this was a distinct bill originally, being Senate bill No. 2509. It was reported by the Committee on Public Lands with certain amendments, and it is now offered as an amendment to the bill before the Senate as a better means of securing legislation on the subject than in any other way.

Mr. HARRISON. So I understood; but the point I make is that it was unaccompanied by any report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH. There were two bills containing a recital of the same provision, reported from the Committee on Public Lands. There was a report made on one of them, I am not able to say on which just now. The subject is covered, however, by a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. HARRISON. The inaccuracy, if there be an inaccuracy in the statement which I have been making, grows out of the fact that I did not succeed in getting definite information on inquiry from members of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. I was advised by one member of that committee that no report had accompanied the measure, and by another that the bill had not——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. If a report has been made, can we not find it? Have we not got the record?

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that the report is here, it having been presented to me now by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]; I sent for and have before me now, but have not had time to examine it—as the book has been placed on my desk since I rose—the case of Eldred vs. Sexton, in 19 Wallace, 169. I will send the book to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who is upon the Committee on Public Lands. He may examine the case and see what its bearing upon the question is. It seems that in 1880 an act was passed which is found in the twenty-first Statutes at Large, page 237, and the third section of that act is as follows:

That the price of lands now subject to entry which were raised to $2.50 per acre, and put in market prior to January, 1861, by reason of the grant of alternate sections for railroad purposes, is hereby reduced to $1.25 per acre.

I do not understand whether the trouble here is that these lands were sold at the reduced or minimum rate of $1.25 an acre, having at one time been withdrawn from public entry, and were entered at that rate, and that the law has since been declared that they were not subject to sale at a dollar and a quarter an acre, but should have been put upon the market at the double minimum price, as it is called, of $2.50 an acre. My impression is that they could not have been sold at private sale for a dollar and a quarter an acre, because they had not again been offered at public sale. I may be entirely mistaken about the difficulty, and I am seeking information. Do I understand—the Senator from Michigan can advise me—whether the lands are subject to entry by persons at double the minimum price without being offered again at public auction, and whether the question is simply one of a dollar and a quarter an acre or whether it is one which affects the title altogether?

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I think the text of the amendment will inform him. The language is:

And such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, &c.

The whole difficulty intended to be remedied is where parties have bought in good faith lands that have been restored by act of Congress or the order of the Land Office to market at $1.25 an acre, and the Supreme Court has since decided that those lands should have been reoffered at public sale before being submitted to private entry.

Mr. HARRISON. Before being submitted to private entry at $1.25 an acre, but not before being sold at $2.50 an acre, so that the difficulty, I judge, must be that they were put upon the market and sold at $1.25 an acre before the President had proclaimed them as subject to entry and before they had been offered again at public sale; and the trouble is not one affecting the title, but is the question between $2.50 and

$1.25 an acre. I may be altogether wrong; I am simply attempting to gather the state of the case, which, as I said, has come to me as a surprise, because my attention had not been attracted to it, it being a bill that had not yet been reached and no notice had been given that its consideration would be pressed. I want to get at what the facts are.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The question is whether those who paid a dollar and a quarter an acre have a good title.

Mr. HARRISON. Exactly.

Mr. HALE. The withdrawal from sale may have been terminated and the lands restored by a proclamation of the President.

Mr. HARRISON. I say to the Senator from Maine that the proclamation does not have to precede the sale at $2.50 an acre. The lands may be sold at the double minimum price without any proclamation, and without being offered at public sale as I understand; but before they can be sold at the minimum price, $1.25 an acre, there must be a proclamation restoring them, and they must be once offered at public sale.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator will allow me, under the $2.50 act they must then be offered at public sale before they can be entered at $2.50, but by law they have been withdrawn from that class at $2.50, or the double minimum, and may be entered at $1.25. In either case, if they had not been offered at public sale at $2.50, they must be so offered before sale, or else the claimant must seek a suit in court to perfect his title. Having by law been reduced to $1.25 they must then be offered at public sale. So the Supreme Court have decided. It is not a question whether the Government shall receive $2.50 an acre or $1.25 an acre, but it is whether the mere neglect to offer the land at public sale shall be cured by a statute. It is a cloud on the title which it is designed to remove.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Michigan may be right. The impression I had was that where the lands were offered at the double minimum price it was not a condition precedent to a private entry that they should have been offered at public sale. Perhaps the Senator is right in saying that it was. I think we ought to have from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands or the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is a member of that committee, some clear statement of just what the trouble is, how much land is involved in the proposed legislation, what the attitude of the Department with reference to the question is, and then I think we shall be in a condition to vote upon the amendment. I voted against it before upon the impression derived from some members of the committee that it was unnecessarily broad for the particular purpose mentioned, and especially in its concluding words which undertake to confirm absolutely certain things. Instead of simply saying that the lands shall stand as if they had been offered at public sale and let everything else be as it is now, the amendment as I understand it goes further, and not simply relieves these people from this condition, but it assumes to confirm certain titles.

It seems to me that if such is the purpose of the provision it should simply say that in cases where sales have been made the fact of previous failure to offer the lands at public sale should not be held to invalidate the title, but that such cases should be heard and determined by the General Land Office precisely as if the lands had been offered at public sale. That would leave everything else unaffected. It would leave the man who had complied with the land laws in every other particular but this one in a condition to perfect his title, and would not put us in danger of going further by assuming to confirm titles by act of Congress which should stand, after we have removed this defect, upon their own merits and upon the papers which have been filed.

Mr. PALMER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Indiana, as he has not probably read the communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that that officer says under date of January 4, 1885, that—

> The confirmation proposed is that which does not affect the rights or claims of third parties, and does not propose to adjudicate nor make rules for adjudication in cases of conflicting claims, but leaves the respective claimants in such cases to the operation and remedies of existing laws.

It applies merely to cases where the United States may remedy the laches or derelictions of its officers.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan whether that communication is not addressed to the Senate bill and not to his amendment, and whether the terms of that bill do not differ in some respects from the amendment?

Mr. PALMER. There has been a very slight change for the protection of the settlers. The amendments that were made were of a character to include a larger number of conflicts, if possible—that is, to make the measure of conflict more extensive. In the original bill it was applied to cases where there were no conflicting claims. In the proposition as amended as in Committee of the Whole it was put in as "valid conflicting claims or settlements thereon."

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to say just one word in relation to the pending amendment. I have had a number of letters from constituents of mine who say to me that they have paid their money for lands to which they have not a perfect title, and that this measure will enable them to perfect their title. So far as they are concerned, unquestionably they are innocent purchasers, and they ought, I think, to have a good title. Therefore I shall favor the amendment.

CIVIL-SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the act of Congress approved January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil-service of the United States," the Civil-Service Commission has made to the President its second annual report.

That report is herewith transmitted.

The commission is in the second year of its existence. The President congratulates the country upon the success of its labors, commends the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress, and asks for an appropriation to continue the work.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed and with the accompanying document referred to the Committee on Printing.

EIGHTH NEW YORK HEAVY ARTILLERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives returning Senate joint resolution No. 92 with an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 10, 1885.

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the Senate (No. 92) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery, and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War," do pass with the following amendment:

In line 4 of the bill strike out the word "Beam" and insert the word "Ream;" so as to read: "And which were captured by confederate forces at Ream Station, on the Weldon Railroad, August 25, 1864."

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose that is simply an error in nomenclature. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House and agree to the request of the House for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

RECOMMITMENT OF A PETITION.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent to recommit a petition to the Committee on Pensions. I have the consent of the member of the committee who made the report in the case. It is the petition of Martha A. F. Terrett, widow of Colville Terrett, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, praying for an increase of pension. The petition was reported adversely by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on the 16th of January, 1885, and was ordered to lie on the table. I desire to have it recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate heretofore taken, laying on the table the petition referred to by him, be reconsidered and that the petition be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OLIVER S. FLORENCE.

Mr. COLQUITT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of —— dollars to Oliver S. Florence, of the Capitol police, for extra services in guarding the room in which the electoral votes were kept from December 4, 1884, to February 11, 1885.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2633) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers," approved March 3, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2634) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BINDING OF GLOBES.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to have bound at the Government Printing Offices 650 volumes of the Congressional Globe furnished to the Senate Library under the joint resolution approved May 16, 1884.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. BLAIR and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber culture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan declares that he desires this amendment put upon the bill for the purpose of getting it through this session of Congress, and he puts it on a House bill in order that he may have a better opportunity of passing it. I do not know that I should be opposed to the amendment of the Senator, considered as a separate proposition, but I think it is hardly proper to put it on this bill. It is a separate subject of legislation entirely; has reference to a different condition of public lands from that which is presented in the bill sent over from the House and amended and reported back to the Senate; and more than that it appears to be a sort of special and local measure involving particular grants in particular States.

I am apprehensive that if we declare forfeitures of some of these railroad grants, as we have been doing and are expected to do, if we put this measure through the Senate now we shall find it in the way of some particular legislation that we desire to put upon those special land-grant forfeiture bills. The measure in itself appears to be a just one, but I would prefer very much to have the roads named to which it is to be made applicable. It clearly applies only to cases where railroad grants have been made, roads have been located, and afterward the locations changed, and thereafter, without any new order of offering the lands for sale, they have been entered at private entry in the land office.

Mr. SAWYER. The Senator is a little mistaken. It is broader than that.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, it is very broad.

Mr. SAWYER. It will affect more lands than the Senator supposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I notice in the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan that he insists upon the words "valid conflicting claims"—"there are no valid conflicting claims thereto"—and the words "on settlements" come in at some point, I do not know precisely where.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I will say that I did not insist on that. I put that in at the suggestion of other Senators. The object was to confirm all these titles, not only where there was no conflict, but where a conflict had been had and had been determined in favor of the party. I thought it was a little superfluous, but I put it in at the suggestion of others.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no reason that I can conceive of why, where a party has in good faith by the consent of the local land officers paid his money and got a certificate for entry of lands that were not withdrawn and afterward became virtually but not legally lands that were offered for sale, he should not have his certificate, and why the Government should not relieve him unless in the mean time some conflicting claim has arisen in favor of some other person; but I am apprehensive that this very sweeping legislation will include such cases as that, and that we shall be legislating here to give effect to certain titles which otherwise would not be of any validity as against other individuals who are making honest, bona fide claims to the land; as, for instance, giving effect to a title where a person has entered it at a dollar and a quarter an acre, and another person has bought the same land at two dollars and a half an acre. The case of Eldred vs. Sexton, 19 Wallace, which has been referred to by the Senator from Indiana, seems to lay down the law very explicitly upon this question just as it was stated by the Senator from Oregon. I will read the syllabus:

The fundamental principle established by the act of Congress of April 24, 1820, and since governing the matter of sales of the public lands, that private entries are not permitted until after the lands have been exposed to public auction at the price for which they are afterward sold, held to be applicable to a case—that of the grant by Congress, June 3, 1856, of alternate sections designated by odd numbers, to the State of Wisconsin for the aid of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway.

The point in the decision which is applicable to the present case is as follows:

There, after the line of the railroad was located and the price of sections within six miles designated by even numbers doubled—that is to say, fixed at $2.50 per acre—and after these were offered at public sale at that price and remained unsold, so that thenceforth they became open to private entry at $2.50, but not at less, the line of the road was changed by joint resolution of Congress, leaving outside of the six-mile limits certain of these even sections; the joint resolution providing that the even sections of public lands reserved to the United States by the act of June 3, 1856 (the original grant), along the originally located route of railroad, and along which no railroad has been constructed, shall hereafter be sold at $1.25 per acre.

It was—

Held, notwithstanding this provision, that the "fundamental principle" above spoken of was of so pervading a character that although these sections, while within the six-mile limit, had been offered at public sale at $2.50 and refused, they were not open to private entry now that by the change of location they were without that limit, until they had been offered for public sale at $1.25 per acre, and had been left unsold.

So it is established by this decision that the prevailing practice of the Government shall obtain, as a rule of construction of the public land laws, that lands must be reoffered by the Government before they are the subject of private entry. Where the price has been reduced from $2.50 to $1.25 they must be reoffered, although they were once offered at a dollar and a quarter an acre. That is a formality that must be gone through with by the Department before the lands can be said to be subject to private entry. That is a decision against which now the Senator from Michigan is asking relief, and in a proper case I concede that he is entitled to relief. The only difficulty I have about the matter is that it is provided here that there shall be no other valid conflicting claims. Now, it may be that some persons have come in and offered to buy these lands or actually bought them and paid $2.50 an acre for them, while other persons have come in and bought lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre—different prices according to the construction placed on these acts by the local land officers.

The question arises in my mind if we pass this amendment we are legislating to decide upon private titles between private individuals, and that is the point of the case about which I have apprehension. I would very much prefer, therefore, that the particular facts in the particular case against which we are to relieve should be brought forward. If there is a particular railway grant in Michigan where the line of the road has been changed, and in consequence of that certain lands have been thrown out of the limits that were included for a time, and therefore withdrawn from market, let a bill be brought here for the purpose of remedying that particular case. We can understand then the whole subject; but because such a mischief as that may have been wrought in Michigan, to make that the basis of general legislation to affect all classes of claimants throughout the United States it seems to me is rather a hazardous business.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama——

Mr. MORGAN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask how he understands this amendment. It reads "that wherever lands have been withdrawn from settlement," &c. Does the Senator understand that to apply only to a case where that has already been done, or should we be making a provision of law that would attach whenever other lands are withdrawn from sale? It strikes me that the phraseology is not very clear if it is intended to apply only to existing cases.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the language of the act is broad enough to include all cases in the retrospect as well as in the future.

Mr. HARRISON. Then certainly that is an additional objection, and we are attempting to provide a remedy for a particular case and are establishing a law that is to apply to the future cases that may occur hereafter.

Mr. PALMER. It seems to me that both the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Indiana are at fault in their interpretation of this language. I do not see how such phraseology as this can refer to anything in the future:

That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States, &c., * * * and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, &c.—

where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price, &c., * * * said lands have been purchased, &c.

I do not see how that can apply to the future.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose that ten years after this date an officer of the Government reading this act should conclude that it was of continuous application, and that if its words had reference to the past they would refer to that period of time between now and ten years to come. Still that is an easy matter to correct by putting in the word "heretofore." There is no trouble about getting at the meaning of the Senator's amendment, no trouble in making it entirely explicit. That I understand him to state is the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. PALMER. I would suggest that the Senator from Alabama just insert that. I will accept that; or say "where that has hitherto been done."

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I would ask who is to decide on the validity of these conflicting claims? Are we not sowing a crop of litigation here by changing the law so as to relate back to titles that have already been acquired? What forum is to decide on the validity of these conflicting claims so as to determine whether this act validates a grant which was hitherto invalid, under the decision in Eldred vs. Sexton? I am apprehensive that we are creating quite a broad field of litigation by this form of legislation, and unless I knew the particular facts of the case to which this amendment would be applicable I should feel unwilling to sustain it. I might be willing to vote for a bill that was apparently just, as just as this, where the only question in the case was between the Government of the United States and the person who claimed title. Here is a man who holds a certificate of entry, we will say, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, or any other amount, paid for at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. In a moment. If he has paid for his land at $1.25 an acre and holds his certificate, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that the title is invalid because that land had not been a second time offered in market. As between the Government of the United States and the holder of that certificate I am willing to confirm the title. But suppose that in the mean time some person has come in and acquired a title to this same tract of land under the laws of the United States, as they are construed by the Supreme Court. I do not wish now by legislation to go back and interfere with that title, to change the law so that it will have some retrospective effect upon that title. That would not be a proper thing for Congress to do. We had better take up the certificates by refunding the money; and in fact there is a general law which authorizes and requires the refunding of money in cases of this kind where entries have been improvidently made; or if persons have gone on and made improvements on the land it is better for Congress to pay for the improvements and to do justice fully in this particular than it is to interpose its authority and the weight of its opinion in behalf of one claimant of the land against another, both claiming under the Government, one claiming under the law and the other contrary to law.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. He will see by the phraseology of the amendment that this only applies to cases where the United States is one party and the purchaser the other party, that where there are any conflicting claims they are not included, nor is the title cured or affected in any way by this measure.

Mr. MORGAN. That is correct as the bill was originally reported where there is any conflicting claim, but we have now the word "valid," or rather "any valid conflicting claims," and that requires some court to decide it; that requires some authority on the part of the Government or somebody else to decide on the validity of that conflicting claim. If the Senator should limit the question entirely between the purchaser from the Government and the Government so that the controversy that might arise in respect of it between two private citizens would not get into the case possibly, then I should be satisfied with it.

I am willing, if a man has made an entry at a dollar and a quarter an acre, and that is now the price of the land, that he should have his certificate or should have his patent, provided some person else in the mean time has not come in and acquired a right to the land; and if the amendment should be limited entirely to cases between the Government of the United States and a claimant, I am willing that this should be considered as a valid title as against the Government. But where there is any person else who is interested at all, I should object to having the matter settled in that way.

I do not wish now to legislate so as to give to a man a title that was invalid at the time he got it. I am willing to pay him for the land; I am willing to compensate him for all the damage he has sustained, but not to take the title from some person else and transfer it to him.

That is my difficulty about the amendment, and I think it will be much better for the Senator to allow this matter to be considered on a separate bill, and let us have the facts of the particular case to which the bill is to be applied. I should like to have the railroad company named, to have all the facts and circumstances of the particular case stated to Congress in order that we might know precisely what we were doing. Here is a proposition that covers the whole territory of the United States, and I think it will be found very inconvenient in respect to some of the legislation we have already enacted and some that it is proposed to enact.

Mr. VEST. I think if this matter is laid over until to-morrow I can make some valuable contributions in the way of information upon the subject. I have some papers in regard to it which I received some time ago, and I laid them away, in reference to this question coming up in the Senate; but I have them not now in the Chamber. I will move for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope before that is done——

Mr. VEST. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion until we have an order to print this bill as far as it has been agreed to, so that in some way we may know a little more as to the scope of it than we can by a hasty reading at the desk.

Mr. VEST. I think that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the bill as it now stands with the amendments agreed to——

Mr. ALLISON. And proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And proposed, be printed. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the order is made, I desire to move a substitute for section 5, so that it may be printed also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio submits an amendment intended to be offered by him as section 5, which will be printed.

Mr. PLUMB. The old section 5 was stricken out of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know.

Mr. PLUMB. But there is another section 5.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an additional section to the bill, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas sends an amendment to the Chair intended to be proposed as an additional section to the bill. That also will be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 851) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie, deceased.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1705) to provide for the issue of duplicate checks.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee of three members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the House, and two members of the Senate be appointed by that body, to wait on Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, and to notify him that he has been duly elected President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th of March, 1885; and also to notify Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, that he has been duly elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th day of March, 1885.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask to have printed a statement to accompany the Army appropriation bill in the nature of a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, submits a statement to accompany the report of the Army appropriation bill, and asks that it be printed. That order will be entered, if there be no objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois in a moment. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is recognized.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. POLAND. I rise to present a privileged report. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 7131.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 7131, "to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments thereto:

In the first section of said Senate amendment, and next before the proviso to said section, insert the following words: "and such damages shall be assessed with reference to the injury resulting from such act, neglect, or default, causing such death, to the widow and next of kin of such deceased person." And also by adding to said first section, after the proviso, the following words: "And provided further, That no action shall be maintained under this act in any case where the party injured by such wrongful act, neglect, or default has recovered damages therefor during the life of such party."

And also by amending the said Senate amendment by striking out of the second section thereof the words "two years" and inserting "one year."

And the Senate agree to the said amendments to the Senate amendment to said bill.

LUKE P. POLAND,
J. R. TUCKER,
WM. DORSHEIMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
H. H. RIDDLEBERGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. I will not take any time to make any explanation of this report unless some gentleman on the floor should desire it.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACTION ON BILL VACATED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit a statement with reference to the action of the House on Saturday last on the bill named.

The Clerk read as follows:

The action of the House on Saturday last disagreeing to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House H. R. 5713 and asking a conference with the Senate thereon will be vacated, the said bill not having passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The action of the House was taken on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS]. The Chair, having submitted to the House the statement of facts, asks that this may be ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to offer a privileged motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the House for the remainder of the present session be 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire a vote on it.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not as I understand the rule. Such a resolution has been offered every session and I have never known one to be sent to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has never known one that was not sent to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KEIFER. I will state to the House that it will be reported back between this and Monday.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to change the reference of the bill (H. R. 8117) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Military Affairs, the reference to the Committee on Claims having been erroneously made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be directed to admit to the floor of the House ladies having tickets issued for the members' gallery during the joint session for the count of the electoral vote.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Is that a privileged question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state that this is in the exact language of the resolution offered in the Forty-sixth Congress, which was at that time held to be privileged, and which was passed. I think there can be no objection to it. The state of facts is this: About eight hundred tickets have been issued; the seating capacity of the galleries set apart is barely four hundred. Hence this is necessary in order to accommodate those holding the tickets which have been issued.

Mr. COSGROVE. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, is that motion privileged?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. WASHBURN. Do I understand the Chair to hold that this is a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is a privileged motion, in the light of the rulings that have been made by the Speakers of the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to make a point of order on this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the rules of the House is that under them certain persons are admitted upon this floor and all other persons are excluded. Now, the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] proposes to admit upon the floor of the House persons who, under the rules, are excluded from the floor; therefore it is a proposition to change the rules of the House, and is subject to the point of order that it must go to the Committee on Rules, and can not be considered without one day's notice.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have at hand a reference to a precedent if it is desired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary to debate the point of order further. The Chair will state (if the gentleman from Tennessee is content) that this is not the first time this point has been raised and ruled upon, and the Chair has no disposition to overrule the rulings made by its predecessors, which is that the rule to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] has adverted does not apply to a joint session of the two Houses of Congress, but applies simply to the sessions of the House. Such has been the ruling from the Chair heretofore, and the present occupant feels no disposition to controvert that ruling.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then, Mr. Speaker, there is no rule excluding any one from the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not when it is in joint session, except at the pleasure of the House. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution offered by Mr. MCMILLIN; and there were—ayes 134, nays 72.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill of the House 8039, making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows: They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 46, 48, and 49.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 2, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, and 50.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no separate vote is demanded upon the amendments the question will be upon concurring in the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Senate amendments be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments. Before he had concluded the reading,

Mr. BENNETT rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from North Carolina withdraw his demand for the reading of the Senate amendments?

Mr. BENNETT. I do, sir, because I can not get any information from it. [Laughter.]

The amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 46, 48, and 49 were concurred in.

Mr. TALBOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the House non-concur in the remainder of the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOLLETT, Mr. HUTCHINS, and Mr. CANNON.

OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice the bill (H. R. 7675) relating to the compensation and duties of United States attorneys, marshals, and other court officials, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House made yesterday various pension bills from the Senate now on the Speaker's table will be taken up and appropriately referred.

A bill (S. 1183) granting a pension to Hugh O'Neil; and

A bill (S. 1709) granting a pension to Leonora A. Boyden.

S. W. MARSTON.

On motion of Mr. COSGROVE, by unanimous consent the bill (S. 1035) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses, was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SILVER DOLLARS AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent that an order be made to print in the RECORD the communication which came in last evening from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to a resolution of the House asking information relative to the alleged refusal of certain banks and banking associations to receive silver dollars and silver certificates in settlement of their balances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]? The Chair hears none, and the order is accordingly made.

The communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 10, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of resolution of the House of Representatives dated February 3, 1885, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether the Clearing House Association at New York, or any national bank thereof, refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates in the settlement of their balances, or refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates from the Government in payment of balances due from the Government to said association, and whether any official or officials of the Government accede to or recognize such rule or practice.

"Also, what amount of gold came into the Treasury of the United States in exchange at par for silver dollars and silver certificates during the month of January, 1885.

"Also, whether any national bank, or association of national banks, refuses to receive or pay out silver dollars or silver certificates contrary to law, or have adopted any rule or practice in that regard for the purpose of discrediting such money, or the effect of which is to depreciate the same.

"Also, what amount of silver coin was in the Treasury of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1879, and of each year thereafter, not held for the redemption of silver certificates, and what proportion the said coin bore on each of those dates to the net cash in the Treasury at those several dates.

"Also, what amount of the customs and internal revenue and other receipts of the Government, stated separately, have been received in silver coin or silver certificates, stated by months, for each year since the 1st day of January, 1879.

"Also, what other governments of the world did, during the year 1883, permit the coinage of legal-tender silver coin; also, the amount of such coinage, and what part thereof was from recoinage and what part from bullion.

"Also, the price paid per ounce by the Director of the Mint for silver bullion on the 1st days of January and July in each year from 1878 to 1885, both years inclusive."

In reply, I inclose herewith copies of reports from the Treasurer of the United States and the Director of the Mint, to whom the resolution had been referred, which contain the information desired.

Very respectfully,

H. MCCULLOCH, Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, February 10, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to submit such information as this office is able to furnish in answer to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 3d instant and referred to the Treasurer of the United States for report.

1. "Whether the Clearing House Association at New York, or any national bank thereof, refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates in the settlement of their balances, or refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates from the Government in payment of balances due from the Government to said association, and whether any official or officials of the Government accede to or recognize such rule or practice."

It is not known to this office that the Clearing House Association at New York or any national bank thereof has, since the passage of the act of July 12, 1882, refused to receive silver dollars or silver certificates in the settlement of their balances, or has at any time refused to receive silver dollars or silver certificates from the Government in payment of balances due from the Government to said association.

The following resolutions, among others, were adopted by the New York Clearing House Association November 12, 1878, viz:

"Resolved, That in order to facilitate the payment of drafts and checks between the Treasurer of the United States and the associated banks, the manager of the New York Clearing House is authorized to make such an arrangement with the assistant treasurer as will accomplish that purpose through the medium of the clearing-house.

"Resolved, That the associated banks of this city, after the 1st of January, 1879, will (1) decline receiving gold coins as 'special deposits,' but accept and treat them as lawful money; (2) abolish special exchanges of gold checks at the clearing-house; (3) pay and receive balances between banks at the clearing-house either in gold or United States legal-tender notes; (4) receive silver dollars upon deposit only under special contract to withdraw the same in kind; (5) prohibit payments of balances at the clearing-house in silver certificates or in silver dollars, excepting as subsidiary coin, in small sums (say under $10); (6) discontinue gold special accounts by notice to dealers on 1st of January next to terminate them."

In a letter to the chairman of the clearing-house committee of Boston, dated November 18, 1878, Secretary Sherman said that—

"The arrangement between this Department and the New York Clearing House Association was confined to the convenient adjustment and payment of drafts drawn upon the Treasury and the banks, respectively, and to the receipt, by the banks, of United States notes as coin, after the 1st day of January, 1879. The several resolutions adopted by the associated banks of New York * * * were for the guidance of the banks and not in any respect a stipulation with the Government."

The Treasury, in January, 1879, became a member of the New York Clearing House to the extent and for the purposes set forth in the resolution above quoted.

A provision having been inserted in the twelfth section of the act of July 12, 1882, that "no national banking association shall be a member of any clearing-house in which such certificates (gold and silver certificates) shall not be receivable in settlement of clearing-house balances," the associated banks of New York adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the resolutions adopted by the Clearing House Association on the 12th of November, 1878, be, and are hereby, modified so far as they conflict with section 12 of the act of Congress passed July 12, 1882."

The members of the clearing-house have continued to settle their balances in gold coin or certificates, or United States notes, and as no silver dollars or silver certificates have been tendered, none have been refused. The Treasury, although not a party to any understanding that silver dollars or certificates should not be tendered, and though it has never in any way waived the right to pay demands upon it in any kind of money which may lawfully be tendered for the purpose, has conformed to the practice of the associated banks in paying the balances against it at the clearing-house. The Department has deemed it inexpedient as a matter of public policy to force the issue of silver dollars or certificates at the chief financial center of the country until compelled to that step by the condition of the Treasury. Silver certificates have recently been used in part payment of a day's balance against the Treasury, and have been accepted by the clearing-house. They will be again so used whenever the state of funds in the Treasury may require it.

2. "What amount of gold came into the Treasury of the United States in exchange at par for silver dollars and silver certificates during the month of January, 1885?"

There was deposited with the assistant treasurer at New York during the month of January, 1885, $575,000 in gold, for which drafts payable in silver certificates by the assistant treasurer at New Orleans, La., were issued by the Treasurer.

There was also received during the same month $42,000 in drafts on New York, which were collected through the clearing-house, in exchange for which silver dollars were forwarded by the Treasury from the mints. These drafts, while not payable in gold, became equivalent to gold receipts by reducing the balances against the Treasury at the New York Clearing-House. The exchanges were made at par.

It is not known that any other amounts of gold came into the Treasury in exchange for silver dollars or silver certificates.

3. "Whether any national bank, or association of national banks, refuses to receive or pay out silver dollars or silver certificates contrary to law, or have adopted any rule or practice in that regard for the purpose of discrediting such money, or the effect of which is to depreciate the same."

The Treasury, not being a member of any other clearing-house than that at New York, has no authentic information as to the rule or practice of other clearing-houses in the receipt or payment of silver dollars or silver certificates. It is publicly reported that silver certificates are accepted in settlement of balances at the clearing-house in Boston.

Silver certificates are used in the payments to the public creditors, including the national banks, at all of the subtreasuries, except New York.

This office has no further information as to the rule or practice of individual national banks, other than that contained in the above-quoted resolutions of the New York Clearing House Association.

4. "What amount of silver coin was in the Treasury of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1879, and of each year thereafter, not held for the redemption of silver certificates, and what proportion the said coin bore on each of those dates to the net cash in the Treasury at those several dates."

The following table shows, for the 1st of January in each year, from 1879 to 1885, the amount of the cash in the Treasury, less certificates actually outstanding, the silver dollars held and silver certificates actually outstanding, and the amount of silver dollars actually owned, with the percentage of the latter to the net cash in the Treasury.

As the Treasury also holds other silver coins and silver bullion, the table also shows, for the dates named, the amounts of such coin and bullion held, and the total silver assets, and the percentage of the same to the net cash in the Treasury:

January—	Net cash in the Treasury.	Standard silver dollars in the Treasury.	Silver certificates actually outstanding.	Standard silver dollars actually owned.	Percentage of dollars owned to net cash.

5. "What amount of the customs and internal revenues and other receipts of the Government, stated separately, have been received in silver coin or silver certificates, stated by months, for each year since the 1st day of January, 1879?"

By direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, no distinction has been made, since January 1, 1879, in the accounts of the Treasury, between coin and currency, and no record has been kept in this office of the kinds of lawful money received. The assistant treasurer at New York has, however, kept a record of the kinds of funds received at his office, from customs, since January 1, 1881; and a statement showing the amounts of internal revenue and of customs, and the amounts of silver dollars and silver certificates from the latter source, received at his office, by months, since that date, is appended:

The resolution of the House of Representatives is returned herewith, as requested.

Very respectfully,

E. O. GRAVES,
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Hon. HUGH MCCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference to me, for report thereon, of that portion of the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting to be informed as to "what other governments of the world did, during the year 1883, permit the coinage of legal-tender silver coin," &c., and, in reply thereto, I inclose two tabular statements giving the information as far as received at this office.

The statement in respect to the coinage gives the nominal value in United States money of the silver coinage in the year 1883 of the sixteen countries named, distinguishing, as far as possible, the amount of limited from full legal-tender coins, the amount, as far as ascertained, of silver coins withdrawn or used in coinage during the year, and whether the coinage is on Government account or for the public.

In respect to the price of silver, it is not practicable to give the price paid per ounce for silver bullion on the 1st days of January and July in each year, as the purchases are made on Thursdays of each week, and I have therefore given the average price upon the day upon which purchases were made nearest to those named in the resolution. No purchase of silver was made in January, 1878, the first purchase under the act of February 28 having been made March 5, 1878.

Very respectfully,

HORATIO C. BURCHARD, Director.

Hon. HUGH MCCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

FEBRUARY 7, 1885.

HORATIO C. BURCHARD,
Director of the Mint.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the hour provided for by the new rule for the consideration of bills called up by members.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the House now take a recess until five minutes before 12 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will not be done. We can proceed now with business under the hour rule, and there will be that much time saved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is aware that this motion is not debatable.

Mr. BUCKNER. I withdraw the proposition.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that notice be sent to the Senate that the House will be ready to receive the Senate at 12 o'clock to-day, to proceed with the business of the electoral count in accordance with concurrent resolution already adopted.

The motion of Mr. KEIFER was agreed to.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour under the new rule now begins at fifteen minutes before 12 o'clock. The Clerk will report the bill called up in this hour yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and coming over as unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Joseph F. Wilson, of Peoria, Ill., or his legal representatives or assigns, a number of warrants equal to eighty acres, in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, to be located by the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, on any of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement, in lieu of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 35 north, of range 5 west, situate in Porter County, Indiana, which said tract of land was entered by and patented to Josiah Smith, of Macon County, Missouri, under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1873, relating to additional homesteads, and by the said Josiah Smith, after his said entry, sold and conveyed to the said Wilson, and of the title to and possession of which the said Wilson was divested and dispossessed by the judgment and decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, at the November term, A. D. 1880, thereof, by reason of a prior disposal of or a prior equitable title in and to said tract of land, as the said court held and decided, to or in persons other than the said Josiah Smith; and the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, after the location of the said warrants on such lands as he or they may select, shall be allowed patents for the land so located; and the lands taken, selected, and located as authorized and provided for by this act shall be in full satisfaction of any claim, right, or benefit which the said Josiah Smith, or any one claiming under him, may have, or may have had, under and by virtue of the provisions of the said acts of Congress, as well as in full satisfaction of any claim which the said Wilson, as assignee or grantee of the said Josiah Smith, may have, or may have had, against the United States touching said described tract of land.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is unnecessary to have the report in this case read or to make any statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EIGHTH NEW YORK HEAVY ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I call up for consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery, and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belong to said artillery, and which were captured by the confederate forces at Beam Station, on the Weldon Railroad, August 25, 1864, and are now in the custody of the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army; said colors to remain the property of said association.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not care to discuss this joint resolution. I think there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out "Beam," and inserting "Ream," which is the proper name of the station referred to in the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, KEOKUK, IOWA.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 483, for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Keokuk, Iowa. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $150,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Iowa shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID], who represents the district in which this building is situated, is on the floor, and before objection is called to the consideration of the bill I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether he is or is not willing to reduce the amount of appropriation to $100,000, and also to agree to an amendment to provide for the purchase of the site before the plan of the building is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McCOID. I agree to the amendment appropriating $100,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be considered as adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will send up to the Clerk's desk an amendment covering the point indicated by me to the purchase of the site.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the House for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent. It is to come in after the appropriation of $100,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause plan and specification of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specification shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building or the purchase thereof exceeding the portion of $100,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for. And no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum which remains after paying for the site of said building.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the gentleman from Iowa accepts both of my amendments.

Mr. McCOID. I have no objection to the amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is there any report accompanying this bill?

Mr. STORM. If there is, I ask that it be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 483) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Keokuk, in the State of Iowa, respectfully report that they have had the bill under consideration, and recommend the passage of the same.

The city of Keokuk is the place fixed by law for holding the circuit court and the district court of the United States for the eastern division of the southern district of Iowa, which division embraces the oldest, wealthiest, and most populous portion of the State. Keokuk is a prosperous and growing city, of a present population of 15,000 inhabitants, and is rapidly extending and increasing its commercial and manufacturing interests. It is located at the Des Moines Rapids Canal on the Mississippi River, and is the head of deep-water navigation for the largest steamers running above Saint Louis, the average depth of the river being one foot higher from Keokuk to Saint Louis than from Keokuk to Saint Paul.

The canal is eight miles in length, and was built at a cost to the United States of about $4,000,000.

The United States, pursuant to a recent act of the Forty-seventh Congress, are now building at the canal extension dry-docks, which will make the canal the finest harbor on the river.

The relation of this city to the Mississippi River and its vast and rapidly growing commerce make the court of admiralty here the most important north of Saint Louis.

Keokuk is equally fortunate in her railroad facilities, affording easy and ready communication with all parts of the district and State and adjoining States. The great railways of the West, the Wabash, Saint Louis and Pacific, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy meet here and compete for business; and the Saint Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern Railway Company, running from Keokuk south to Saint Louis, and north with connecting lines to Saint Paul, and southwest with connecting lines to Kansas City, have the headquarters of its operating department at Keokuk.

Thus the commerce of this city by land and by water is important and extensive.

The post-office and internal-revenue receipts are very large, and the business of the courts is larger than at any other point in Iowa, unless at the capital of the State.

At present there are inadequate accommodations for the business of the Government. The courts, the post-office, the office of the deputy revenue collector and the office of the judges are in separate buildings on annual leases, and the public records and public property are exposed to hazards and dangers that should be promptly provided against by the erection of a suitable building.

All of the Federal judges for Iowa, the justice of the Supreme Court assigned to that circuit, the judge of the Circuit Court, and the district judge are united in the opinion that there is a pressing and urgent necessity for the erection of a public building at this point adequate to the accommodation of the public business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask by unanimous consent further proceeding under the rule be discontinued, as the time has nearly arrived when the House will receive the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only five minutes remain. In obedience to the custom heretofore observed the Chair will ask that the two front or first tiers of seats in the House may be vacated for the occupancy of the Senate.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

At 12 o'clock m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by the President and the Secretary of the Senate, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The President of the Senate [Mr. EDMUNDS] took his seat as presiding officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BLACKBURN] occupying the chair on the left of the Vice-President.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The two Houses have met pursuant to the Constitution and the laws and their concurrent resolution for the purpose of executing the duty required by the Constitution and the laws in the matter of counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President cast by the electors in the several States for the term commencing on the 4th of March, 1885. The tellers appointed by the two Houses will please take their places.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. PENDLETON, the tellers appointed on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CLAY and Mr. KEIFER, the tellers appointed on the part of the House, took their seats at the Clerk's desk, at which the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House also occupied seats.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The President of the Senate will open the votes of the several States in their alphabetical order, and now opens the certificates from the State of Alabama and hands to the chairman of the tellers on the part of the Senate the certificate of Alabama received by mail, and to the chairman of the tellers on the part of the House of Representatives the certificate received by messenger. The certificate will be read.

Senator HOAR read in full the certificate of the vote of the State of Alabama, giving 10 votes for Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, for President of the United States, and 10 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, for Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. CLAY (one of the tellers) then read at length the certificate of the vote of the State of Arkansas, and announced the electoral vote of that State for President and Vice-President.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOWRY. Owing to slight confusion arising in the body of the House and throughout the galleries and from other causes we are entirely unable to hear the reading of these documents. I suppose one of the objects of having them read is that they may be heard by the members of the joint convention.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The Chair will endeavor to enforce order as far as possible. Gentlemen will please preserve silence on the floor and in the galleries in order that the certificates may be heard.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that by unanimous consent only the operative part of the certificates be read, containing simply the result of the vote, after having been examined by the Chair and found to be regular.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. In the absence of objection the tellers will read only the substance of the certificates.

There was no objection.

The tellers then proceeded to announce the electoral votes of the States of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, and Indiana.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The Chair now hands to the tellers the vote of the State of Iowa received in duplicate. The Chair will state that the vote received by mail not having been received by the first Wednesday in January, the Secretary of State was officially informed thereof, who sent to the district judge for the vote deposited there as required by law, which was also returned. I open them all; two will be handed to the tellers and the third placed on file, if there be no objection.

The tellers then proceeded to announce the electoral votes of the States of Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, and New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. I now open and hand to the tellers the vote of the State of New York, received in duplicate, one by messenger and one by mail.

Mr. CLAY (one of the tellers). It appears by the certificate of the electors of the State of New York that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, received 36 votes for the office of President of the United States—— [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Let there be order during the proceedings.

Mr. CLAY (one of the tellers) continuing. It also appears from the certificate of the electors of the State of New York that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, received 36 votes for the office of Vice-President of the United States. The certificate is duly attested by the great seal of the State, and is signed by the governor—Grover Cleveland. [Loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. The Sergeant-at-Arms will take into custody any gentleman or other person who, by applause or other manifestation, disturbs the order of these proceedings.

The tellers then proceeded to announce the electoral votes of the States of North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. I have now opened the certificates of the electors of all the States, and their votes have been reported. The tellers will now make their computations and report the state of the vote.

The following is the report read by Senator HOAR, one of the tellers;

List of votes for President and Vice-President of the United States for the constitutional term to commence on the 4th day of March, 1885.

GEO. F. HOAR,
GEO. H. PENDLETON,
Tellers on the part of the Senate.
J. WARREN KEIFER,
J. F. CLAY,
Tellers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Senator HOAR (one of the tellers) said: Mr. President, the tellers on the part of the Senate, and on the part of the House of Representatives, have ascertained the state of the vote of the electors of the respective States for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States; and it appears that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President is 401, of which a majority is 201. The state of the vote for President of the United States is for Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, 219; for James G. Blaine, of the State of Maine, 182. For Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, for the office of Vice-President of the United States, 219; and for John A. Logan, of the State of Illinois, for the office of Vice-President, 182.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE. Senators and members of the House of Representatives:

The tellers have reported to the presiding officer the state of the vote which you have heard, from which it appears that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, has received 219 votes for the office of President of the United States, and that James G. Blaine, of the State of Maine, has received 182 votes for the same office; that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, has received 219 votes for the office of Vice-President of the United States, and that John A. Logan, of the State of Illinois, has received 182 votes for the same office.

Wherefore, I do declare that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, has received a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed, as they appear in the certificates read by the tellers, and so appears to have been elected President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1885; and that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, has received a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed, as they appear in the certificates read by the tellers, and so appears to have been elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1885. And the President of the Senate makes this declaration only as a public statement in the presence of the two Houses of Congress of the contents of the papers opened and read on this occasion, and not as possessing any authority in law to declare any legal conclusion whatever.

The business for which the joint convention assembled having been completed, the Senate will retire to its own Chamber.

[The announcement of the result of the vote was received with loud applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The Senate then retired from the Hall; and (at 1 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Speaker pro tempore resumed the chair, and called the House to order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes, in order that the Hall may be cleared.

The Senate then retired from the Hall; and (at 1 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for fifteen minutes.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill which was under consideration during the special hour when the business of the House was suspended for the assembling of the joint convention of the two Houses.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know if the House did not, before suspending business for the purpose of proceeding to the electoral count, dispense with the remainder of the special hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the Journal will show that it did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That could only have been done by unanimous consent, and no such request was submitted to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. According to the ruling of the Chair on a former occasion the hour under the special rule consists of sixty minutes next after the beginning of the hour. The Chair made that ruling on a point of order raised by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois raise the point of order now?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not. I merely state that was the ruling of the Chair on a former occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on any point of order if the gentleman desires to make it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I make the point of order that the hour under the special rule has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the point of order is well taken. There should not, in the judgment of the Chair, be taken into account the time occupied by the joint session of the two Houses. The Chair does not think that should be counted against the hour under the rule which the House adopted for the transaction of its business.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very glad to hear the Chair make that ruling, because it is exactly in accordance with my previous idea.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair would further remark that the House has not been in session, but the two Houses were in session.

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. KEIFER. According to custom, I furnish a report of the official count of the electoral vote as declared by the President of the Senate for the purpose of having it spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], one of the tellers on the part of the House, submits the report by the tellers of the official count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States in order that the same may be spread upon the Journal of this House.

Mr. KEIFER. And published in the RECORD.

The report was ordered to be spread upon the Journal of the House and published in the RECORD. [It appears in the proceedings of the joint convention of the two Houses.]

Mr. KEIFER. I now offer a resolution, in the usual form, declaring the sense of the House in the matter of the electoral count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives having met the Senate in accordance with the fifth section of the act of 1st March, 1792, relative to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the electoral votes having been opened by the President of the Senate pro tempore in the presence of the two Houses of Congress and counted by the tellers appointed on the part of the two Houses of Congress, and it appearing that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States is 401, of which a majority is 201, and it further appearing that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, had received 219 votes for President of the United States, and that Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, had received 219 votes for Vice-President of the United States, which number is a majority of the votes of the whole number of electors appointed, and the same having been duly declared by the President pro tempore of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That it is the sense of this House that the Constitution and laws have been duly executed and that no further declaration of these facts is necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that resolution before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the resolution is of such a privileged character that it is before the House for consideration now.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to it. I only wish to modify it so that it shall be communicated to the Senate. It does not appear to embrace that within its provisions.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed the resolution would be communicated to the Senate without a special provision for so doing. This is exactly the resolution offered in the House four years ago, with the exception that that resolution was in the form of a concurrent resolution, although it was not sent to the Senate. The Senate adopted a resolution exactly in this form four years ago, with the exception that it was in form of a concurrent resolution, and it was not sent to the House. So we make them separate resolutions, one of the Senate and one of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish merely to suggest that the fact of the House having adopted this resolution be communicated to the Senate.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that may be done without putting it in the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the Clerk of the House being directed to communicate the resolution to the Senate if adopted.

Mr. POLAND. It appears to me this resolution is faulty in form. It refers to the provisions of an act of 1792, which act was repealed. Its provisions are contained in chapter 1 of title 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The resolution should refer to the provisions of that chapter and not to the act of 1792, which was in form repealed. I would suggest that what is said in the resolution as to the act of 1792 be stricken out, and that there be inserted a reference to the provisions of chapter 1 of title 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. It is possible that the criticism upon the resolution made by the distinguished gentleman from Vermont is a fair one. I wish to say, however, that the resolution in that respect is precisely in the language of the resolution adopted four years ago and on prior occasions of like character. And yet, Mr. Speaker, I think that the fact of the repeal of this statute in the revision of the laws being well settled it might be better to modify the resolution as the gentleman from Vermont suggests, so that it shall refer to the chapter of the Revised Statutes on the subject of the electoral count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. KEIFER. I do; and will modify the resolution accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the modification proposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. We did not hear what the modification was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont will communicate to the Clerk's desk the amendment he proposes to offer.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, there can be no trouble about this matter now; but, as it may become a precedent, I suggest that it had better be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEIFER. The change ought to be made now. There is no question about the fact of the repeal of the statute. The resolution can be amended, and I accept the amendment which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] has sent to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "the fifth section of the act of 1st March, 1792," and insert "chapter 1 of title 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask it for information only. Why is it that we change the form of the resolution now from what it was four years ago, making it a separate House resolution instead of a concurrent resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. We changed the form simply because the resolution enacted four years ago in the form of a concurrent resolution was in fact only a House resolution, which was not sent to the Senate for their action. The Senate did the same thing. They adopted a resolution which was also in the form of a concurrent resolution, but was in fact only a declaration of the sense of the Senate and did not come to the House for its action.

Mr. HAMMOND. Why?

Mr. KEIFER. Simply because each House acted separately, and while the Senate resolution was in form a concurrent resolution it was in fact a mere resolution of that body. I will state further, for the information of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], that on yesterday, at a conference held between the tellers on the part of the Senate and the tellers on the part of the House, in the presence of the President of the Senate, this very matter was considered, and it was agreed that we should put the resolution in a form to correspond with the fact, and strike out the concurrent feature of it. That was agreed to in the conference by Senator PENDLETON and others.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether the tellers on the part of the House on our side are satisfied with the change?

Mr. CLAY. There is no objection to it at all.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I have none.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word before this matter has been passed upon by the House. From the announcement made here by the president of the joint convention it seems that there was no declaration as to the result of the vote. On the contrary, the President of the Senate simply announced that it appeared from the count made by the tellers that Grover Cleveland had received the number of votes indicated, and that the other candidates had received the number of votes indicated as having been cast for them, and he then went on to disclaim any intention to make any official declaration as to the result of the count.

Mr. KEIFER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that at the time Mr. Lincoln was declared elected the Vice-President said:

Abraham Lincoln, of Illinois, having received a majority of the whole number of electoral votes cast, is elected President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1861.

A similar announcement was made as to the election of the Vice-President. I see further, that the same form was followed when General Grant was declared elected President of the United States. At this time there has been a departure from that practice and no official declaration has been made here that anybody is elected to the office of either President or Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Several MEMBERS. The vote was announced.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; the vote was announced. The president of the joint convention announced that one candidate had received so many votes and that the other candidate had received so many votes, but he then went on to make the disclaimer to which I have referred. Now, that is a departure from all the precedents upon this subject, and for that reason I would prefer that this whole matter should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report such additional resolution as may be necessary for the purpose of making known the official result of the election.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that the President pro tempore of the Senate, the presiding officer of the joint convention, in making the announcement of the ascertainment of the vote as had to-day, announced the result that had been found, and simply added a disclaimer of any authority on his part, as the presiding officer of the Senate or the presiding officer of the joint convention, to make any declaration at all. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] make any motion?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do. I move that this whole matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MOULTON. I think the declaration is exactly right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair the declaration of the presiding officer of the joint convention was exactly what it should have been.

Mr. KEIFER. And it has no relation at all to this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not asked the Speaker for his opinion. I desire to state mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state, as the officer representing the House in the joint convention, that there would have been a protest made if in the judgment of the Chair any improper declaration had been made on the part of the presiding officer of the joint convention.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. My point is that the joint session having made its declaration, this House has now nothing to do with whether it made it correctly or incorrectly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have not made any motion in reference to that.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a motion, if I can get permission to state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is no motion before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken; there are two motions before the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I move to lay them on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman for that purpose. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will submit his motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to commit this whole subject to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report to the House what further declaration, if any, should be made for declaring the election of the persons who have been elected President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the announced vote elects, and that any ministerial part of the proceeding is not essential to the establishment of the fact that Grover Cleveland and Thomas A. Hendricks have been elected by the electoral college President and Vice-President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair concurs with the gentleman.

Mr. CLAY. The declaimer to which reference has been made was only a position taken by the President of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is discovered only at this late day that that is a proper way to make the announcement.

Mr. HAMMOND and several other members addressed the Chair at the same time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not listen to a dozen gentlemen at once. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] except in his order.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am in order, because I desire to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make his point of order, but will try to secure order first. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has submitted a resolution, to which an amendment has been offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND], which amendment has been accepted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. COX, of New York. What is it? Let it be read.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask to have that resolution reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask to be allowed to state the question that is before the House, and then, unless there be objection, the resolution will be again reported to the House by the Clerk. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] submitted a resolution, to which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] offered an amendment, which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has indicated his willingness to accept. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has moved to refer the whole matter, the resolution and the amendment, to the Committee on the Judiciary. That motion is now pending, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], who raises a question of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to having the resolution reported again, as modified, for the benefit of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the Clerk will again report the resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York. I imagine that the Constitution settles this matter.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not yield the floor for further discussion. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] rises to a point of order he will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let the resolution first be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had already directed the reading when interrupted by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. The "gentleman from New York" did not intend to interrupt the Chair for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution having been again read,

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks that, in the event of the adoption of this resolution, it shall be made the duty of the Clerk of this House to communicate the fact of its adoption to the Senate.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood that had already been agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand the previous question on the adoption of this resolution. I think it is simply a declaration of the sense of the House. It does not elect anybody, but is a proper thing to be done.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to have an extract from the Constitution read, so as to show that all this is irrelevant and superfluous.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield to allow the reading of the extract referred to by the gentleman, but for no other purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed.

* * * * * * *

The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed.

Mr. KEIFER. I must now insist on the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think the Constitution in this matter executes itself.

Mr. KEIFER. I agree to that; but I insist on the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to lay the resolution on the table. I do not propose to make a precedent for the future; and I do not want my friend on the other side to elect our President.

Mr. KEIFER. The reason I have insisted on the previous question is because I hoped we would get to other business. It is not important to me whether the resolution be adopted or not; but it is in accordance with custom. It is in the same form as a resolution offered four years ago by Mr. House, then a member from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to lay on the table the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio as amended by the motion of the gentleman from Vermont.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 78, noes 70.

Mr. KEIFER. Let us have tellers.

Mr. MOULTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 34, noes 28.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I hope the resolution will be read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Clerk will again report the resolution.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the resolution will be reported again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no authority to order the resolution reported a third time, when objection has been made.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. COX, of New York, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 137, nays 113, not voting 73; as follows:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. COOK with Mr. LACEY, for this day.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. GLASCOCK with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. FERRELL with Mr. KEAN.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. MURRAY, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. ROSECRANS with Mr. HOOPER, on this vote.

Mr. LAMB with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. KING with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. BARR.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. SLOCUM, with Mr. RAY, of New York.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. PAYNE.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT ELECT.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky submits a privileged resolution, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee of two members of the House be appointed by the House, and one member of the Senate be appointed by that body, to wait on Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, and to notify him that he has been duly elected President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th day of March, 1885; and also to notify Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, that he has been duly elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th day of March, 1885.

Second. That the President of the Senate do make out and sign a certificate in the words following:

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

Be it known that the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, having been convened in the city of Washington, on the second Wednesday in February, in the year of our Lord 1885, the underwritten President of the Senate pro tempore did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; whereupon it appeared that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, had a majority of the votes of the electors as President, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, had a majority of the votes of the electors as Vice-President.

By all of which it appears that Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, has been duly elected President, and Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, has been duly elected Vice-President, of the United States, agreeably to the Constitution, for the term of four years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1885.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this —— day of February, 1885, and have sealed with the seal of the Senate.

And that the committee hereby appointed, when notifying the persons elected of their election to the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States, shall present to each of them a duly authenticated copy of the foregoing certificate.

Mr. CLAY. I offer that resolution, Mr. Speaker, in accordance——

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, by consent of the gentleman from Kentucky I ask him to allow me to move an amendment to that resolution, changing the resolution in the statement made that the President of the Senate opened and counted the votes, so it will read: "That he opened the certificates of the electoral votes of the several States, and they were counted in the presence of the two Houses."

Mr. CLAY. I accept that amendment as a modification of my resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As it is a matter of some importance, the Chair will ask the gentleman to reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think it is necessary to make any extended remarks on the resolution which I have presented. It is in accordance with all the precedents heretofore except as to the two most recent Presidential elections. I now demand the previous question on my resolution as modified at the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. COX, of New York. With the consent of my friend from Kentucky I move to strike out "three" and insert "five" as the number constituting the committee, two on the part of the Senate and three on the part of the House.

Mr. CLAY. That is rather a large committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is suggested in deference to the opinion of gentlemen on both sides.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know from the Speaker what rule of the House or clause of the Constitution justifies the presentation of this resolution as a question of privilege?

Mr. CLAY. It has been so regarded from the very beginning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the custom and all the precedents such resolution on this day has uniformly been regarded as one of the highest privilege. It is not so much a question of rule as it is in accordance with the mandate of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion will be in order when the gentleman is recognized as having the floor. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLAY. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. When can I make the motion to lay the whole resolution upon the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can submit that motion as soon as he gets the floor.

The resolution was reported as modified.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless the precedents are uniform——

Mr. CLAY. Permit me to state, Mr. Speaker, right here that I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], and will therefore modify the resolution so as to make the committee consist of five—two from the Senate and three from the House. I will now yield the floor to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, unless the precedents have been uniformly in favor of such action as is proposed by the last clause of this resolution, providing for the execution of a certificate of election of the President and Vice-President by the presiding officer of the Senate—I say unless the precedents are uniform in that direction, and I think they are not, I must, as a member of the House, object to that portion of the resolution.

The declaration of the result of the count is unquestionably proper—the counting of the votes. The appointment of a committee of the two Houses of Congress to wait upon the President and Vice-President elect and inform them of the result of the count is for manifest reasons proper. Beyond that I do not think the House should go. I think the action of the two Houses ought to terminate right there; and therefore I say again that, unless my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] has found the precedents uniformly recognizing some other attestation than the simple declaration of the result of the counting of the vote, I hope he will consent that the last part of the resolution which provides for the official certificate of the President of the Senate be stricken out.

It is clearly apparent, Mr. Speaker, from what has occurred in the history of this country to what perils the Government might be exposed in the future if it was recognized that the title under which the office of President and Vice-President shall be held required some other procedure than a compliance with the simple requirements of the Constitution of the result of the count.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I can not say in response to the gentleman from Indiana that the precedents are entirely uniform, but in the election of General Washington, the first President, that form was pursued.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, well; what was good enough for Washington ought to be good enough for us. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. In the election of Mr. Harrison that same form was pursued. In the election of General Grant in his second term, and Mr. Lincoln, I think, it was also pursued.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, as I understand the gentleman, it has not been the uniform practice?

Mr. CLAY. It has not been uniformly pursued, as I have stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is not then a uniform line of precedents—occasional instances only of such a verification as is now proposed. I think we ought not to follow and give new force to a questionable precedent, and one which experience has demonstrated might, in an unfortunate contingency not unlikely to arise in the future, greatly endanger the public safety. It is a precedent that we certainly should not now reaffirm. The counting of the vote and declaration of the result of the count, in the manner contemplated by the Constitution, and the appointment of a committee to inform the citizens chosen for President and Vice-President of their election, is as far as we can, in my judgment, go with safety. I trust my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] will consent that all of the resolution shall be omitted except the part providing for the committee.

Mr. CLAY. I think, Mr. Speaker, that if this resolution be proper at all it is very proper that the persons elected to the offices of President and Vice-President should have that information given to them and the certificates of election at the same time.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman will not hold that it is necessary or that it is required by the Constitution.

Mr. CLAY. It is not necessary, nor is it required by the Constitution.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out all of that portion of the resolution which provides for the certificate—all after the first clause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLAY. I have said that I did not regard it as necessary, nor is it required by the Constitution; but it is well known that the President and Vice-President elect do not know officially the fact of their election unless such action shall be taken by the Congress. This simply prescribes that an official notification shall be sent to them. At present there is nothing but the statement in the public press of the country.

I have agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 235) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Augusta, Me.; and also that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 2609) to provide a permanent reservation for the Indians in Northern Montana, and for other purposes.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not perhaps occupy that much time. I rise to say, sir, simply that this resolution, in so far as it is necessary under the Constitution and the laws of the United States, in the matter of determining the election of the President and Vice-President, is wholly unnecessary. Like the resolution just laid upon the table it is not one of the essential things in the determination of the result of the count of the electoral votes. But, like that resolution, it may be a matter of courtesy on the part of the Congress of the United States, that witnessed the count of the electoral vote and the ascertainment of the result, that the officers who are elected by that count should have a proper notification. That is all.

Whether Grover Cleveland receives a notice through the newspapers of the day, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or by notification sent by the Vice-President, or through the action of a committee that may be sent by the two Houses of Congress, or not at all, it makes no difference so far as concerns the question as to who will be the President of the United States for four years from the 4th of March next.

But, sir, I maintain that there are sufficient precedents for the adoption of this resolution. They are not uniform, it is true, from the beginning of Presidential elections down to the present time, but there are precedents, and of a character that it seems to me are well worth following. In the important act of electing a Chief Magistrate of the United States, when we have done all that is essential and gone through all of the requisite forms, it is due the dignity of that high office, and to the person elected to it, that we should notify him in some form. There are many things which we do which do not belong to and can not be classified as absolutely essential, and yet they are important and in accordance with right and good policy. If the notification of the election of a person to the high office of President and another to the high office of Vice-President is only a courtesy, I would still give it.

We have had twenty-five elections for Presidential terms. In seven cases there have been re-elections of persons who were President. Washington was re-elected, Jefferson was re-elected, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Lincoln, and Grant were each re-elected to the office of President of the United States. My recollection now is, from having examined the question some time since, that in each of these cases of re-election at least there were committees sent to notify the President-elect of his election to the office of President of the United States. I do not say that this has been uniformly the case, but in some instances it has been the practice.

In other cases the policy has been to send a notification in writing over the signature of the President of the Senate to the person elected President of the United States and to the person elected Vice-President of the United States. In some instances Congress has called on the President-elect after he was notified to send notice to the Vice-President-elect of his election. But there are numerous instances that form precedents for the action proposed to be taken under the pending resolution. Therefore I shall vote for this resolution.

Mr. COSGROVE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COSGROVE. Then I will address to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COSGROVE. Is it not customary for all joint resolutions to be signed by the presiding officers of one or other or both bodies?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is. But this is not a joint resolution. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out all of the resolution but the first clause?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a motion now pending, made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], as the Chair understands, to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN. I thought the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] was not allowed to make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio to make that motion, and that this discussion was going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understood the Chair to say he would recognize the gentleman from Ohio to make that motion when it was in order to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] claim he was holding the floor to the exclusion of the gentleman from Ohio to make the motion to lay on the table?

Mr. CLAY. I do. I now move the previous question on the resolution as amended, and the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which proposes to strike out that part of the resolution that relates to the certificate.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is to say, it proposes to strike out all after the first clause of the resolution.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not debatable. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] rises to make a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to know whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] accepts the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has no such power. It is for the House to determine whether the amendment shall be adopted or not.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That amendment is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is pending. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Which motion has precedence?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table. The gentleman from Kentucky has asked the previous question on the adoption of the resolution he has submitted, subject to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana; and, pending that demand, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] moves to lay the motion on the table.

The question being taken on the motion to lay on the table, there were—ayes 38, noes 108.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Is it not necessary for a vote to be taken on the amendment which I suggested and offered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection, and the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] was accepted without objection.

Mr. DUNN. That is sufficient.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Before the vote is taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana we desire to hear how the resolution will read if amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask for the rereading of the resolution?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask for the rereading of what is left, if the portion which the gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out shall be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there be objection the resolution will be read as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOBLITZELL and Mr. KEIFER objected.

Mr. KEIFER. I shall not object to the rereading after the previous question shall have been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the demand of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] for the previous question on the resolution and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, I do not object to the resolution being read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. Unless there be objection the Clerk will report the resolution as it will read if amended as proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee of three members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the House, and two members of the Senate be appointed by that body, to wait on Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, and to notify him that he has been duly elected President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th of March, 1885; and also to notify Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, that he has been duly elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th of March, 1885.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like to have the resolution reported again. I think it states we believe that Grover Cleveland was elected. I do not. I believe that there were forty districts in which there was no election.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. CLAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the phraseology of that resolution should be changed so as to make it read: "Commencing on the 4th day of March," instead of "commencing with the 4th day of March." If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] will look at the resolution I am sure he will see the propriety of the change.

Mr. CLAY. The Constitution fixes the time.

Mr. HUNT. But the proper language should be used.

Mr. CLAY. I think that is rather a technical point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the modification of the resolution as suggested? [Calls of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEOKUK, IOWA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the consideration of the unfinished business under the hour provided by the special rule. The Clerk will finish the reading of the report on the pending bill (H. R. 483) to provide for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa.

The Clerk completed the reading of the report as printed earlier in this RECORD.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID] would consent to make the amount named in that bill $75,000 instead of $100,000. As prices are now, $75,000 is money enough to build a good, substantial building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate in opposition to the bill has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCOID] has five minutes of his time left. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] desire more time?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment is not in order, because the bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, I have already yielded to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to reduce the amount from $150,000 to $100,000. The Secretary of the Treasury submitted an estimate stating that $150,000 was necessary; but I have accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and I do not think it would be wise to reduce the amount below that. I only want to say further, in addition to what is stated in the report, that at Keokuk they have an iron bridge across the river which cost a million dollars, the finest bridge across the Mississippi north of Saint Louis; they have there a canal which has cost the Government $5,000,000; they have as fine a national cemetery as there is in the country; they have there the engineers in charge of the Government works; they do a wholesale grocery business larger than is done in any other place in the State of Iowa, and a wholesale dry-goods business larger than any other in Iowa——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thought the time for debate was exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that the time for debate in opposition to the bill was exhausted. The gentleman from Iowa had exhausted none of the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But the first five minutes was exhausted in reading the first part of the report.

Mr. McCOID. That was not in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the report was called for without reference to the gentleman's time.

Mr. McCOID. I will only add that I have been in this House a long time and have never asked a measure that was not a proper one, and I believe that those who know me know that I would not ask for the passage of a bill of which I had any doubt as to its justice, propriety, or economy. I ask the House to pass this bill, and I hope that no one will object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I shall not object myself, but when the proper time comes I shall offer an amendment to reduce the amount to $75,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. OATES. I object.

The question was taken, and seven members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But seven members have objected, not a sufficient number, and the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the words "one hundred" before the word "thousand" and substitute the words "seventy-five," so as to make the amount $75,000 instead of $100,000.

The House divided; and only 18 members voted in the affirmative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOID moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF MARY JANE VEAZIE.

Mr. SINGLETON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 851) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $5,440 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie, deceased, late of Natchez, Miss., for property taken for the use of the United States troops stationed at Natchez, Miss.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out "$5,440" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, a bill similar to this was introduced in the Senate during the Forty-seventh Congress, was referred to the Committee on War Claims of that body, was unanimously indorsed by that committee, was passed by the Senate without opposition, came to this House, was referred to the War Claims Committee of this body, was reported favorably, and went upon the Calendar, but was never considered by the House for want of time. The present bill was introduced in this House at this session and referred to the Committee on War Claims, who have reported it with an amendment cutting down the amount allowed to $2,500. The bill having received the favorable consideration of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] as a subcommittee, and having been reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims, I think everybody will agree that there can be no objection to it. The loyalty of the parties, the taking of the property for the use of the Army, and the value of the property have been fully established. It seems to me there can be no objection to the bill. There is a report from the Committee on War Claims. If any gentleman so desires, it can be read.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. SINGLETON. So I understand.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think the report had better be read.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 851) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie, deceased, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report of the Committee on Claims, No. 406, first session Forty-seventh Congress, hereto appended.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment, as follows:

Insert in the third line, in place of the words "five thousand four hundred and forty," the words "two thousand five hundred."

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Jane Veazie, having examined the same, make the following report:

"It appears from the evidence and papers on file in this case that from July, 1863, to December, 1863, there was taken from the plantation and residence of Mrs. Mary Jane Veazie, near the city of Natchez, in the county of Adams, and State of Mississippi, by the military authorities of the Government, for use of the United States troops then in the permanent occupation of that district and stationed at said post, certain property belonging to the said Mary Jane Veazie, for which the present bill proposes to make her compensation. She describes the property taken, and states her account against the Government as follows:

Two horses, at $150 each; one carriage, $200	$500
Sixty head of hogs, at $8	480
Fifty-six head of neat cattle, at $20	1,120
Fencing used for fuel	280
Twenty-five brood mares, at $50	1,250
One hundred and fifty cords of wood, at $3	450
Three frame houses, at $200, $185, and $135	520
Two bales of cotton, 420 pounds each = 840 pounds, at $1	840
Total	5,440

"Which amount she claims under the act of Congress of July 4, 1864. She states that no receipt or voucher was given her for her property; that she had no one to attend to the matter, her husband being absent at the time, employed in the custom-house at New Orleans, La., while she was prevented from looking after the business in person by the long protracted and fatal sickness of her little child. It is clearly established by a number of credible witnesses, who were in a position to know, and who testify to the fact as of their own knowledge, that the above-described property was actually taken in 1863 from the said Mary Jane Veazie for the use of the United States Army stationed in and around the city of Natchez, and that the charges which she has made were the fair market prices therefor at the time and place the same was taken.

"It is also shown that Judge James H. Veazie, the husband of the said Mary Jane Veazie, was a loyal and consistent Union man, devoted to the Government and Union of the States; that he opposed secession, and gave no aid to the rebellion; and that in 1863, when his wife's property was taken as aforesaid, he was employed in the custom-house at New Orleans. In 1864, 1865, and 1866 he was employed as cashier of the assistant treasury in that city. Among others who testify to Judge Veazie's loyalty is General Stewart Van Vliet, assistant quartermaster United States Army, who says, 'I know that he was a loyal citizen during the war and is so now.' It is also clearly established by the affidavits of several credible parties, well acquainted with Mrs. Veazie, that she shared fully her husband's sentiments and devotion to the Union; that she and her family were loyal to the Government, and gave no aid to the rebellion. Her property having been appropriated to the use of the Government, her right to compensation, in the opinion of your committee, comes within the spirit, if not the letter, of the act of July 4, 1864. But the items of $200 for carriage and $840 for two bales of cotton, taken from claimant, can not be properly regarded as a necessary army supply, and should be rejected. Your committee accordingly recommend that the bill for relief of claimant be amended by striking out the words 'five thousand four hundred and forty dollars,' in the third line of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'twenty-five hundred dollars,' and, as thus amended, the committee recommend the passage of the bill by the Senate."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (before the reading of the report was concluded). The first five minutes allowed for debate on this bill have expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, obtained the floor, and said: I ask that the residue of the report be read in my time.

The reading of the report was then concluded.

Mr. HORR. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why this claim was not presented before the proper tribunal at the proper time, in the proper way, and adjusted through the regular channel?

Mr. SINGLETON. The answer to that question appears in the report. In the first place, the husband of Mrs. Veazie was absent from home, being at New Orleans, in the employment of the Federal Government. In the second place, he was in the later years of his life very much afflicted.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, this claim arose in my district; and the difficulties which prevented its earlier presentation and adjustment have been correctly stated by my colleague [Mr. SINGLETON]. I happen to know—not personally, it is true, but from report about which there can be no doubt—that the husband of this lady was absent in New Orleans in Federal employ.

Mr. HORR. When?

Mr. VAN EATON. During the war, and at the time of the occurrences out of which this claim arises.

Mr. HORR. Very well; what prevented him from making the claim in the usual way and getting it allowed as other claims were?

Mr. VAN EATON. Because he was at the time exceedingly afflicted, being in impaired health both mentally and physically.

Mr. SINGLETON. So that he afterward died.

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes; and in the later years of his existence he became so poor, I understand, that his library was sold in order to furnish the means of his support.

I know further that in our section of the country this is regarded as a just claim, if any claim can be just, a just claim for the whole amount originally named in the bill. Inasmuch as the sum has been cut down by the committee to $2,500, I believe the least this House can do is to allow this amount.

One word with regard to the loyalty of these parties. I happen to know that they were not popular at all in that portion of the country because they were loyal. While the fact that they remained loyal is no recommendation to me, it does bring the case within the usages under the law. I repeat that in my portion of the country the claim is regarded as in every sense just, if ever a claim was just; and I happen to know the feeling of that community in this matter, as the claim originated in my district, and not far from my home.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If I understand this report, the committee find that $4,400 is due the claimants in this case. I would like to know why the amount has been cut down to $2,500. Is it because of the loyalty of the claimants?

Mr. SINGLETON. The claim has been cut down from $5,440 to $2,500.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. So I understand. The committee deduct $840 for two bales of cotton and $200 for a carriage. That would leave $4,400.

Mr. SINGLETON. The committee has reduced the amount still further.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But why? Because the claimants were loyal or because the Government of the United States has for years delayed payment?

Mr. SINGLETON. I can not say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate on this bill has expired. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the House.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISSUE OF DUPLICATE CHECKS.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 1705) to provide for the issue of duplicate checks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"Whenever any original check is lost, stolen, or destroyed, disbursing officers and agents of the United States are authorized, after the expiration of six months and within three years from the date of such check, to issue a duplicate check; and the Treasurer, assistant treasurers, and designated depositaries of the United States are directed to pay such duplicate checks, upon notice and proof of the loss of the original checks, under such regulations in regard to their issue and payment, and upon the execution of such bonds, with sureties, to indemnify the United States, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. This section shall not apply to any check exceeding in amount the sum of $2,500."

Mr. PETTIBONE. This bill simply strikes out in section 3446 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the limitation of $1,000 and inserts $2,500. There are now about thirty bills pending in this House restoring lost checks, and this bill will let them all in and allow the Secretary of the Treasury and other disbursing officers of the United States, on the filing of proper refunding bonds, to issue duplicate checks in place of those which have been lost to the amount of $2,500 instead of $1,000. It applies to pension ckecks as well as to quartermaster's checks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILL. I object. I am not satisfied this important change in the statutes should be made without consideration. It seems to me it throws wide open the doors of the Treasury to all sorts of petty frauds.

Mr. VALENTINE. The bill has received the consideration of the Committee on Claims and been unanimously reported by them. It simply authorizes the very parties who issued checks to issue duplicates when it is positively proved they have been lost or destroyed, and on the filing on the part of the claimants of a sufficient refunding bond, and after a proper time has elapsed.

Mr. HILL. Is it accompanied by a report of any committee?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes. There are now over thirty-five cases pending in this House which this legislation will cover.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. A word on the bill. It has always seemed to me the law is too narrow in providing for the issue of duplicate checks.

Mr. PETTIBONE. You can not get the Senate to go higher.

Mr. HOLMAN. It should embrace not simply duplicate checks, but it should also authorize the issuing of duplicate certificates of deposit in subtreasuries. There is no general law on that subject now. I had occasion a short time ago to inquire at the Treasury Department whether a duplicate certificate of money deposited in a subtreasury could be issued, and was informed it could not be done. This legislation should be broad enough to cover all these cases, checks on the one hand and certificates of deposit on the other. But I will not embarrass this measure, which, of course, is right. It changes the law only in increasing the amount.

Mr. MORRILL. The present law authorized the issue of duplicate checks to the amount of $1,000, and this simply increases that amount to $2,500.

There was no objection; and the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTIBONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. MAYBURY. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a suitable lot of land in the city of Detroit, county of Wayne, and State of Michigan, and cause to be erected on the grounds so purchased a building suitable for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, of the custom-house, post-office, pension office and other Government offices in that city. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $900,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Michigan shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal law of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it advisable to use for said purpose the site now owned by the United States, upon part of which the post-office and custom-house building now stands, he may do so; and should he further deem said site insufficient, he may enlarge the same by the purchase of additional adjoining grounds.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Treasury, in the event of the selection and purchase under this act of a site other than that now owned and occupied by the United States within said city of Detroit, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell at public auction, for cash, after thirty days' advertisement of the time, place, and terms of sale, the property in the city of Detroit purchased by him for the erection of a public building under and by virtue of an act of Congress approved May 25, 1882, entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Detroit, Mich.;" and the moneys received from such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That in the event of the purchase and use of an entire new site, then, after the erection of the building provided for in the first section of this act, or at such a time as the exigencies and needs of the public business may render such action prudent and desirable, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to sell, at public auction, for cash, and after thirty days' advertisement of the time, place, and terms of sale, the property or site now owned and occupied by the United States as a post-office, custom-house, and for other offices of the United States; and the money received from such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, delay the sale of the property referred to in the second section of this act, and offer the same for sale jointly with the property referred to in this section of this act, and in like manner and terms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in any and every case of an attempted sale, shall be authorized and empowered to reject any bid which in his opinion shall be less than the value of the property or part thereof offered for sale under the provisions of this act, and reoffer the same for sale in the matter above provided until the said property shall bring a fair price.

SEC. 4. That an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Detroit, Mich.," approved May 25, 1882, being chapter 187 of volume 22 of the Statutes of the United States, is hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any manner affecting the appropriation so far made for the purpose contemplated in that act, but that the same shall be available to be applied in effecting the objects sought under the provisions of this act.

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that this bill is precisely similar in its text to the bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House. I have not the time to state all the facts which perhaps should be stated to this House, but I assume the House will take cognizance of the fact this building is asked for a city of 175,000 people, with two dependencies numbering some 25,000 more, making a community of 200,000 people.

I will devote the few minutes left to me in giving to the House a comparison of the appropriation made in this bill with those made for erection of public buildings in thirty-one cities of this Union. I have selected for the purpose of this comparison no mean cities. I have omitted the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Chicago, Saint Louis, and San Francisco, and have taken cities of like character with the city of Detroit, many of them, indeed most of them, not of the same commercial importance of that city. I have selected such cities as Albany, N. Y.; Charleston, S. C.; Hartford, Conn.; Louisville, Ky.; Memphis, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; Portland, Oreg.; Portland, Me.; Toledo, Ohio, &c. I have made a comparison of the appropriations made for the public buildings in those thirty-one cities with that proposed in this bill.

My comparison has been made first upon the ratio of population, and upon that the city of Detroit would receive a little less than three millions of money. I have made a comparison upon the basis of the receipts of public moneys—first, if you please, the postal receipts. The postal revenue for Detroit last year was $303,126.02. The postal revenue from the thirty-one cities to which I have referred was $3,361,220. Striking an average on this basis would give to the city of Detroit $1,865,272.

Now I have made a comparison also upon the basis of the number of public buildings and the number of employés in the service of the Government, and it shows these figures: In the thirty-one cities I have mentioned the cost of public buildings is $19,000,000; the total number of Government employés is 1,730. In Detroit there are three hundred and six public employés, one hundred and ninety-six of whom require office-room. On this plan of comparison the appropriation for Detroit would be $2,480,000.

I have made also an estimate upon the basis of the customs revenue derived from these thirty-one cities, which aggregates $5,150,600. At Detroit last year $406,000 was collected. Taking this as the gauge of comparison, the appropriation for the city of Detroit would be $1,580,528. The total internal revenue derived from these cities was $24,537,236. The internal revenue collected at Detroit was $1,251,000. Upon this basis the appropriation would be $1,016,207.

I have made a further estimate, sir, based upon the total revenues derived from these cities from all sources, which will be found to aggregate $33,000,000. For Detroit it amounts to $1,970,280, on which basis the appropriation for that city would be $1,180,406.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate in support of this measure has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to understand clearly the effect of this bill from the hasty reading, and I beg to make some inquiries of the gentleman from Michigan with reference to it. In the first place it proposes to limit the cost, as I understand it, to $900,000, proposing either to build upon the present site or to select a new site. If a new site is purchased is it proposed that the proceeds of the sale of the old site shall be added to the $900,000 for the new building?

Mr. MAYBURY. No, sir. The bill especially states that the money realized from the sale of the present site shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand, then, sir, that part of the bill.

Now I think, perhaps, the amount suggested—$900,000—while in point of fact it is not larger than undoubtedly, as the gentleman says, we have appropriated for other large cities, is still, I think, a greater sum than is required.

We have been so extreme in our extravagance in regard to the erection of public buildings throughout the country for many years past that the country has protested against it. I think my friend ought to consent to the naming of a more reasonable sum for the erection of this building than the amount fixed in the bill. Nine hundred thousand dollars, as I understand it, is mentioned in the bill for that purpose—that is to say, for the purchase of the site and the erection of the building.

Mr. MAYBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purchase of the site and the construction of the building. Now I suggest that $700,000, or at the extreme $750,000, would be ample for all the purposes named.

The revenues mentioned by the gentleman do not indicate to any material extent the importance of this locality for a public building. Unimportant towns comparatively have the same claim. One in sight of where I live pays $3,000,000 into the public Treasury, and yet that furnishes no reason for the erection of a public building there. I ask the gentleman, therefore, before the time expires for calling for objections to the consideration of this bill, that in the event of a new site being purchased the same proposition shall be incorporated in this bill which was adopted a short time ago with reference to another bill, the bill immediately preceding this, and that it shall apply to this; that if a new site is purchased the plan of this building shall not be adopted until after the purchase of such site, and that then the balance of the appropriation remaining only shall be applied to this purpose. Will the gentleman consent to that?

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Speaker, I will state, if permitted to do so, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana, that when this matter was considered before the Senate committee the appropriation to be reported was fixed at one and a half million of dollars; and at my own suggestion the committee of this House—acting on my recommendation—reported the amount now fixed in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I am not asking as to the amount of appropriation, but to the limitation as to the remainder after purchasing the site; that the remainder only shall be expended in the construction of the building. The site is first to be purchased and the balance of this appropriation only applied to the building.

Mr. MAYBURY. As I understand the gentleman from Indiana, I see no objection to his suggestion. That is to say, that if the site shall be purchased with the $900,000 the building shall be erected out of the remainder.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that there be considered also as pending the proposed amendment to reduce the amount to $750,000.

Mr. MAYBURY. I think that there has been some controversy in the minds of gentlemen with reference to this question, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, of this extension of the appropriation for similar purposes. The statute in force would prevent that.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that is inoperative.

Mr. MAYBURY. But the statute exists and makes it a penal offense for any officer of the Government to extend the appropriation by plans or specifications involving a larger expenditure.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before objections are called for I presume it is understood that both those amendments may be offered.

Mr. MAYBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But there is the further question, Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY] accept that amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has no power to accept any amendment. The Chair understands it is agreed the amendments shall be offered. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Objection was made by two members—not a sufficient number.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is before the House for action. The question is on the amendments of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which the Clerk will read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The first proposition is to strike out $900,000 and insert $750,000; and then I propose to add the following language——

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division of the two propositions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order a division of the question.

The Clerk read the amendments proposed by Mr. HOLMAN, as follows:

Strike out "$900,000" and insert "$750,000."

And add as a proviso to the bill the following:

"Provided, however, That if a new site shall be purchased for said building, as heretofore authorized, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury after the site for said building shall have been purchased to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $750,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for. And no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building."

Mr. SPRINGER. A division of the question being permitted, in the event of the first proposition being voted down it would be necessary to modify the second so as to make the amount correspond with the amount named on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the question is susceptible of division. The question will first be on the first amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to reduce the amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that if the motion to decrease the amount is voted down, the amount in the second amendment can then be increased.

Mr. MAYBURY. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is understood the motion may be made to increase the amount in the second amendment if the first should be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it will be in order to make the second amendment correspond with the effect of the vote of the House on the first amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MAYBURY moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to reduce the amount provided in this bill from $900,000 to $750,000.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 43, noes 107.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum not having voted, I ask that we may have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of order. The hour under the special rule has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND rose.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I desire to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] after he has heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills; pending which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] rises to make a privileged report.

CLAIM AGENTS AND ATTORNEYS IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to report back the Senate bill No. 2511, and to ask for its immediate consideration under the previous order of the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2511) relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I inquire of the Chair is this bill privileged for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say it is. This bill was referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, with power to report it back at any time, which, in the view of the Chair, carries with it the right to consideration. The question of consideration, however, may be raised against the bill. The Chair holds the committee under the order of the House had the power to report the bill back at any time for immediate consideration in the absence of any question of consideration being raised.

Mr. HORR. How does the bill come before the House at the present time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just stated, as plainly and distinctly as he can, that the House ordered this bill to be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, with power to report it back at any time; and the committee has now reported it back.

Mr. HORR. And it goes to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, and has just stated that the power to report back at any time carries with it the right to consideration, subject to the right of every member to raise the question of consideration to be determined by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. At the time this bill was reported the House was about to divide on my motion that the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I ask if a privileged report can intervene to prevent the question being taken on my motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House was not "dividing" on the gentleman's motion, which is the language of the rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My motion was pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], stating to the House at the same time that he would recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] to make a privileged report. The Chair does not think the point of order well taken. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois had not been voted upon.

Mr. HORR. I do not see how the gentleman from Illinois, who had taken the floor and announced his purpose to proceed with the appropriation bill, could be taken off the floor by another bill thrust in here without the knowledge of any one. It does seem to me a queer proceeding. It is different from anything I have ever seen in this House before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman any point of order to raise?

Mr. HORR. I do raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HORR. I make the point that this bill can not come back to the House in this way except simply to be placed upon the Calendar, as it would be, in the first instance, when it came over from the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order, and states again, for the third time, this bill was referred to the committee with an order from the House to report it back at any time, which order, in the judgment of the Chair, in conformity to the uniform rulings of the Chair, carries with it the right of consideration, subject to the point of consideration being raised by any gentleman. The Chair goes further, and states that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] had moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for a certain purpose; the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] then rose with a motion of higher privilege, just as any gentleman in the House might have risen and moved that the House adjourn, which would have taken precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], as did the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas. The Chair so ruled and still so holds.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the Chair hold that the motion I made does not take precedence of the report of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the report of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is it not in the power of the majority of the House to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated more than once that the question of consideration may be raised by any member.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order, and I call for the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to the question of consideration, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the demand for the previous question is not in order until the bill has been read.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration upon this bill at this time, in order that the House may go on with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration was first raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. As many as are in favor of proceeding with the consideration of the bill reported by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] will say "ay"——

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the bill, and the question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7785), with the Senate amendments, and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no objection, it will be so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. Before putting that motion the Chair will lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (S. 235) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Augusta, Me.; and

A bill (S. 591) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley.

CIVIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the act of Congress approved January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," the Civil Service Commission has made to the President its second annual report. That report is herewith transmitted. The commission is in the second year of its existence. The President congratulates the country upon the success of its labors, commends the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress, and asks for an appropriation to continue the work.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 11, 1885.

REMOVAL OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior for subsistence and removal of certain Eastern Cherokee Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GAS-PIPES IN PENSION BUILDING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for gas-pipes in the United States pension building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Architect recommending an increase in the limit of cost of the public building at Brooklyn, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT DALLAS, TEX., AND OXFORD, MISS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a recommendation from the Supervising Architect for the extension of the limit of cost of public buildings at Dallas, Tex., and Oxford, Miss.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DUNHAM, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for five days, on account of important business.

BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Pensions bills of the following titles; which were ordered to be placed on the Private Calendar:

A bill (H. R. 7513), with an amendment, granting a pension to Margaret B. Harwood; and

A bill (H. R. 4393) for the relief of Lieut. Nathaniel Johnson Coffin.

W. H. MURDAUGH.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary two bills removing political disabilities.

There being no objection, Mr. TUCKER reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that we pass these bills at once; it will take but a moment.

Mr. COX, of New York. Bills of this character are usually passed as soon as reported.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill H. R. 8183; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to know whether there is a petition in this case from the person whose disabilities are to be removed.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, yes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and others called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has sent to the desk two bills, only one of which has been acted on.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I must call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The remaining bill will be returned to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to ask unanimous consent to take up the Mexican war pension bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it would. The regular order has been called for, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system, $4,100,000; $45,000 of which may be used, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the establishment, under existing law, of the free-delivery system in cities where it is not now established:

Mr. HORR. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "100" and inserting "535;" so as to make the appropriation for payment to letter-carriers and incidental expenses of free-delivery system $4,535,000. I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, in rising to urge the adoption of this amendment I wish to call attention to the vast importance of expediting as much as possible the delivery of letters in all the cities of the Union and all the large towns to which this free-delivery system is now and may be extended under the law. This is an era when we are saving as much as possible the time of the country. Time is business, it is commerce, it is progress, it is the advance of civilization.

The loss of half a day in all the great cities of the Union is so much lost from the executive capacity of the age in which we live. Nowhere can the amount of money now asked for be applied so as to affect so directly and potently the welfare of the whole country as in the administration of the Post-Office Department. In this matter there is no question of constitutional law, there are no local jealousies, no sectional interests to embarrass us. Every dollar that we give goes directly to the people, goes directly toward the promotion of the business, the welfare, the progress of the country. One hundred thousand dollars spent in our cities and large towns in securing the delivery of the mails at an earlier hour than they are now delivered will be an actual saving of more than ten times that amount to the country.

I hold in my hand a letter received a day or two since from a gentleman in Chicago, stating that unless the mails arrive there so as to be given to the carriers before 11 o'clock in the morning they are not delivered until the next day. Those letters comprise, perhaps, business orders from all regions of the country whose trade centers there, so that delay in the delivery of a single day's mail is often the cause of the loss of vastly more than the amount which would be distributed to that city under this amendment.

I know that in the city which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor there were last year many thousand applicants in favor of increasing this appropriation. It was then somewhat increased, and the great advantages of the increase have been so apparent that there is to-day a unanimous sentiment in favor of continuing this increase until letters shall be delivered in these great centers of the country without the least loss of time.

But this question does not affect the great cities alone; it affects as well all the towns having commercial connections with these cities. If a letter sent to New York or Chicago can not be delivered on the same day it is received there, at least one day is lost to the business and enterprise of the country centering in those cities.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If it will not disturb the gentleman, I would like to ask him whether this proposed enlargement of the appropriation is for the purpose of increasing delivery facilities or for increasing the salaries of carriers?

Mr. POTTER. Simply for increasing delivery facilities; nothing else.

Mr. HORR. The salaries are all fixed by law.

Mr. POTTER. The salaries are fixed by law. The object is that letters arriving at all the cities and towns of the country to which this system extends may be delivered at once, so that our constantly accelerating means of communication by steam, by telegraph, &c., may have due effect in the great centers of activity and commerce. The object is simply that mails arriving at these different places shall not be delayed unnecessarily, but delivered at once.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, we have in this item granted an increase of $50,000 over and above the appropriation for the current year. The amount we have appropriated is over a half a million more, or about a half a million more than the amount which was expended for the last year ending on the 30th of June.

Mr. MONEY. Compare it with this year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We have given an appropriation of half a million of dollars to the free-delivery offices over and above the amount expended last year.

Mr. MONEY. But how as to this year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It will be more. We have about reached the limit of the establishment of free-delivery offices. There are only nine, I understand, now in the United States not supplied with free-delivery service where it is possible to apply it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me right here. The gentleman will get an opportunity in his own time.

Mr. BINGHAM. What, under the law as it now exists, will be required to pay the letter-carrier service without the extension to an additional city and without the addition of another man?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman's question is too long and he can explain it in his own time. Now, I wish to say about this item that the subcommittee on appropriations have considered it, and the majority of that subcommittee have reached the conclusion, in view of the fact the time has come when a limit will be put to the free-delivery service in other cities, and in view of the fact we have given half a million dollars over what was expended last year, that the point has been reached, in the opinion of that subcommittee, when we should call a halt in extravagant appropriations for free-delivery offices.

Mr. HORR. Did you take into account the fact of the increase under the law of $150,000 in order to carry out the law itself?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What $150,000?

Mr. HORR. The increase of salaries under the law is $152,150.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is one of those items.

Mr. COX, of New York. Answer that question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, sir, as I said yesterday, so far as this service is concerned, the more you give the more will be demanded.

Mr. HORR. I beg pardon.

Mr. BINGHAM. Just the reverse.

Mr. HORR. The law fixes the salary at so much.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And the number of free-delivery letter-carriers will be multiplied no matter how much we appropriate.

Mr. HORR. You do not answer my question. Did you take into account that fact?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We took into account the whole situation and reached the conclusion that the sum we have appropriated is ample for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can go on without being interrupted I will proceed with my remarks.

Mr. COX, of New York. Did you——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have only five minutes—you will have your own time.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, let him go on.

Mr. COX, of New York. Allow me——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not now. These gentlemen are obtaining large appropriations every year.

Mr. COX, of New York. Allow me a question——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not now; wait until I get through.

Mr. COX, of New York. I never discarded you.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, then, put your question.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is whether this appropriation is in pursuance of existing law?

Mr. HORR. There is not money enough to pay them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When you get through with your questions I will proceed.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is all. I take but little of the time of this House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is in pursuance of the present law, and in my judgment if economically administered, as I hope it will be, under the next administration, it will furnish ample means to supply the free-delivery service.

Mr. HORR. Do you propose the incoming administration shall pay these men less than the law says they shall receive?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not.

Mr. HORR. Then your appropriation lacks $200,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield. I say there are millions and millions of people in this country who do not get free-delivery service, who are taxed in order to furnish it to towns and cities of 20,000 inhabitants in other sections.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is not correct, because we make a surplus.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not correct. New York city makes a surplus——

Mr. COX, of New York. And so does Philadelphia make a surplus, and so does Baltimore.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are but ten cities where the free-delivery service is self-sustaining.

A MEMBER. There is not a city that does not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have the statistics here to show. I say only ten—I may be mistaken about the exact number—are self-sustaining. The vast majority of free-delivery offices are a burden upon the Treasury. They do not pay, a vast majority of them.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman can not mean that, unless he confines them to local postage.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course I do.

Mr. HORR. Why of course?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The last Postmaster-General declared that it should be so confined, and made that the measure of the self-sustaining quality of the free-delivery offices. He declared in his report that that should be and was the proper measure.

Mr. HORR. Does not the gentleman from Illinois know that, as a whole, they pay a considerable amount of surplus revenue?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know that New York city furnishes nearly the entire bulk that comes from the free-delivery system.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONEY. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the statement of the honorable gentleman in charge of this bill is certainly misleading with reference to this portion of it. He takes occasion to say that the appropriation is half a million of dollars in excess of the appropriation of last year. Why did not the gentleman say of ten years ago, or make his basis of comparison any other ancient date?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Because that is too far off.

Mr. MONEY. If the gentleman undertakes to show the actual condition of the expenditures, why does he not compare it with the appropriations for the current fiscal year? Now, I say that it is only $100,000 in excess of the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BINGHAM. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. MONEY. The increased business, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, for the current year is 16.30 per cent., and if the gentleman in the preparation of his bill proposed to make an appropriation for this service commensurate with the increased business of the Department it will be necessary to appropriate $600,000.

Now, in the consideration of the provisions of this bill in its application to the postal service it should be remembered that it is neither a sectional nor a partisan service. It is a service that is performed for the benefit of the whole country, and I do not think that it is the intention of the people of the United States or their wish to cripple the Government in any manner in sustaining or in extending these facilities. It can not be so. In this particular item, therefore, not only would the appropriation, if made upon the basis of the increase of business, be over $600,000, but how can the gentleman state so positively that there could be only nine offices that would be benefited by the extension of this system? How can the gentleman tell what will be the growth of our cities and towns during the year? How many towns throughout the country may reach the limit of 20,000 population or $20,000 in gross revenue, which would entitle them to the benefits of the free-delivery system? That is a question that the gentleman has no means of determining.

And not only that, sir, but I wish to state also that the gentleman was mistaken when he said that he had considered the whole system of the postal service of this country, and had appropriated adequately to meet its necessities.

Why, taking into consideration the present force of carriers, if not a single one should be appointed during the fiscal year, and the system should not be extended to embrace a single town in addition to those where it is now in operation, the law regulating promotions would require more than the sum appropriated here to meet the demands of the service.

Mr. HORR. That is a fact.

Mr. MONEY. Of course it is. Even a blind man could see that. There can be no question but that the whole country is interested in the development of the free-delivery system. Every correspondent throughout this entire country is interested in the free-delivery system in order that his letter may get to his merchant or correspondent as speedily as possible. It is a service to the whole country and for the country and all the people and should not be hampered; and in addition to that if you cripple the service in one branch, so multiplied are the ramifications of the service and so sensitive is it, that you cripple it in every department.

And in point of fact, of the $52,000,000 that is covered by this bill, notwithstanding the stump-speeches which have been made here upon the subject of extravagance and economy, $50,000,000 of the sum can not be affected in the matter of expenditures by the figures put into this bill. That expenditure is regulated by the law as it stands. I care not if you appropriate $100,000 or $1,000,000,000; $50,000,000 in the application is governed by the law, and not affected by the provisions you incorporate here.

But, sir, this particular provision is limited by existing law. The Postmaster-General dare not go beyond that limit except in so far as the pay of the carriers at their present status and their promotion as regulated is concerned to meet the requirements of the service. Beyond that, however, the expenditure is limited by statutes already in existence, and it is for this House to say if it will cripple this branch of the service or develop it.

In my judgment, sir, it would be wise not only not to arrest the development of this service, but to extend it to cities of 10,000 inhabitants. After a while, as we progress in this country, I have no doubt whatever that it will be extended, and that we will eventually carry our letters into every town, village, and hamlet in the entire land. To-day we are at least twenty-five years behind most of the other civilized nations in this particular of free delivery. Most of the countries of Europe that pretend to a properly arranged postal system deliver letters by a carrier to the minor towns and hamlets. In Great Britain the delivery is daily in the towns and villages, and even in the rural districts they have carrier-delivery three times a week, and the lowly tenant of the cottage receives this welcome visitor. In Hungary and Austria, Italy and Spain, Switzerland, France, and Germany the same system is in operation for the benefit of the public.

Mr. HARDEMAN was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. MONEY.

Mr. MONEY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Georgia for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, it is not worth while to speak here of a few thousand or a few hundred thousand dollars in connection with a great service like this. Does any gentleman imagine any of his constituents will call him to account for a provision that extends more liberally and more efficiently a great public function like this, which diffuses its benefits all over the land? In my section of the country thousands of people would not care though you should abolish the Supreme Court, though you should do away with the Army and Navy; but lay your hand on the slightest member of this great service and you will arouse a general indignation.

We are all interested in the Post-Office, a Department by means of which the Government lays its hand of benediction on the people, and nothing but blessing can flow from it. We want this service so perfected, so extended, so developed that every community in the country, however remote, shall be brought into more intimate, closer, and more rapid communication with every other part of the country.

And after a while we shall take in the postal telegraph, and shall make communication so rapid and so frequent that sectional lines will be blotted out, and States will exist, except as to their autonomies, as simple geographical divisions. Nothing will tend to unite the people so much as to perfect your postal system. Let us not linger in the rear in the glorious race of progress. Except in machinery and appliances of distribution, we are behind the world in that liberal and enlightened spirit which carries out measures for the general good.

Our neighbor the Dominion of Canada transports all its newspapers and periodicals free of any charge, because it recognizes in the press of the country—its religious, agricultural, and other periodicals devoted to science, arts, and industry, and the great news press—a great educator of the people. I would have the diffusion of these means of education as free as the wind of heaven, without cost and without price, without limit or restriction.

If we rise to a proper sense of our duty we will enlarge this system it is true by prudent and proper advances, but we will enlarge it until it embraces within its operation every facility that human ingenuity can devise to make it as widespread and far-reaching and as general in its application as it is to-day in the free-delivery cities.

Let me state another thing. If you restrict the number of letter-carriers in the great cities you will put the country to the expense of building store-room for its mails. In New York there are handled one hundred and forty tons of mail matter each day.

If we restrict the facilities of mail delivery in any particular you must enlarge your accommodation for storing and handling your mails until they can be called for by the citizens themselves. And besides, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER], look at the time consumed by people visiting the office for their mails.

Another word, Mr. Chairman. In my opinion this amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] is necessary to preserve even the service as it is now. But we want its extension. We want these privileges carried further and further. And I assure you you never yet made an improvement in this service to which there has not been a response in the increase of its revenue. Talk of the cost of this service! The report of the Postmaster-General shows that the receipts of the free-delivery system amount to $1,273,000 above its expenses. It matters not if New York furnishes the whole of the excess of receipts, or if it is distributed through a number of cities.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A vast majority of the free-delivery cities do not pay expenses.

Mr. MONEY. What difference does that make?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It makes a great difference if New York and a few cities bear the expense of the service for the others.

Mr. MONEY. The people ask for this service, and the people cheerfully pay the money for it, and they should receive the benefit which it brings. [Loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have listened to the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] with interest. If the expression of beautiful theories without reducing them to practice were either desirable or possible, we might all afford to follow his suggestion. He began on a proposition to increase the appropriation for this special service. Branching off from that in beautiful and eloquent and metaphorical terms, he launched into an extension of the service from cities of 20,000 inhabitants down to those of 10,000 inhabitants.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Villages.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Villages, as the gentleman from North Carolina suggests. And what would it take to carry out the service in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi? Why, sir, in place of having a deficiency of from three to five millions of dollars a year we would have a deficiency of $15,000,000 a year, and, as now suggested to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS], an increase of office-holders that would be almost, like the sands of the seashore, innumerable.

I am in favor of the free-delivery system. It is not my purpose to attack it. It has performed a good work, and may be made useful in future. But, like all other branches of the service, it should be kept within judicious limits.

The gentleman from Mississippi, passing from that, suggests a still further departure, in which I think we should not follow him. Not content with swelling this appropriation, not satisfied with suggesting a scheme that would increase the appropriation for deficiencies to $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year, he goes into another project. What is that? That the Government ought to take possession of and control the telegraphs of the country. That is another beautiful scheme. But how practical! What would be the consequence of it? Already this free Republic is ruled over by 120,000 officers—selected how? It purports to be democratic; it is reputed to be a representative Republic; yet out of those 120,000 officers less than 500 are elected by the people. And the gentleman proposes a system which would vastly increase and probably double the number of these appointive officers, if the Government should ever assume to purchase or build a postal telegraph to be operated by Government officials. How many would it take to run that system? When would be the end of it? I enter my protest at this time against a system so problematical in its workings.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. MONEY. How many officials or employés, in addition to the present number, does the gentleman think it would require to do the business under a proper postal-telegraph system?

Mr. MCMILLIN. "In addition to the present number"—I know not, according to any plan that I have ever seen.

Mr. MONEY. I thought not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Nor does the gentleman.

Mr. MONEY. I can tell you.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You can not tell, nor does the man live possessing powers of mind this side of Omniscience that can tell.

Mr. MONEY. If my friend will allow me——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman has had his turn.

Mr. Chairman, it appears that on every bill that is brought in here for an increase of these appropriations the beauty of the postal system and its necessities are to be clamored about. I remember that in years gone by, in the star-route period, an appropriation of $2,500,000 was demanded by the Postal Department to continue peculation, fraud, thieving. It was done under the guise of extending the mail service.

Mr. HORR. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to argue the value of the postal-telegraph system. Whatever it may have of value belongs to the future. But I do think my honored friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in charge of this bill should have been more thoroughly candid and full in his statement when I asked him about the cost and the net proceeds of the free-delivery system. Why, sir, for the year which ended June 30, 1884, the excess of postage on local matter over the total cost of the service was $1,273,278.35. The increase over the preceding year was $251,384.34.

Every time we have increased the appropriations for this service we have added to the revenue, and any business man will readily understand what that means and how it comes about. The Postmaster-General has told you on this subject what I will not read, but I will embody in my remarks. This system of delivery is more acceptable than the old mode of office delivery. It is more accurate, more thorough in the delivery of letters. It reduces the number of dead letters. It diverts to the post-office many letters formerly delivered by expresses and private messengers. It stimulates mail and local correspondence, increases postage on local matter, saves time and money to the people and fruitless calls at the post-office. It yields a large surplus of postage on local matter above its cost, notwithstanding that the class of matter for which it gets credit is only about 25 per cent. of the matter handled by the carriers. There is no answer to these facts. There is no way of getting over them, or under them, or around them; and the Committee on Appropriations in appropriating money in pursuance of existing law should have brought in an amount adequate to meet every idea and requirement embodied in the legislation on this subject. I hope that this House will stand by the letter-carriers, stand by this increase of revenue, stand by the men who stand by the letter-carriers, who are our best friends in all our local and domestic relations.

Mr. HORR. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not accustomed to speak in this House upon subjects that I am not informed upon. When I undertake to express views upon any subject here, I do it only after careful study and preparation. I have had the honor to-day to draw the fire of my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who, not having given himself the trouble to examine into this matter of the postal service, is able to speak out of the abundance of what he does not know, and consequently can say a great deal. [Laughter.]

The gentleman defies me or any other man to say what would be the number of additional Government employés required to perform the service under a proper postal telegraph system, and, as the matter is before the House, I think it a proper thing to reply to him now. I asked the gentleman whether he knew what the number would be, and he said he did not. That was the answer that I expected of him. Sir, I do know, because the committee to which I have the honor to belong has now upon your Calendar a bill reported by the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], which, if enacted into law, would give a fine postal telegraph system to this country with not one single added Federal official, not a single additional appointment, and would make a reduction in rates to a schedule under which every solitary telegraph company in the United States has signified its intention to bid if the bill should become a law. And yet, as I have said, that system provides for no additional Federal officials, no enlargement whatever of the Federal patronage. So much for that question.

Now, when gentlemen speak here about robbing the Treasury to give the people proper mail service, and talk about the people being taxed to support this great post-office system, I ask them if they are able to point to any system of taxation so universal in its application, so easy of collection, or borne with such general acquiescence in the levying of it as the tax that is paid in the form of postage for the conveyance of mail matter.

Mr. HORR. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, while I recognize the intelligence and the information that this general debate has given us, I fail to see its direct bearing upon the paragraph now at issue. If I can have the attention of the House for five minutes I think I can clearly demonstrate that the amount allowed in this bill will not conduct this service during the next fiscal year under the law as it now exists.

The letter-carrier service, like the "civil service," has come to stay in the future administration of this Government. It is the offspring of Republican administration, and came into being under legislation adopted in 1863. To-day, recognizing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] as the spokesman of the next administration, the Republican party hands over this service to the incoming administration with a net profit of $1,250,000 per annum.

This bill, as submitted by the committee, appropriates $4,100,000 for this service. The law passed at the first session of this Congress gives for this service for the present fiscal year $4,050,000. Before this same Committee on Appropriations is an application for a deficiency of $50,000 in this service created under the law. When that deficiency is met, the appropriation in this bill will be exactly what it is for the present fiscal year. But that is not enough.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman will allow me to say that the appropriation last year was $3,500,000——

Mr. BINGHAM. The year before last.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I mean the appropriation for the year ending the 30th of June last. The Postmaster-General reports that of that appropriation over $10,000 remains in the Treasury unexpended.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does the gentleman discuss the appropriations of last year? The issue is, what is the service costing this year and what will it cost next year? The gentleman undertakes to predicate the appropriations for the coming year upon those for the last year; but they should be predicated on the expenditures of the present fiscal year and the necessary increase of business. I hold in my hand a letter from the chief of the letter-carrier division of the Post-Office Department, stating that, without extending this service to a single additional city, without the employment of one additional man, it will cost, under the law for the next fiscal year, $4,297,950; for it is to be remembered that letter-carriers entering the service at $600 receive after one year's service $800, and after two years' service $1,000. This is the amount they must be paid under existing law. So that $197,950 will be required for the next fiscal year beyond the amount allowed in this bill; yet the bill provides that $45,000 shall be given for the establishment of new offices.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to have about two minutes more.

Mr. BAYNE obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is a paying service. It does not come to this House with hat in hand asking for alms. Here is a common-sense business proposition. Four million and fifty thousand dollars has been given to this branch of the Post-Office Department to be expended during the present fiscal year. What is the result? I hold in my hand a dispatch from the chief of this service, stating that the net income to the Government from this service will be $1,250,000. What business man of this House, if he could realize $1,250,000 upon an investment of $4,050,000, would not extend such a system? Since 1874, without the break of a single year, this service has returned a large net revenue to the Government.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? The Postmaster-General says that there are one hundred and fifty-six letter-carrier offices——

Mr. BINGHAM. I am speaking of these offices as a group.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And of these one hundred and fifty-six offices only twelve are self-sustaining.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not care if only one is self-sustaining. You have established this system; it is now in successful operation; and the gentleman himself by his own bill is debarred from arguing against it, because the bill appropriates $45,000 for the establishment of new offices.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state that according to official report the net revenue derived from this system during the present fiscal year will be a million and a quarter of dollars.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In arriving at that result does not the gentleman take the net revenue from all sources in the cities that have this system?

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me explain. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I know that the city of New York and a few other cities pay a revenue, but I know also there are many others that do not.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad to have the opportunity to make an explanation. The letter-carrier service in the cities where it is established depends wholly for the payment of its expenses and for its revenue upon the postage on drop or local letters. It not only does its work and returns a million and a quarter of dollars profit to the Government, but every letter and every newspaper coming from every section of the country to be delivered at these local delivery offices is delivered by the carriers without the charge of a fractional part of a cent to the general Post-Office service.

It makes a million and a quarter of dollars per annum upon its own business, and does in addition the delivery of all other mail matter that goes into that office.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise so much to oppose the amendment as to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if this bill is to pass, as well as the other appropriation bills behind it, it will be impossible to allow so much time to be consumed as has been on this Post-Office appropriation bill up to the present moment. Gentlemen can not pass the appropriation bills if they are to drag as this bill has dragged. If, then, the intention be to pursue that policy in regard to all of the appropriation bills, this House may as well make up its mind to a called session and be done with it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it not perfectly competent for the gentleman at any time to move the committee rise and close debate?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is in the hands of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HORR. Could not all this trouble be avoided if they would bring them in right in the first place?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They are brought in right.

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly, if we should throw wide open the doors of the Treasury and invite gentlemen to come in and help themselves we would be all right from my friend's standpoint.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes; that is their position.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not taken up any time in this five-minute discussion, and therefore will be indulged for a few remarks on the pending subject. Gentlemen assume this Committee of the Whole know nothing about it, that gentlemen have not examined the report of the Postmaster-General, that this is a fresh subject of discussion. Now, every gentleman knows last year three and a half millions of dollars were appropriated for this service, and that $14,500 were afterward added, making in all $3,514,500, of which ten thousand and more dollars went back into the Treasury.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. In this the second year after that state of things it is proposed to add on the basis of that expenditure nearly $600,000 to this branch of the service. Gentlemen know further it is these branches of the public service nearest to the people, in which they take the deepest and most earnest interest, on measures of public policy of the highest moment, that these branches of the Government are seized upon to inaugurate schemes of extravagance which sooner or later bring the blush of shame to honest men all over the land. But when gentlemen make appeal for extravagant and unwarranted appropriations in any given branch of the public service on account of its being nearest to the hearts of the people, they forget that in thus encouraging unnecessary and wasteful extravagance of public expenditure they are sowing seeds which always result in a harvest of humiliation and misery to the country.

Now, an increase of $600,000 in this service is in my judgment ample and sufficient for all proper purposes. I am making no argument against the free-delivery system. I think it is good enough. There are about ten of these offices which pay their own way. The industry of the whole balance of the people supports the others. I am not inclined to complain of it. The system is fairly fastened upon the country, and there is a disposition to acquiesce in it. I do, for one. But, sir, I do protest against opening up here, because of the nearness of this service to the hearts of the people, a system of extravagant and discreditable expenditure of the public money.

The Committee on Appropriations believe this increase to be sufficient.

A MEMBER. There is no increase.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary of letter-carriers is fixed, but the number to be employed is within the discretion of the Postmaster-General. If we make extravagant appropriations, of course the number will be increased beyond the wants of the public service, and you can not prevent it. If you furnish the money to the Post-Office Department the pressure will be irresistible to expend every dollar of it. It is because it is necessary to impose not only just restraints upon ourselves, but upon those charged with the administration of the Government, we appeal to you to make only a fair and reasonable increase of appropriation for the public service, and not to permit bills in which great public interest is felt to be made the agency of extravagance and corruption in governmental administration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does not the gentleman give us for the incoming administration sufficient to execute the law?

Mr. COX, of New York. That is what I wish answered.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have already stated, and as every gentleman knows, while the salary is fixed by law, the number of persons to be employed is within the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are there now.

Mr. HOLMAN. If you furnish the money irresistible pressure will be brought to bear upon the Postmaster-General to employ men beyond the needs of the service. Now, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will move the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 90.

Mr. TOWNSHEND demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. BINGHAM were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 77.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. HORR. I now call for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn by unanimous consent, and the question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

Mr. RANDALL. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 64.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that he take a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will withdraw the demand for tellers, and give notice that I shall demand a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wrapping paper——

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I give way for that motion, but let the amendment be stated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want to oppose the amendment; let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The committee has just voted down a motion to rise. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I make the point of order that it is not competent to renew that motion; the last vote disclosed a large majority in opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The last vote was on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, and there has been intervening business since the former vote on the motion to rise.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to offer the amendment now, to have it printed in the RECORD, and will then yield to the motion to rise.

Mr. HAMMOND. For the purpose of having the amendment read I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can then be printed for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 35 insert:

"Letter-carriers may be employed for the free delivery of mail matter as frequently as the public convenience may require at every place containing a population of not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits."

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RANDALL. A point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk conclude the reading of the amendment. The point of order will be reserved.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment, as follows:

Provided, The gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year from the post-office or post-offices in such place shall have aggregated at least $10,000.

Letter-carriers may also be employed at the principal and most central post-office of towns or places within short distances of one another, provided such towns or places contain in the aggregate a population of not less than 10,000, and the gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year from the several offices aggregate not less than $10,000.

All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The point of order is made upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order are reserved.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not reserve the point of order, but I make the point of order directly upon it. I am willing, however, that the gentleman from New York shall be heard if he desires it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I submit as a point of order that that was read simply for the purpose of allowing it to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I want my point of order to be considered as pending.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. My point of order is that the gentleman from New York rose to move this amendment and had the floor, but between the time that he sent it up to the desk and the time it was read by the Clerk the gentleman from Georgia interposed the motion that the committee rise. I make the point of order that the gentleman had not the floor for that purpose until the amendment had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman subsequently yielded the floor for that purpose, and the amendment was read by the Clerk for the information of the House, at the suggestion of the gentleman from New York himself, in order that it might be printed in the RECORD.

The question is, Will the committee now rise?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Georgia yielded the floor to have an amendment of the gentleman from New York read. When it was read I immediately raised the point of order upon it. Now I insist that I have the right to have that point of order disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state that the gentleman from Georgia yielded to have the amendment read for information in order that it might be printed in the RECORD. It has been read, then, simply for information, and is not now a pending amendment. The Chair distinctly stated that the points of order were reserved.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order upon it now.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order when the amendment is proposed for consideration. The question is, Shall the committee now rise?

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House do now adjourn, but yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD] to make a motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If the motion to adjourn is withdrawn I renew it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BEACH: Petition of citizens of Middletown, N. Y., in reference to the Mormon question—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Haverstraw, N. Y., in reference to the Mormon question—to the same committee.

Also, resolution of citizens of Karns City, Pa., upon the subject of river and harbor improvement—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, memorial of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, in favor of the acquisition by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canals—to the same committee.

By Mr. HUTCHINS: Petition of citizens of Westchester County, New York, on the Mormon question—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. B. W. JONES: Resolution of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., relating to the coinage of silver dollars—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of Augustus P. Clarke, late surgeon of the Sixth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, war of 1861, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOULTON: Petition of 200 citizens of Effingham County, praying for action against polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SKINNER: Petition of William M. Thomson, of Alexandria Bay, N. Y., and 28 others, asking that the United States acquire title to Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canals, and make the same free of tolls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Anna Shelmidine, of Lorraine, N. Y., and others, asking for an increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STORM: Petition of Rev. J. B. Woodward and 57 others, citizens of East Stroudsburg, Pa., praying for the passage of certain bills for the suppression of polygamy in the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, praying for the enactment of a law for the acquisition by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WEMPLE: Petition of citizens of Gloversville, N. Y., urging action by Congress on the bills now before them for the suppression of Mormonism—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JAMES WILSON: Petition of William Mauler, for compensation—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. BURNES: Of numerous citizens of Mound City, of Ebony, and of Maryville, Mo.

By Mr. COBB: Of numerous citizens of Green and Knox Counties, Indiana.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 5th instant, a report of the Commissioner of Railroads and letters from the Attorney-General and the president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company on the subject of the settlement of the indebtedness of that company as provided in the Thurman act, so called. If there be no objection, the letter of the Secretary, with the accompanying letters and papers, will be printed, and they, with the accompanying printed documents, will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, a list of all persons employed in his Department during the year ended December 31, 1884; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 4th instant, a report of the steps taken by him to establish an advanced course of instruction of naval officers at Coasters' Harbor Island, Rhode Island; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7522) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Kansas not now in his seat [Mr. PLUMB] desired that this bill should be laid upon the table for the time being if he were not in the Senate at the time it was presented. If there be no objection the bill will be laid on the table.

The bill (H. R. 851) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 11, 1885.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a committee of three members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the House, and two members of the Senate be appointed by that body, to wait on Grover Cleveland, of the State of New York, and to notify him that he has been duly elected President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th of March, 1885; and also to notify Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, that he has been duly elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing with the 4th day of March, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARLAND. I move to refer that resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If such a resolution be deemed proper or necessary, the language of this one needs some correction, and it is better for it to go to that committee for investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a resolution adopted at a meeting of steamboat owners and managers held in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, in which they remonstrate against the repeal of section 4419 of the Revised Statutes, and state that if that section should be repealed a useless and unnecessary burden would be added to the already oppressed navigation interest. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented petitions of the Daily and Weekly Local, of Sandusky, Ohio; the Daily and Semi-Weekly Torchlight, of Xenia, Ohio; the Standard of the Cross, of Cleveland, Ohio; the Christian Witness, of Newark, Ohio; the Standard Publishing Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio; the Yellow Springs Review, of Yellow Springs, Ohio; the Weekly Echo, of South Solon, Ohio; the Western Tract Society, of Cincinnati, Ohio; the Independent Press, of Wakeman, Ohio; the East Liverpool (Ohio) Tribune; the Hocking Valley Printing and Publishing Company, of Athens, Ohio; the Ohio Educational Monthly, of Akron, Ohio; the Buckeye Vidette, of Salem, Ohio; the Republican Gazette, of Logan, Ohio; the Beverly Dispatch, of Beverly, Ohio; the Independent, of Richmond, Ohio; the Toronto Tribune, of Toronto, Ohio; the Free Press, of Fredericktown, Ohio; the Dennice Novověku, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the Portsmouth Blade, of Portsmouth, Ohio, praying for a reduction of postage on second-class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the repeal of the law which fixes the term of certain administrative officers at four years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JACKSON. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1400) for the relief of Edward C. Garlick, have directed me to report the same back adversely. At the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1999) for the relief of John K. Le Baron, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of George T. Dudley, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2503) for the relief of Charles E. Maris, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 632) for the relief of the heirs of Manning R. Ariail and Sarah Fish, deceased; and

A bill (S. 1370) for the relief of Washington Ford.

Mr. HALE. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back a communication from the Secretary of War, with sundry papers accompanying it, on the subject of establishing signal stations upon the Island of Nantucket, Massachusetts, and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1327) for the relief of J. H. Hammond, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

CHANGE OF NAME OF BANK.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2571) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock, to report it favorably with an amendment. This is a very short bill, and it is rather necessary that it should reach the other House in season to be acted upon there. I therefore ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was to add to section 2 the following words:

And that after such change of name the First National Bank of Little Rock shall continue to be in all respects the identical association previously known as the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The Chair begs to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the bill (S. 2571) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock. It appears on looking at the bill after its passage that in the print where the word "months" should be printed it is printed "month."

Provided, That such acceptance be made within six month after the passage of this act.

The Chair will ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill that may be made to read "months" instead of "month" to make sense of it. The Chair hears no objection.

THE STEAMER ALERT.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an original joint resolution to authorize the return to the Government of Great Britain of the Arctic relief steamer Alert. As it is necessary that this measure should go to the other House as soon as possible, I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 121) to authorize the return to the Government of Great Britain of the Arctic relief steamer Alert was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to return to the Government of Great Britain the Arctic relief steamer Alert, presented by that government to form a part of the United States relief expedition which on the 22d of June, 1881, rescued Lieut. A. W. Greely and the survivors of his party at Cape Sabine; and the President is also hereby requested in returning the Alert to express suitable acknowledgments for the action of said government in so promptly placing the vessel at the service of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS O. OSBORN.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill (S. 2635) to permit Thomas O. Osborn, minister-resident and consul-general of the United States to Buenos Ayres, to receive a symbolic shield from the Argentine Republic; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from California will ask that the bill may be passed at once so that it may go to the other House.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will make that request. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be read at length subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Thomas O. Osborn, minister-resident and consul-general of the United States at Buenos Ayres, be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive an engraved symbolic shield from the Argentine Republic.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2636) granting a pension to Laura M. Cheek; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 123) prohibiting railroad corporations selling, mortgaging, or pledging lands donated by Congress or offering so to do when a bill for forfeiture is under consideration in either branch of Congress or patents have not been issued for the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LOAN OF TENTS.

Mr. JONAS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 122) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twelve hospital tents and outfits to the American Society of the Red Cross for use in New Orleans; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONAS. I request the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to loan to the American Association of the Red Cross for use by their branch in New Orleans at the World's Exposition grounds twelve hospital tents and outfits: Provided, Satisfactory security is given for the safe-keeping and return of the same.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill. In support of the amendment I present certain letters from the Treasury Department containing a recommendation for the proposed appropriation. I move that the amendment, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to submit a resolution in regard to a formal matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two resolutions went over yesterday which it is the duty of the Chair first to lay before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" being in order, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. INGALLS was read, as follows:

Provided, That the Senate does not assent to the concluding declaration of the President of the Senate in the announcement of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States made in the presence of the two Houses of Congress this day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I propose to make the same motion in regard to the resolution offered by me yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. It will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to waive the reading of it. The Senate heard it yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the reading of the resolution will be dispensed with.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CONGER. Will the resolution be printed in the RECORD the same as if read?

Mr. HOAR. It was printed in yesterday's proceedings when proposed.

Mr. CONGER. It is not printed in to-day's RECORD, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it is printed in the RECORD. It will not be reprinted in to-day's proceedings ordinarily. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following resolution, which I believe is in accordance with the usual custom of the Senate:

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. RANSOM as the committee of arrangements.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 235) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Augusta, Me.;

A bill (S. 591) for the relief of the estate of Chester Ashley; and

A bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On the 9th day of December the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes, was ordered to be placed upon the Calendar of Special Orders. It remained on the special-order calendar until within a few days, when, without having been considered by the Senate, it was displaced from its order and does not appear upon the Calendar of Special Orders. I ask if there has been some mistake on the part of the clerks in taking the bill from the Special-Order Calendar, or whether it has been done by a vote of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there has been no mistake on the part of the clerks. The bill was laid before the Senate as a special order and considered, in the technical sense of being entered on the Journal as considered, as a bill before the Senate for action. The Senate by a vote refused to consider it, and proceeded to consider another bill. That, under the constant ruling of the presiding officer, sent the bill back to its place on the General Calendar, and it ceased to be a special order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill be restored to its place on the Calendar as a special order. I doubt very much whether Senators considered, in the hurry of the moment when they resolved to take up for consideration the silver bill, that they were displacing this bill upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. What would be the place of the bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It would be at the head of the Calendar of Special Orders. There is where it belongs. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be restored to its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska and to the Senate, what perhaps is entirely unnecessary, that under the present rules it is in order for a Senator at any time after the morning business is closed to rise in his place and move to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the Calendar, which motion is to be determined at once and without debate.

The Chair will now state the request of the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes, be restored to the place it formerly held at the head of the Calendar of Special Orders. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire if that would affect the unfinished business, which is the pending order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not affect the unfinished business.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not understand under what rule the bill, having been made a special order, was retired to a place on the Calendar of General Orders. It seemed to me at the time the decision was first announced, which I believe was on the morning after another bill had been taken up, that the Senate was not properly advised, or it might not have consented to the ruling which was made. I did not understand that any public announcement had been delivered from the Chair as to the rule or the interpretation of the rule under which the special order was displaced. It occurred to me at the time when I first discovered it that it was not in accordance with the spirit of the rule. I have always understood that when a bill was made a special order it would remain such under our rules unless displaced in the manner pointed out by the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule, Rule X, in relation to special orders, reads in this way:

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives, the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day—

This the Chair did, and it was before the Senate for action upon the bill—and if it is not finally disposed of on that day, it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders, in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

2. When two or more special orders have been made for the same time they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

And all motions to change such order, or to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

Pending this bill, which pursuant to the special order of the Senate had been laid before the Senate and was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole for action, under another rule of the Senate the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of another bill. The Senate on the yeas and nays voted that it would proceed to the consideration of that other bill, and that in the understanding of the Chair (he consulted some Senators either then or on a former occasion) finished that bill as a special order. To hold otherwise would be to hold that a bill once made a special order would through a whole session retain its place unless it was acted upon directly by a vote rejecting it or passing it. The Chair could not put that interpretation on the rule and did not.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not speak complainingly of the decision, but I am very sure that the Senate has not until this time understood it. It was not the purpose in the vote which I gave in any way to displace or interfere with the special order. But I see that there are still on the Calendar of Special Orders, the time for which has long since passed, that is, the particular day has long since passed, three bills or joint resolutions yet remaining assigned as special orders; and I can not understand why, if one special order was displaced by a yea-and-nay vote upon the question to take up another bill, all of those, which had been previously reached in the order of time, at least so far as the almanac is concerned, should not have taken the fate of the first upon the list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While the order of time had gone by, they had not been reached in the procedure of the Senate, and they had not had their day in court, so to speak, as special orders not having been reached before, the Senate always having had before it unfinished business. The Chair may add to the Senator from Kansas that the present occupant of the chair voted against the motion of his colleague, because the Chair understood what his own interpretation of the rule was, and he did not wish to displace the Texas Pacific bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Chair then understand that if the Senate should vote to-day to take up another bill, the first special order upon the assignment would be displaced and go back to the Calendar of General Orders?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand it until that special order is placed before the Senate and is before the Senate as a bill to be acted on.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough to state under what rule a motion to proceed to take up another subject is in order when a special order is pending, that special order having been made so by a two-thirds vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that when a bill is made a special order and is laid before the Senate, that special order of the Senate has been executed. It has been placed before the Senate for consideration at that time. That being done, the Chair understands the provisions of Rule IX, as well as the provisions of the rule relating to special orders which expressly recognize a motion to proceed to other business, entitle any Senator, the special order having been laid before the Senate and the bill being under consideration, to move to displace that, as he might any other bill.

Mr. HOAR. Rule IX and Rule X both seem in their letter, as also the general rule about motions, to exclude the right to put that question in that form when a special order is before the Senate. Rule IX says:

If there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order * * * and in such case the following motions shall be in order.

Then the other rule says what motions shall be in order—to amend, to adjourn, and so on; and Rule XXII says on page 13:

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess, &c.

Neither of these rules admits a motion to proceed to take up another subject when a special order is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule as to special orders—the Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to it—stood before its last amendment at the last session differently from what it does now; but Rule IX stood very much, if not entirely, the same. Under the rules as they then stood the Chair announced his decision on some question that was presented, that it would be in order to move to proceed directly to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar under the second clause of the enumerated motions under Rule IX. That was doubted upon the suggested ground that special orders once laid before the Senate did not fall within the scope of the ninth rule. The Chair thought that they did; but that being doubted, the matter was referred to the Committee on Rules, and they reported two amendments, among which the Chair thinks he remembers was this one at the end of Rule X:

And all motions to change such order, or to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

The Chair thinks, if he understood the Committee on Rules, the purpose of that was to put a special order once laid before the Senate within the same category of the power of the Senate upon motion to proceed to other business if it chose to do so.

Mr. HOAR. Then the first clause of the tenth rule would seem to be nugatory; that is, that if the special order be not finally disposed of on that day it shall retain its place. Certainly it is not a final disposition of that order to lay it before the Senate. It is not a final disposition of it to substitute some other business for that day. If it be not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time in which it was made a special order unless it shall become by an adjournment unfinished business. That is the provision. It seems to me that would require, if the special order were displaced by something else, that it should take its old place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sees the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts and saw it when the matter was under consideration on a former occasion, but taking the whole rules together, the Chair thought and still thinks, with great respect, that a special order is finally disposed of as a special order when it has been regularly laid before the Senate and is up for consideration and by a vote of the Senate it is declared that it will not consider it and will consider something else.

Mr. HOAR. The rule contemplates that if it continues during the day and is the unfinished business by adjournment it is not finally disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It finally disposes of it as a special order, and it becomes unfinished business by the very language of the rule, as the Chair thinks.

Mr. HOAR. If it be not finally disposed of, it shall be so and so, unless it becomes by adjournment unfinished business, implying that it is not finally disposed of in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair puts exactly the opposite interpretation on those words, that when it becomes the unfinished business it ceases to be a special order and has been disposed of as that, but stands at the very top of the whole Calendar as unfinished business, having therefore a preference over all special orders.

Mr. SEWELL. Does not the third section of Rule IX apply to the case in point? It reads thus:

"Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

That is as I understand the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was not the case. A motion to pass over is different from a motion to supersede a bill and proceed to another bill. Passing over is quite a different thing from displacement on motion.

Mr. SEWELL. I understood this bill was set aside temporarily or otherwise passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was not the motion. The motion was a direct one under another clause of the rule to proceed to the consideration of the trade-dollar bill, and on the Chair's understanding of the rule he voted against the motion of his colleague although he wished to have the trade-dollar bill considered, voted on the yeas and nays to keep the special order where it stood for action.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I asked unanimous consent that the bill be restored to its place on the Calendar of Special Orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the Texas Pacific land-grant forfeiture bill be restored to its old place at the head of the Calendar of Special Orders? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to prevent any struggle, for we have come to that period of the session when it is likely to come, I suggest, without knowing the bills on the Calendar, that by unanimous consent the House bills now on the Calendar may be taken up under the eighth rule, subject to objection and also subject to the five-minute limitation of debate. In that way we may dispatch a number of bills that will excite but little opposition, or if there is any objection after that they go over and take their chances with other bills. I make that suggestion.

Mr. WILSON. Does that displace the pending bill reached in the call of the Calendar?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it brings them under the eighth rule. I move to take up House bills.

Mr. SEWELL. Suppose you take up a House bill and I object to it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it goes over. It is subject to the eighth rule. I propose to take up House bills under the provisions of the eighth rule.

Mr. WILSON. If that interferes with the present position of the bill for the relief of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, I object to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not interfere with that. We dispose of this order first, and leave that still standing.

Mr. WILSON. Then I object. That bill, as I have stated before, was reported nearly a year ago and it has got by repeated displacements until now it is at the head of the Calendar, and I desire it to be continued.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to vote for that bill, but it can come up again as soon as this order is disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. It was reported last March. It will require the action of the House of Representatives if it passes the Senate, and I can not consent to its displacement now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Are we to stop until the State of Iowa does justice to its citizens? For the State of Iowa ought to pay every dollar of this money. I do not want to go into that discussion; but I think it is wrong to keep that bill in the way of all others.

Mr. WILSON. Then I say the Senator ought not to start that discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is exactly right to let that bill stand in the way of all legislation. I do not know what the bills from the House are, but I know that there are several important bills that the Senate is very much in favor of. We can probably in a short time dispose of all those to which there is no objection, and thus get rid of and enroll those bills in time to have it done methodically and without mistake. I have always proposed and expect to vote for the bill of the Senator from Iowa, but I do not think it ought to stand in the way of the general legislation of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the House bills on the Calendar of the Senate be taken up in their order as under Rule VIII, subject to objection and to five minutes' debate? Does the Senator from Ohio ask that Rule VIII shall also operate in regard to a vote of the Senate to consider a bill notwithstanding an objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; let the order be under the operation of the eighth rule entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair only wanted to understand it. The Chair will therefore state the request again. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the House bills on the Calendar be taken up in their order as under the whole operation of Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," that order of business is closed and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII. The first bill in order on the Calendar is Senate bill No. 1886.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed at page 26 the reading of the report submitted by Mr. PLUMB from the Committee on Public Lands April 8, 1884.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that the Senator from New York will consent that the further reading of this report may be dispensed with. It does not go into the RECORD, the reading of it does not inform the Senate about anything; it is merely in the way of the progress of the bill; and unless the Senator desires to hear it read himself I hope he will consent that the further reading may be dispensed with. We can refer to such parts of the report as we desire in our remarks, and those parts will then go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. LAPHAM. Since the statement was made yesterday that no part of this report can go into the RECORD I am inclined to yield the demand that it shall be read; but I supposed that the report being read it would be placed in the RECORD, where it could be seen. Under the ruling of the Chair it appears it will not go into the RECORD. I want in some way that the views of the minority, which are addressed directly to the consideration of the question before the Senate, shall be either printed in the RECORD or read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York object to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator that he can put any part of the report he chooses in his own remarks so as to bring out anything that he desires to inform the Senate of. That will answer every purpose.

Mr. LAPHAM. Although I was charged yesterday with being an obstructionist because I insisted upon the reading of the report of the committee in support of the bill, I have no desire to detain the Senate with the reading of the residue of this report; none whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to dispensing with the further reading of the report. The further reading is dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I move the indefinite postponement of this bill; and my purpose in doing so is to get the question at issue before the Senate directly as to whether we ought to consider it or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORGAN. The subject has been before the Senate very frequently. I suppose it has received as much examination as almost any other question of a like character at least that has ever been here. It has been before the Committee on the Judiciary and received a most thorough examination from that committee, and they made a unanimous report. I think it was unanimous. The report to which I refer was presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND], declaring that there was nothing in this case of which Congress had any jurisdiction.

The history of the case is a very prolonged struggle between the State of Iowa and its own citizens, between the State of Iowa and the United States Government, and between the citizens of Iowa and the United States Government. It originated, as the Senate knows, in a grant of land made to the State of Iowa for the purpose of improving the Des Moines River. The first question that arose in it was whether the land thus set apart for this public work was granted above the Raccoon Fork of that river. While this controversy was pending here a number of citizens, attracted doubtless by the excellent quality of the land and the beauty of the country, moved in there and commenced their settlements. They were originally squatters, as they are termed, and I believe they still honor the name by having located under that title in the State of Iowa, a large number of them doubtless most excellent people, perhaps as good a community as there is in that State.

They commenced to set up their titles to this tract of land; they pressed their claims upon the local land offices and afterward upon the Department of the Interior, and many of them obtained certificates of entry, and some of them obtained patents.

Congress sought to relieve the difficulty by passing a joint resolution explanatory of former legislation. The effort of Congress was evidently only to quiet the title, to give to the State of Iowa the grant of lands that was embraced in the original act, not the later interpretation, but to confirm as far as they could confirm the titles that had been made under the sanction of the laws of the State of Iowa.

Out of this imbroglio arose a number of lawsuits between quite a number of different parties. These lawsuits originated, all of them, I believe, in the State of Iowa and in the State courts of Iowa; at all events the State courts of Iowa were appealed to from the local land courts up to the supreme court, and from thence appeals were taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and a variety of cases that it is not necessary now to enumerate have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now this bill provides for a new lawsuit; and that is all that it does provide for—a lawsuit in which the Government of the United States shall be one of the plaintiffs, and a certain class of persons interested in these lands shall join with the Government in the action, the object of it being as declared to settle all questions of controversy in respect to the ownership of these lands.

When this case was before the committee we went over the subject and investigated it as thoroughly as we could, having also the advantage of the report made by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was an exhaustive report. A minority of the Committee on Public Lands agreed with the Committee on the Judiciary that we could find no ground of jurisdiction for legislative purposes remaining in Congress; that this whole matter had been decided by the courts of the country, and that there was really no question left open that we would discover that the courts had not practically adjudicated touching the title to these lands.

Mr. President, a very fair way to try this matter would be this: it would be for some of the Senators who insist upon the passage of this bill and the renewal of this litigation to state a case that actually exists that is not covered by some decision made by the supreme court of Iowa or by the Supreme Court of the United States.

I do not refer now to a case that we can make by legislation; I do not refer to a case that may spring up after we have legislated to change titles here; but upon the existing state of facts, under the existing laws of the United States, let some Senator now state a case as one actually existing, not hypothetical, but one actually existing, which is not covered by some decision that has been made by the supreme court of Iowa or by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then when we get that case stated, we can understand, I think, how far we can go in legislating to give a remedy in that particular case. But this matter has been embarrassed by an almost universal complaint among a certain set of claimants that their rights had not been fairly considered, that they had not had a full and fair opportunity to have them adjudicated, that the Government of the United States has not taken those steps which are necessary to declare the rights of persons who claim under it; that therefore it is necessary to have some Congressional declaration, and following that Congressional declaration to have a new lawsuit to determine how far Congress can affect titles that already exist. In my judgment the bill, while well intended, while intended to give repose to a great community and to quiet down questions which ought never to have existed, instead of quieting down those questions and settling those disputes only sows another harvest of litigation, and it will be years perhaps before that can be terminated.

The Committee on Public Lands were not only embarrassed by the manner in which this claim was presented, but their sympathies have been greatly worked upon; mine have been. I confess that I have a great desire to compensate those people, who have been misled in the investment of their money both in the purchase of these lands and in the improvements put upon them in some way or other. I feel that the Government of the United States has been derelict about this matter. Congress itself is not without blame in respect of it; but the officers of the Government of the United States having charge of the public lands have made a contrariety of decisions, they have made contradictory decisions, repugnant decisions in regard to these titles, and they have left the people of Iowa in a condition where some of the officers would induce them to go on and make expenditures of money and of labor in the improvement of their farms, while other officers would come on succeeding them and overturn their titles entirely. Then they would rush into the courts, and they were not satisfied of course with the decisions of the courts of the State of Iowa; and then Congress was appealed to to come in and indemnify the State of Iowa, to grant lands in excess of the original grant, which was done; so that the State of Iowa out of the lands granted, I suppose, might have made compensation to her citizens. It is insisted on one side that Iowa having received this indemnification at the hands of Congress, it is her duty to indemnify her people. I have not adopted that view of the case, because I have never begrudged to any of the new States the lands within their borders.

I have always felt that there was a certain degree of inequality between the new and the old States in respect of the domain within their borders. The old thirteen States and several others that were carved out of them by the assent of Congress received not from the Government of the United States, it is true, but they received in the partition of territory which they acquired in our revolutionary struggle the absolute title to all the lands within their borders, subject to certain contributions that they had to make to pay some of the expenses of the Revolutionary war, and also to pay bounties to some of the soldiery of that war; but practically the old States got all the land within their borders, while the new States got no part of the land within their borders except certain reservations which they made for school purposes and purposes of locating and building State-houses and the like—very small parcels of land compared with the vast domain that they surrendered by their acts of cession to the Government of the United States.

So I have never been at all disposed to be strict in giving to the new States the lands within their own borders for any public purpose that might be useful to the people; and so I have not adopted the view which some Senators have taken in committee and elsewhere, that because the State of Iowa received certain lands in the nature of an indemnity, she should have furnished them to her people to compensate them, for the losses which they had sustained because of our loose legislation, and because of the contradictory decisions made in the Land Office. I have never believed that that relieved the Government of the United States from its own obligation morally and equitably to compensate those people for the difficulties and traps into which they had been led by our legislation and by our system of decisions in the Land Office.

Now, sir, I announce my willingness on this floor to-day to have an account taken between every settler in Iowa who has been misled by the action of the officers of the Government of the United States and the United States Government, have the balance struck, and pay it in money, so that no citizen of that State shall have the right to complain of the Government of the United States that he has been misled by its action into making improvements upon lands that he purchased and paid for to the Government under the decisions of the General Land Office; but I want this matter out of the way, so that we can proceed to make that compensation in order that the Government of the United States can discharge itself of this debt, as it must of every honorable obligation resting upon it, it makes no difference whence derived. I can conceive of no obligation of greater weight in the scale of honor than that which arises in favor of a citizen of the United States who has been misled by the judgment or action of the Government officers in placing his home upon a piece of public land and making improvements thereupon of which he is deprived afterward in consequence of the fact that those officers had no right to authorize the settlement.

Here are other persons who are interested in these lands. Laws were passed and decisions made by courts of the highest appellate authority. These laws settled the rights of men to go to Iowa and buy these lands. People living in distant States went there and invested their money. They are innocent purchasers in every sense of the word. They bought not only in innocence of any defect in the title, but they bought actually under the invitation of the Government of the United States and also of the State of Iowa. We can not regard these men as being intruders into the State of Iowa, it makes no difference if some of them have got more than one hundred and sixty acres of land in a body.

At the time these laws were enacted the State of Iowa was an unsettled country to a large extent; it was very new; it needed population and it invited population, and Congress seconded the invitation, to get not population only but capital into that country. And mark how she has prospered. What State of all the number of the younger sisters in this great Confederacy has had greater prosperity than Iowa? But she has been dependent for it very largely upon the public-land grants that have been made to her so liberally by Congress. It was right to make them. She has enjoyed the benefit of them; she has got population; she has become wealthy. Now it is not right that we should turn back and say to the men who took their money in there and invested it in Iowa lands, "You shall have no title," or that, "You shall have eternal litigation before this matter is ended."

I might remark, I think with great justice also, that the laws and decisions of the United States are not fully respected in regard to these lands in Iowa. There is a disposition there to resist the laws, a disposition not to allow them to have their full effect, a disposition to contravene the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. There are organizations there having ostensibly for their purpose, if not resistance to the decisions, at least the protracting of the litigation over these lands. That is a bad state of affairs, and I should like to remedy it.

We can not get rid of that feeling by holding out a vain hope to these people that they can possibly overturn the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in some further litigation. We had better express a decisive judgment, as was done by the Committee on the Judiciary, and say that Congress has no longer any power over this question, for that is the fact.

If Congress has not passed the title to these lands, then there is no use of passing laws, making decisions, and issuing patents; and I believe, so far as I have been able to understand the facts in this case, Congress has just as much right by an act to take the title of a tract of land that I may hold under a patent that is thirty or forty years old out of my hands and give it to any other Senator on this floor as it has to go back and rip up these decisions by enacting a new law, create a new litigation, and enable a court to make a decision contrary to the decisions that have already been made. There must be a time when the Government of the United States can rid itself of its title; and whenever that Government has issued a patent that is not fraudulent on its face—by which we mean a patent that is not affected with fraud in the fact of its issue—Congress can not recall that patent and undo it by a legislative act. It is a conveyance made by the Congress of the United States, having power to make it, having an understanding of the facts, certainly not subject to duress; and when the conveyance is not affected by a fraud that inheres in the patent itself and makes it void as a muniment of title, that patent conveys that land, and after we have gotten rid of it in that aspect, whatever question arises in respect of the title to that land afterward becomes a judicial and not a legislative question.

So I think that every question in this case, as far as I have been able to see, indeed I am sure that every question in this case that is now sought to be raised by this bill and to be brought back again before the courts for adjudication, is a judicial question merely, and not a legislative question. The whole subject of the title to these lands has passed beyond the domain of Congressional legislation. What we have done is a finality, so far as the Government is concerned, and if we have done wrong, nothing remains for us to do but to pay the damages to the people that we have injured by our contradictory and inconsistent course of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate long in submitting the remarks upon this motion which it is my desire now to do, but if Senators will give me their attention for a few minutes I think I can present this case in a manner that will give it clear understanding to the mind of every Senator.

In the very heart of the State of Iowa there are living to-day more than one thousand families to whom the passage of this bill means more than I can tell or we can realize. These families include many persons now in the winter of life. Years of adventure, hardship, and toil are behind them, all of which were expended in hopeful endeavors to secure and improve homes for themselves and their families on the lands to which this bill relates and which they now believe of right belong to them. For more than a quarter of a century have many of them lived where they now live, having commenced their terms of occupancy in full belief that the end would be perfect titles to peaceful homes. Relying on the good faith of the Government and depending on the assurance of written public law, they entered upon the struggle through which homes in the West were then secured. As they pursued the even tenor of their ways the wilderness was subdued, waste places were reclaimed, civilization advanced, homes were established, farms unfolded their beauties, families multiplied, and happy communities evolved the elements of thrift and prosperity. They had no suspicion of danger to the titles to which they looked for an assurance to them of the results of their willing sacrifices and sturdy endeavors. It was no fault of theirs that governmental action and inaction induced the presence of conflicting claims and controverted rights.

Twenty-five years ago the section in which these lands and homes are situate was the frontier of Iowa settlements. No one then had reason to believe that the conditions which now exist relative to the titles to the lands there situate would ever transpire, and these settlers began their work in that new region in full belief that under and in pursuance of the land laws of the United States perfect titles would eventually come to them from the Government. They did know what Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the State of Iowa had done. This they were bound to know. But they did not and could not know what these powers and officers might do or attempt to do in the future. Nor did either prudence, duty, or the law require them to enter upon inquiries relative to the possibilities which might appear in that uncertain field of action, and they now believe that whatever was subsequently done could not lawfully affect their rights.

It is not necessary for me here to affirm that vested rights can not be divested by an act of Congress or by the mistake or unlawful act or decision of an executive officer of the Government. We all know that it can not be done. Whatever rights these settlers had they, in contemplation of the law, now have, in spite of legislative or executive action, whether it be that of the United States or of the State of Iowa. And this doctrine will apply with as effective force to the bill which we are now considering in the event of its enactment by Congress as it does to the acts which have cast a cloud upon the titles to the lands which constitute one of the most beautiful sections of the State of Iowa. Hence no one can be harmed by the passage of this bill. Even the temporary disturbance which may be occasioned by the commencement and progress of the action which it directs shall be instituted on behalf of the United States by the Attorney-General will be more than compensated by the perfect title to be assured by the judicial determination of the controversy. And this view of the case leads me to remark that the contention which it is the office of this bill to terminate is not wholly measured by the private rights involved in it. It is one of those disturbances which affect a considerable region of country in all of the relations which influence values, contentment, prosperity, a right progress. From this aspect of the case a public question results. This broadens and intensifies the character of the bill. Its object embraces the interests of all of the people of the region immediately affected; indeed of the entire State of Iowa, and of the individuals, residents of other States, who claim title to any part of the lands involved adverse to the settlers. Each and all of these are definitely interested in obtaining, at the earliest practicable day, a final judicial determination of the controversy which rests like a blight upon the titles of all.

I do not state the case too strongly when I say that the controversy which it is believed the methods provided by this bill will settle rests like a blight on all of the titles to the lands affected. No one who has not come personally into contact with the facts and effects of this case can fully realize or perfectly appreciate how absolutely this blight has settled upon its every feature. But every person in interest knows full well how malign its influence has been and still is, and it will get no better but rather grow worse until in some such way as is now proposed a definite judicial remedy shall have been applied; and I am surprised that the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company and all of its assigns and grantees do not join in asking for the passage of this bill; for the title of that company and of its assigns and grantees will remain in doubt, challenged and uncertain, until some such remedy shall have been provided and applied.

Many of the settlers who are urging the passage of this bill, I am informed, are grantees of the said company, having endeavored to perfect their titles by purchasing that claimed by the corporation also. Still others, who have no title but such as they have derived from the company by purchase, approve this measure and ask that it be enacted into a law. My information is to the effect that these several classes of claimants and grantees can neither sell their lands nor raise money on them by incumbrance. Every phase of the title is regarded as in some way imperfect, and is the subject of suspicion. Nor will this condition be remedied by any worrying-out process on behalf of the resisting corporation. A thousand families, some of whom have been occupying these lands as homes for a third of a century, and many of them, as I have already stated, for more than a quarter of a century, will not give up the contest even though this bill should fail of passage. They are not asking that the rights of others be interfered with, but simply that their own shall be protected. They claim that in fact and in law the legal title to all of the lands covered by this bill is in the United States; that having complied with the laws relative to pre-emption and homestead entries they are entitled to patents for the lands on which they have settled and made their homes; that as to the remaining, concerning which no adverse claims exist, they are content to have them confirmed to the said company or to its grantees as this bill provides. That is the whole case as these settlers present it. They simply ask that all of the questions involved in the conflicting claims to these lands shall be judicially determined, alleging that in none of the cases cited against them has this been done.

In this latter allegation they do not stand alone, as is abundantly evidenced by the fact of the universal suspicion which rests upon the titles involved. The cases cited are not free from the taint of alleged collusion. I make no charge in this regard, nor shall I enter upon an examination of the said cases. It is sufficient for my purpose and in justification of this bill to say that in none of the said cases has the United States asserted its title, and the settlers who ask for the passage of this bill have had no opportunity which would allow them to do so.

The representatives of those settlers tell me that they and all of their associates will promptly and peacefully yield to the result of the judicial proceeding which this bill proposes to institute should it prove to be adverse to them. It may be responded to this that in so doing they would but be obeying the law and performing a duty incumbent on every good citizen. This is true; but it is also true that it involves the surrender of the results of the labors of their lives, the loss of homes which have sheltered them, and in which their families have been reared, and another start in the struggle of life with too many of their years gone for those yet remaining to move upon them freighted with hope and goodly promise of success and fortune.

Mr. President, the citizens who ask for the passage of this bill have long importuned Congress for relief. They have been patient and respectful. It does not seem just to deny their prayer. They can not put their case in the courts. But the Government can go there under the provisions of this bill. These citizens are humble; but their rights, though they may embrace merely claims to titles to small holdings of lands on which they have spent the best years of their lives in hardy endeavors to found and possess homes, should be as sacred in the contemplation of the Government as though they were the owners of principalities of lands and millions of invested capital. A government can be as truly great in guarding the comparatively insignificant rights of its humblest citizens as in contests for empire. We can give the protection prayed for in this case not only without injustice to other citizens, but in a manner which, while it protects private rights, will also promote the public welfare. For it must be seen by all that even though the remedy proposed shall fail of that full measure of good result which would secure to these patient settlers their homes, it certainly will quiet the titles to all of the lands whose conditions are disturbed and values unsettled by this long existing controversy. Hence, whatever the final issue may be, a good result will have been reached. A conflict of many unpleasant features will come to an end. I can but hope that the end will assure to these patient people their homes. But should it fail of this, it will give rest and perfect title to one of the most beautiful and fruitul sections of the State of Iowa. The Government will have done its full duty, and the citizen will feel that it is not unmindful of him, though he may be poor and his home humble. This will tend to remove unrest and establish contentment; and noresults of government are more to be desired than these.

With this description of the case I am willing to submit it, so far as I am concerned, to a test of the motion made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, some four years ago almost exactly I had occasion at the instance of the Judiciary Committee to examine this matter very thoroughly, and I made a very careful and elaborate examination of it so far as I was concerned; and as a result I was directed to submit as the unanimous voice of that committee a report in accordance with the views expressed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] a few moments ago.

In making that examination I had every sympathy with what are called the settlers there, and I used the few faculties I had to the best of my ability to find out some way to give them a remedy or to give them relief; but I was forced to the conclusion, as was the committee unanimously, that there was no relief that Congress could give, that the matter had long since passed out of the legislative jurisdiction of Congress.

One of your predecessors, sir [Mr. HARRISON in the chair], Mr. Pratt, years before I came into the Senate, and years before I ever had any idea that I should be able to get to the Senate, made a report from the Judiciary Committee, which was unanimously indorsed, to the same effect as the report I made and as the minority report made now by the Senator from Alabama. The Senator from Alabama has expressed my views so thoroughly and so completely that I shall not detain the Senate many minutes. I will simply attempt to re-enforce, with some additional light on the question in more recent years, what the Senator from Alabama has said. Coming down to the pure stubborn question of fact and law, the settlers do not stand in relation to this property as innocent purchasers. It can not be claimed. But while that is true, as was so well stated by the Senator from Alabama, I have some sympathy with them, and believe that possibly Congress in dealing with them ought not to hold them to the strict letter of the law, but might open its sympathy and give them some relief, possibly in the way suggested by the Senator from Alabama, but certainly not in the way the bill proposes.

Now I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a few minutes to the closing part of the report which I made four years ago from the Judiciary Committee on this subject:

Notwithstanding the opening of the land offices in 1868, by the direction of the Secretary, to the entry of these lands as Government lands, it seems to the committee that the settlers were put upon their guard, not only by the decision in the Wolcott case, but the injunctions granted by the circuit court, that there was a question as to their right to enter the lands. They chose to take the risk, and the ultimate decision proves they acquired no title. From the very start there was a cloud of doubt. They can not, in face of these facts, be regarded as innocent purchasers. The intrinsic value of the lands at the time when they made their filings and entries was probably nearly as great as now, aside from the improvements. But the committee understand the fact to be that the lands in controversy were all settled upon while the order was in force withdrawing them from sale, although many applications for entering at the land office appear to have been made since.

So that according to the law of the case from the foundation of the Government to the present day the Government is never understood to warrant and covenant in regard to the grants it makes.

The parties in all cases take them subject to their own risks, and here, according to the report, there was sufficient to put these settlers on their guard, and in law the opportunity of knowing is knowledge. But, as stated by the Senator from Alabama, if you could compute this in money and give it to them in meritorious cases I should have no objection. The closing paragraph of the report is:

The more recent decisions (Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S. R., 755, and Litchfield vs. County of Weber, Ibid., 773) approve the earlier cases on this subject already cited, and from them all it is clearly to be gathered that this matter has passed beyond the reach of Congress, and whatever rights the settlers seek to show or may wish to establish, they are not within any remedial legislation of Congress; they can not be affected by any act of Congress; in fact, it is a subject over which Congress has no jurisdiction; and the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and recommend it be indefinitely postponed.

In that report, and in the report of Mr. Pratt which preceded it some years, the litigation on this subject was analyzed from the case in twenty-third Howard about twenty-five years ago, and they run in one current from that down to one hundred and ninth United States Reports, which I have here, and from which I shall read a short paragraph, the Supreme Court holding without a dissenting voice that Congress had passed this property away from the United States. Here I wish to call the attention of the Senators from Iowa to one fact which in this report is not stated, but I will now undertake to state it. Sharing with them in the fullness of their sympathies and their desire to aid these settlers, I yet say that the State of Iowa should do this. She was the recipient of all these lands and of this grant; and if she has come in between the Greenleaf settlers and the United States, she should take the onus of protecting the parties, and it should not be thrown on the United States. She parted with the property over twenty years ago. In the report the cases are all referred to; but since then, a year or more ago, in the case of The Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company vs. Des Moines Valley Railroad Company, the Supreme Court said where this very question came up—transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa for the use of its grantees under the river grant.

That the act of July 12, 1862, (c. 162, 12 Stat., 543)—

And they refer to the Wolcott case and the Litchfield case and the Weber case and all the decided cases; and so you see that by an unbroken course of decisions for twenty-five years past this property has been determined to have passed to the State of Iowa—to have passed away from the United States—with which the United States has now no more to do than it has with my home in Little Rock. There is the whole case in a nutshell.

But the Senator from Iowa who has just taken his seat said these parties never had any opportunity to test this question. Let us see. I hold in my hand a transcript of a case decided by the Supreme Court over one month since, the case of Bicknell vs. Comstock, on appeal from the eastern district of New York, where one of these persons had sold his land and made a covenant and warranty of title. The vendee caught him in New York and sued him there for a breach of warranty. The Supreme Court reviewed this whole question again from the Litchfield case in twenty-third Howard down to the case in one hundred and ninth United States Reports, and determined that this party had no title, that Congress had passed the title to the State of Iowa, and he must account on his warranty.

Now, what is Congress asked to do in the face of all this? To permit parties to go into the tribunals in Iowa to litigate about property that the Supreme Court of the United States has said the Government has no title to. It has said it now almost five times five. The honorable Senator from Iowa says the bill can do no harm. Suppose, for the sake of the argument, that to be true; I might just as well ask Congress to pass a law to permit me to sue for the great ranch of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in Texas that I might covet and desire. The Government does not own it; Congress has nothing to do with this property. It may be a very interesting business for Congress to permit people to go into court and litigate; but if the Government has no title to the property about which the litigation is to be instituted, Congress has no business to pass such a bill.

But I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that it will do harm. How? It will simply bring litigation upon these people that the courts will be compelled to dismiss upon a motion or on a demurrer to the complaint filed, because if there is no title, if there is no right to this property in the Government, Congress can give no right to bring a suit for it; and a court on demurrer will dismiss the bill and say, "You have nothing to litigate about, so far as Congress is concerned." You point to these innocent people who, according to the speech of the Senator from Iowa, have already suffered greatly, and you plunge them into an additional expense for litigation. That is the harm it will do. I sympathize with the settlers, and I am willing to stretch, if you please, the legislative conscience of Congress to do something for them in meritorious cases; but not to invite them to litigate about a matter where there is no right to the property in the General Government. This bill would be a delusion to them, it would be a snare, and then they would come back to Congress after their complaint was dismissed and say, "Well, we thought you were giving us bread, but it turns out to be a stone. We ask now for some further relief."

As Congress has virtually passed on this repeatedly, and the Supreme Court so often, there is nothing left, it seems to me, but for the Senate to sustain the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to yield to me for a moment. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to present at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions" has been concluded, it shall be the duty of the President of the Senate to lay before the Senate, in their order, House bills on the Calendar which have been favorably reported by a Senate committee, subject to the provisions of Rule VIII, which shall continue until 1 o'clock each day until all of such bills shall have been considered.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie upon the table until to-morrow morning, at which time I shall ask the Senate to consider it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is offered so that it will be in order to call it up to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment to that:

That this order shall not interfere with the pending case.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection whatever to that amendment if the Senator from Iowa desires it inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. I do desire it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so amended by consent.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution as amended be read again for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read again for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the amendment being adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it has not been adopted. It has been simply accepted by the Senator who offered the resolution as a modification. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the resolution:

Provided, That the pending order, Senate bill No. 1836, shall not be interfered with.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it appear that that is an amendment, not a modification. I have no objection to it, but I do not care to be responsible for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator from Iowa proposes an amendment to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire that my amendment shall cover the scope of the bill pending before the Senate in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to propose the amendment now, or will he withhold it until the resolution is under consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not very particular. I will offer it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be acted on.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa can at this time give notice of an intended amendment and ask to have it printed. It can not be properly offered as an amendment now, because the resolution is not pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senate very well understands the general scope of the amendment I propose. It is hardly worth while to print it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the resolution be read as it would read if amended.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS with the amendment of Mr. ALLISON added thereto.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the resolution is not now before the Senate for action, but I beg leave at this time to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he proposes to have the resolution passed in such terms that it will deprive the Senate of the ordinary power to take up upon motion any matter that it may see fit during the morning hour?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think it would have that effect.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator does not intend that effect, will he be good enough in the interval to look at the resolution and see whether it may not possibly have it?

Mr. HARRIS. My present request is that the resolution be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow morning, at which time I will ask the Senate to consider it, and in the mean time I shall be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts look at it, as I will do.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PALMER as an additional section.

Mr. VEST. I stated yesterday that I wanted this bill postponed until to-day in order that I might submit to the Senate some papers that I had received in regard to it. It is hardly necessary for me to say that I have no personal interest in the subject, but on the 26th of January I received from a person unknown to me, but I spoke about him to the Senators from his State and others, who concurred that he was a gentleman of high character, as high as any one in that State, and he makes some suggestions in regard to the question pending on this bill which, it seems to me, should receive attention. The matter should be the subject of a separate bill, and should not be placed by amendment on this bill in the way now proposed to be done. I ask the Secretary to read this letter I send to the desk. I will not give the name of the writer, but he is known to the Senators from Michigan. The statement is of a public nature and relevant to the matter now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SAGINAW, MICH., January 26, 1885.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
Washington, D. C.:

SIR: Permit me to call to your notice a bill recently introduced by Senator PALMER, of this State, reported on the 20th instant from the Committee on Public Lands, and recommended for immediate action, which provides: "That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale to aid internal improvement, or where the lands have been reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and such lands have been purchased in good faith and patents obtained therefor, without having been first proclaimed by the President, such patents shall be valid, where on the 25th of January, 1885, there are no conflicting claims," &c.

The bill is drawn in the interest of a few men, who were permitted by officials in the local land offices, and more especially in Northern Michigan and Wisconsin, to purchase at private sale, for cash, at $1.25 per acre, valuable lands of the United States worth $25 to $100 per acre, and this, though in direct conflict with the law providing "that all such lands shall first be proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction to the highest bidder, $1.25 per acre being the minimum price," thereby throwing the lands open to competition and enabling the general public to attend the sale, purchase if they so desire, and the Government to realize approximately, at least, the value of the lands.

And now come these persons before the country posing as innocent purchasers in good faith.

There was no good faith in these transactions, and none can properly be claimed.

The bill is not in the interest of homesteaders or actual settlers; on the contrary, its design is to cut these people off, and is in direct conflict with the design of the Government to reserve its lands for actual settlement.

It is an effort on the part of certain land speculators to bolster up by legislation claims procured in a notoriously unlawful manner to lands the titles to which have already been declared void by the Supreme Court of the United States. A few individuals have quietly entered the choicest and most valuable tracts before the people generally are aware of what is going on, and after these persons have secured what they want, the knowledge gradually spreads that the lands are being taken, and a few isolated pieces are picked up by A, B, and C.

I trust you will not permit this attempt to make the Government a party to robbing itself to pass unnoticed.

The Washington correspondents of our Michigan newspapers seem to be in the employ of these innocent (?) parties, as they do not give the facts, but a garbled statement, leading one to understand that homesteaders and poor men are to be injured by the ruling of the Secretary of the Interior and the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. VEST. I would not submit a private letter to the Senate unless I knew the character of the writer, and I know this gentleman from the statements of Senators to be a man of high character, whose statements are entitled to respect. He states here that the Washington correspondents of the Western papers, especially of Wisconsin and Michigan, are entirely in the interest of this amendment which was reported here as a Senate bill. Attached to this letter are extracts from the correspondence of some of these correspondents. There is one statement made in behalf of the amendment from a correspondent of the Detroit Post manifestly in this interest. He says:

For twenty-five or thirty years the officers of the Land Department have been offering at private sale lands which had been withdrawn from market for railroad and other purposes and then restored without another public auction of them. Thousands of citizens of Michigan have been purchasing these lands for many years. In a great number of cases men have made it their chief business and have by this time become the owners of large tracts. Two or three citizens of Detroit have written here that their entire fortune consists in lands which they have thus been acquiring. Mines have been dug upon lands so purchased, homes secured, and farms laid out. Messrs. Barnhart, Hill, and Freeman, of Grand Rapids, Case & McKinnon, of Marquette and others, who are in Washington now, own probably 100,000 acres of these lands.

I read this, coming from a party favorable to this amendment, to show that this legislation is not in the interest of the poor men of Michigan and Wisconsin, that it is not in the interest of homesteaders or of pre-empters who seek, in accordance with the general policy of the land laws of the United States, to secure humble homes upon the public lands, but it is in the interest of speculators. Here are these gentlemen whose names I have read from the lips of their friends, who are in Washington now, to secure title to 100,000 acres of the public domain by this act of legislation alone, showing that the statements made by the gentleman whose letter I have read are true and shown to be true from the public press.

Will it be pretended that these were innocent purchasers? Who ever heard of men buying 100,000 acres of public land without knowing exactly what they bought? Who does not know that men will not put their entire fortunes in a speculation of that sort without examining every fact and having the best legal opinions that can be bought for money in this entire country?

With no knowledge personally, with no acquaintance personally with any of the parties interested, I am authorized to declare here from my seat in the Senate that the facts show beyond question that this is a stupendous speculation for the purpose of buying up hundreds of thousands of acres of public land on an uncertain title at a price at which the land could not otherwise have been bought, and then by an act of Congress to legalize the speculation and put immense fortunes into the pockets of certain individuals. I am opposed to all such means; and with the lights before me, with the facts which I have brought here, and which, I take it, can not be contradicted, because especially the salient fact that these lands are in vast bodies in the hands of certain individuals comes from a friend of this measure, I am authorized in making the statement that I have made.

Therefore I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Missouri has pictured a frightful representation of the amount of turpitude involved in the amendment. I suppose very likely some men may possibly have gotten title there in late years knowing that they were getting an imperfect title; but those are not the men whose rights I desire to secure.

At the time when there was a carnival of land grants in Congress, along about 1856, nine lines of road, I believe, were given grants. They threaded our State in every direction. Certain amounts of land were withdrawn from market, and owing to the peculiar directions in which the railroads were run it took out from market nearly one-half of the northern half of the lower peninsula. Those lands have been purchased not only by speculators, by lumbermen, but by farmers—men who have put their sweat, their blood, and their toil in those acres, and now a cloud has come on their title, which always existed, but which they were not aware of till the last decision of the Supreme Court, which was to the effect that all lands which had been withdrawn from market should be again offered at public sale before they were subject to private entry.

In many of these cases, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office states in his letter to the Committee on Public Lands, there was no offering at public sale. I do not know how far the defect in the titles of those lands will extend or to how many thousands of acres, but I know that a vast majority of the land-owners of the northern half of the lower peninsula of Michigan are in jeopardy by reason of not having their titles confirmed. They bought the lands honestly, they paid for them, they have held them, some of them twenty years, paying taxes on them, and now they are liable to the depredations of land-jumpers and jackals of every character.

In regard to the letter which the Senator from Missouri has read, I will say that I know the gentleman who wrote it. He is a reputable man, and I can not conceive the animus of that letter unless it is that he has some private pique to gratify, and if the thing should be followed up, if it were worth while, I have no doubt that would be established. As to the land he speaks of in the upper peninsula of Michigan I know but little. Possibly there may have been some titles gotten there by men who knew that they were buying a defective title, but in the case of the vast majority of the lands where the defect in title is attempted to be cured by this measure the owners are honest men and men who deserve relief. I suppose there can not be anything of this kind brought up before Congress without the vision of a big land steal being involved. I hope the matter will be exhaustively discussed. I am ready to answer any questions in regard to it.

If Senators will look at the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office they will see the animus of this measure and why it should pass. He says:

> From the foregoing it appears that, briefly stated, the practice of this office has been:
> I. In the earlier grants to the States to restore to private entry by a simple public notice such lands as had once been offered.

Again he says:

> If for any reason lands which had once been offered at $1.25, and afterward at $2.50, were reduced to $1.25 per acre, a second offering at that price does not appear until of late years to have been considered necessary in order to render them subject to private entry.

Whose fault was it that these men got defective titles? It was the fault of the officers of the United States; and where there are no conflicts it seems to me that common honesty and common decency require that Congress should validate the titles. The amendment provides for that where there are no conflicts.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, let me say a word in regard to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. PALMER. No; but I should like to hear what the Senator from Missouri wishes to say.

Mr. VEST. I was about to say, and possibly I had better say it in the way of an interruption, that I think there is not a single Senator here (speaking for myself I am absolutely certain) who, if a question should ever be presented such as I take it from the character of the remarks of the Senator from Michigan he thinks is presented to the Senate, would hesitate one instant in validating the title of an honest bona fide purchaser who went to the land office and bought for a home a reasonable amount of land, whether one hundred and sixty acres or more, and was in actual possession of it for the purpose of making a home. I take it there is not a Senator here who would hesitate to validate such a title and give such a man a prior right over any one else for land thus acquired. But I submit that at any time when facts exist (I do not say whether they do or not, but they are quoted here from a responsible source, a man of good character) showing that speculators have gone on land knowing that the title was defective, knowing that the land officers were exceeding their authority, or where there was a probability that they were exceeding it, and have bought up hundreds of thousands of acres of valuable land at a dollar and a quarter an acre in fraud of the rights of the Government and in fraud of the rights of other citizens of the United States, in that case we ought not to pass a law which validates their titles. The speculators took their chances; they lost the case in the Supeme Court of the United States, and it is unfair and unjust by a sweeping act of Congress to give them their game after they had taken the chances and lost.

Mr. PALMER. I will state, in answer to the Senator from Missouri, that the amendment is not entirely in the interest of speculators. There are thousands of farm titles which are also involved in the same uncertainty by the acts of the Land Office, as well as the titles of men who have bought for speculation. I do not consider that there is any great crime in speculating in lands. I consider that the United States is benefited, and that all parties are benefited, if men buy lands and pay taxes on them and hold them for sale.

But the amendment is not intended to benefit rich men alone. It involves more poor men than rich men. If the Senator sees in it anything that appears to him like an attempt to defraud the Government I hope he will propose to so amend the amendment that it may pass in such a shape that the northern half of the southern peninsula of Michigan at least, and also the Lake Superior region, may be relieved from an incursion of land-jumpers that would be worse than that of Attila and the Huns or the Goths and Vandals, and which would unsettle half the property in the northern part of the lower peninsula of Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know on what authority the Senator from Missouri says this measure is intended for the advantage of men owning 50,000 and 100,000 acres of land in Michigan. It will be news to any Michigan man to have such a statement made. I have never seen any such statement coming from any of the persons who have written letters or sent petitions in regard to this matter. I understand from the Senator that he gets his information from private sources, and I do not know how authentic they may be.

The real truth about this matter is that the decision of the Land Office, confirmed by the Supreme Court, throws a cloud upon the title of lands that have been entered for the last twenty or twenty-five years as the homes of hundreds and thousands of people of Michigan. I speak of Michigan because I know more about that, but in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and other States there have been public lands situated as these public lands were, and where by the action of the Land Office they have been held out to the people of Michigan and Wisconsin and Minnesota as subject to entry without having been first offered at public sale. The people who bought these lands, whether they bought more or whether they bought less, have been misled by Government officers. They have been deceived in regard to a law which it was supposed the executive officers of the United States understood, and they have paid their money and bought their lands and received their patents and their certificates of ownership. Hundreds and thousands of men have gone with their families into the northern part of our lower peninsula, and into the upper peninsula, and have spent years with their families there clearing land and making homes with the patent of the United States in their hands, believing that they had a home under the laws of the United States, believing that the great patent of the United States gave them their lands and gave them their homes, and after years of toil and years of sacrifice of comforts in the wilderness, when they had a career of some comparative comfort and competence before them, all at once by a new decision of the Land Office, supported by the decision of the Supreme Court, they find that they have no right to these lands, or at least that there is a cloud upon their title, and they find, worse than that, that any speculating man may go right upon their farms and pre-empt their home, their house, their barn, their garden, their orchard, their fields, or may go and settle upon it and claim it as a homestead even, and take away the rights of all these settlers at a grasp.

There is no sense in such a state of the law as that, and Congress should provide a remedy immediately. It may be that some have larger portions of land and some smaller, but it affects all alike. Why should not this remedial measure be passed to stop the rapacity of those who would take away from the settler his hard-earned orchard and garden and house and barn; or, if he has died in the struggle to make him a home, who would take it away from the widow and from the children, and they, standing there with the broad seal of this Government upon a patent to their lands, are driven off by whatever speculator, knowing this cloud and defect upon their title, may see fit to plant himself in the midst of this home gained by so much toil and by so much labor?

I care not if there be a few men who have large possessions. I speak for the hundreds and thousands of the poor men of Michigan who settled that country, who within twenty years have made the wilderness of the northern part of our lower peninsula smile like a garden, beautified by homes, cheered by the improvements which their hard labor has made, and which are about to be swept away and taken away by the rapacious land-shark. And men will vote against this measure in favor of homestead settlers, giving them the right to go and take these lands, when by doing it they wring the hearts of thousands of men, women, and children in all these States and take away their possessions.

The Government made this defect in title. The Government failed to put these lands up at public auction. The Government of the United States, the paternal Government of the United States, led them into this trap into which they are to perish to lose their homes.

I make this appeal for the settlers on these lands. I make this appeal in favor of making valid the great patent of the United States to the homesteader, to the pre-emptionist, and to the settler.

The State of Michigan in the last twenty-five years has doubled its population, and it has doubled it by inviting to these wild lands settlers from every State in the Union, who have gone there, improved the lands, and made their homes; and years afterward they find a cloud upon their title—ay, they find themselves in the position of having it all wrested from them because the President failed to order the lands to be offered at public sale.

I do not know a case in all the legislation of Congress where justice and equity and right more demand the passage of such a measure as this to secure the people of the United States in homes that they have already made. I would go as far as the farthest in preserving the public lands of the United States for homes for the people, for lands for the landless, but I shall not do it at the expense of those who have put upon their lands the toil of years. I would not drive the father of the family and the mother and the children from the homes into which they have put all their labor, all their toil, all their love for the family and for their children during long years of privation and labor.

That is what this amendment means. It would save those homes to the thousands of people of these States where this class of lands has been sold and patents given, and where, by an unexpected order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, sustained properly probably by the Supreme Court on mere technical points of law, they are to be driven from their homes, driven into exile in their old age, driven from their gardens and their fields, from their houses and from their barns into a hopeless exile.

I have stated the object of the amendment. If it happens that some men more fortunate, with more lands, have a large number of acres in some few places, it may have that objection. But are you not to do right by those who have got more lands? The main object here is to preserve the thousands, and I had almost said hundreds of thousands, of individuals—the thousands of families—from being wrecked and destroyed, with the muniments of title to their lands in their hands.

What a spectacle it would be to let a speculator come and take away these lands and drive off as with a flaming sword the people who have toiled and labored so long for a home and see them wandering away from their homes, to the eternal disgrace of this nation and this people, bearing aloft and fluttering in the winds a valid title and patent of the United States, with the great seal of the United States attached to it! Yet that is what those who oppose this measure will compel in these cases unless some remedy like that proposed in the amendment is held out to our people there.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to repeat what I said yesterday upon this question. There are quite a large number of citizens of Pennsylvania who claim that their titles are clouded in such a manner that this measure would cure the defect. They are respectable citizens who have written to me in regard to the matter, saying that they purchased on the faith of the derivation of their title directly through a patent by the Government and paid their money, and they hold that they are entitled to a clear grant from the Government of the United States. It appears to me, therefore, to raise the question of the protection of the innocent purchaser in this case, in addition to that of the settler. For that reason and for the reason stated by the Senator from Michigan I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Yesterday I took the ground in discussing this matter that the subject ought to come up again before the Committee on Public Lands. A bill was reported from that committee substantially the same as the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]; but it was offered merely as a general proposition of law, a sweeping proposition affecting all cases of this kind throughout the United States. I had no idea that there was any controversy about lands in Michigan or elsewhere of the character suggested by the statements made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. It seems, though, that there is a question of conflict of title between the claimants to these lands, and that question has been pending a long time.

I suppose from the information the Senator from Missouri gave us this morning that the whole controversy arose out of the case of Eldred vs. Sexton, the head-notes of which I read yesterday, decided by the Supreme Court in 1873. It has been nearly twelve years since that decision was made, and I am not aware that any movement has been made since that time for the remedy of this difficulty by act of Congress. I am totally unfamiliar with the state of facts about these controverted titles, and the Committee on Public Lands, so far as I am aware, are totally unfamiliar with it. We looked at the proposition that was sent to us as a general proposition which upon its face was very fair and very plausible. At the same time it ought not to have the application that is intended to be given to it here. The Congress of the United States ought not to interfere between private claimants to land from the Government to settle questions that in their nature are only judicial. The laws of the United States, as expounded in the case of Eldred vs. Sexton——

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from Alabama labors under a wrong impression in regard to the amendment. Where there are any conflicting or adverse claims it is not intended by the amendment to cure the defect in the title; such cases go to the proper tribunals.

Mr. MORGAN. That was the manner in which the bill was first reported from the committee, but still Senators have put in it a question of valid conflicting title. We are to legislate so as to declare, contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court, that an entry of lands within these railroad limits at a dollar and a quarter an acre is valid. That is the first step taken in the amendment. It is to validate an entry which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared to be invalid under the law. Having taken that step, another party comes in with a conflicting claim, and you require that that claim shall be valid. In other words, it is proposed to legislate out of the hands of whoever may be the holder of the property a title which he holds under the Government of the United States, for which he has paid $2.50 an acre, and then legislate it into the hands of a man who holds a certificate for which he paid a dollar and a quarter an acre, which the Supreme Court held to be invalid. You declare the invalid title to be a valid title, and you exclude the man who paid $2.50 an acre for his land unless he can prove that his title was a valid one. That is deciding the whole case by legislative action in a single proposition.

The Congress of the United States ought not to be asked to do a thing of that kind. If the Government of the United States has sold the land to any person for a dollar and a quarter an acre, and there is no person else who claims the land under any purchase from the Government whatever or under any right of homestead or any right of pre-emption, then I am willing to confirm the certificate that was granted at a dollar and a quarter an acre, because what we should do then would be merely to waive the difference between a dollar and a quarter and two dollars and a half an acre on the price of the land; but to go beyond that and to take up the question of title and make valid by act of Congress an invalid title, decided to be so twelve years ago by the Supreme Court, and then to fence in and protect that title, to put it in a bomb-proof by saying to the holder of that title, "You shall hold it against every person in the world except some man who shall show a valid title against the United States," is merely to sweep the lands out of the hands of persons who may have purchased them at two dollars and a half an acre and give them to persons who bought them at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

I think there has been a good deal of delay about this matter. Why should these parties have slumbered upon their rights without seeking the intervention of Congress for twelve years since the decision in Eldred vs. Sexton? If the Congress of the United States in regard to the public lands will concern itself simply in overruling by legislative action the decisions of the Supreme Court of this country, we need not attempt to do any other kind of business; Congress will be converted into a court for the trial of land titles, and we shall be appealed to continually by men who have got equitable claims, or claims that they conceive to be equitable, who will bring them in here for the purpose of having them vamped up by act of Congress so that they may go back and assert them in the courts and beat any person else who has a prior legal title.

I lament very much that Congress is being called upon almost every day—that has been my observation since I have had the honor of a place upon the Committee on Public Lands—to legislate titles out of the hands of some grantee of the Government and arrange them so that they will fall into the hands of some other grantee or some homesteader or some settler upon the public lands. It is hardly worth while to argue before a body composed entirely of lawyers that this is a transgression of the constitutional power of Congress, for when we enact laws and the people acting under those laws and in conformity with them acquire interests in the public domain, we have no power to set aside those interests and to recall the lands at our will and pleasure. After we have granted the title to an individual in pursuance of the laws of the United States, held to be valid by the Supreme Court or otherwise, it will not be insisted that we can assert the power on the part of Congress to recall those lands at our pleasure and bestow the title in some other direction.

It seems that we have set ourselves up as a sort of supreme court of appeals from the Supreme Court of the United States to reverse by legislative decree what they have solemnly decided to be the law of the land. The Supreme Court in making these decisions exercised only its constitutional functions. In providing by law to overturn those decisions and take from parties in whose favor they have been made the benefit of them we are usurping rights that we have no authority to usurp under the Constitution of the United States; we are transgressing the boundaries of our jurisdiction.

I repeat that I think this case ought to be considered by the Committee on Public Lands. I had no suspicion that there was any such controversy as that which has been suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Missouri who sits behind me until he made known this statement in the Senate. The Committee on Public Lands have had people from Michigan upon various controversies before them in large numbers, and some of the ablest lawyers in that section of the country and in other sections of the country have been here to represent the controversies about the Ontonagon Railroad grant and the various complications which have arisen out of that and about grants to canals and other works of public improvement which have been construed in one way and another by the authorities of Michigan, and by the authorities of the United States Government, so as to involve those people in a labyrinth of difficulty and turmoil and litigation. But when this case came up I did not suppose that there was any actual controversy in respect to the title to a large body of land in that State between private individuals. I had no thought of such a thing. I thought that what was presented was a general proposition of law, and I was trying to prevent, so far as I was able, any application of the general principle insisted upon in the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which might prove inconvenient or damaging or destructive to the titles of people who had acquired titles in good faith under the Government of the United States.

Now, it appears that here is a private controversy about these lands. It appears that certain persons have bought these lands, if I understood the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, in good faith, paid their money for them, and they insist that they are entitled to the lands. Shall we, by passing a measure as sweeping in its provisions as this, which applies all over the United States, undertake in this indirect way to settle a private controversy between persons in the State of Michigan about tracts of land? It seems to me that it is preposterous that we should undertake to do it.

The Senator from Michigan ought to be willing to allow this bill, which has been reported by the committee, and I think improvidently reported, to come up on its merits, and to let those people in Michigan, who are now notified by the fact that such a bill has been reported, come in and present their controversy and their contention about these lands. Do not let us decide a case of the magnitude that this appears to be in this indirect way, and without offering the opportunity of a hearing to those people in Michigan.

We have before us a bill for the purpose of repealing the pre-emption laws, the timber-culture laws, and the desert-land act. That is the object of the bill. Senators on this floor, persons interested everywhere, are notified that when the bill is called upon the Calendar the Senate intends to engage itself in considering those changes in the general land laws of the United States. While that bill is under consideration the Senator from Michigan offers an amendment to it which purports to be general and universal in its application, but which touches upon a subject that is not hinted at in the bill which the honorable Senator from Oregon is conducting through the Senate. When the people, whose rights were referred to in the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri, come to inquire of us why it was that on a bill to repeal the pre-emption laws and the timber-culture laws we took up and considered a matter entirely foreign to it, which drew into controversy a private litigation between citizens in Michigan and elsewhere, what have we to say about it?

I am very much obliged to the Senator from Missouri for having furnished the Senate with information that nobody else has furnished it with heretofore. It is now made known to the Senate of the United States that there is a private controversy about this question, and the Senate ought to allow the committee to hear both sides of it, or at least the Senate ought itself to hear both sides of it before it decides upon a question of such magnitude.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment of my colleague has been before the Senate as a separate bill for a long time. There has never come to the knowledge of the Senate by any public petition or memorial or document whatever any opposition to the measure from any source.

Mr. MORGAN. Not until this morning.

Mr. CONGER. Nothing has come to the Senate as a body in the way of petition or memorial from any source, and yet it is the subject of constant and continual notice in all the Michigan papers to-day and has been for weeks.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to say that it can not be the fault of any member of the committee, there being no Senator on that committee from Michigan, that we did not know of this private controversy in his own State? He might have informed us of it. I suppose he knew it.

Mr. CONGER. There is no controversy in the State of Michigan except by those men who want to get away these lands from the settlers, as I said, and the Senator is defending, by opposing the amendment, that class of men who, from a defect in title, as shown by a decision of the Supreme Court, think they have a right to go upon all these lands and make homesteads and entries and pre-emptions upon them. That is the condition of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER. Let the Senator wait for a moment until I conclude, and then I will hear him.

Mr. MORGAN. I just wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I yield for that.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that the gentleman who had made this representation was from Michigan, and was an honorable man.

Mr. CONGER. I told the Senator from Missouri so when he asked me, for I knew he was an honorable man.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to defend that sort of a man here at any time.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; but I want to defend the hundreds and thousands of poor, innocent, hard-working settlers in my State. The Senator may defend those who desire to get away their lands if he chooses, but I am not in that rôle.

Now, what does the amendment do? I ask every Senator to see what it does propose, and only what. It proposes that where a certain class of lands—and I ask the Senator from Alabama to listen to me in this argument if he will——

Mr. MORGAN. I surely will; I always do that, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment applies to a certain class of lands which have been withdrawn from market for purposes specified in it, and have been restored to the great body of the public lands, or where they have been among the lands reserved for a railroad before its line was built, and after its line was built they were found to fall outside of the fifteen or twelve mile limit and went into the body of the public lands. Everybody knows that they were then public lands subject to entry, homestead, or pre-emption; and although they had been at $2.50 an acre until the railroad had defined its central line and the limits were established, the moment that was defined they fell back into the kind of lands to be bought at $1.25 an acre. Where there was reserved from market for any reason and again restored to market any public land, the law, so the Supreme Court decides, required that before it should be purchased or settled upon it should have been again offered at public sale.

That class of lands is not railroad lands, not forfeited lands; but lands that in a great width of twenty or thirty miles perhaps across a country were reserved from market until the railroad company ran its line, and then by the terms of the law all outside of the limits of the line of the railroad itself fell back. They were not used; they were not granted, but merely reserved by the Land Office until the location of the road. The court decides that before those lands were liable to entry, to fall back into the domain of public lands, they should have been offered at public sale; and so of all the other classes which are specified in the amendment. The amendment says:

Wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department.

That is one class of land. That is outside of the limits. There are hundreds and thousands of acres in that class. Another class is—

Or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre.

Where Congress has ordered that they should be, or after offer put them at that price. That would include all those outside of railroad limits that were reserved from market, and then when the railroad limits were established fell back into the body of the public lands and fell back from $2.50 an acre to $1.25 an acre. Again, where such lands—have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry—

Now comes the point that the Senator refers to—without such lands having first been proclaimed—

Or in case such lands have not been proclaimed—

by the President and offered at public auction.

As the Supreme Court decided they ought to be before they were offered. Where lands of these classes have been purchased and patents given without this having been reoffered by proclamation at public sales the amendment applies. Those are the classes of land and the only classes to which it applies; and that is the only defect in the title that the amendment is to heal, where the lands had not been proclaimed and offered at public auction.

And where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto, or settlements thereon, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon, are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

The only point to heal is the simple point that these lands were not proclaimed and offered at public sale. That is the only thing which the amendment affects; and where prior to a certain time there were no conflicting claims, and where prior to a certain time there was nobody settled on the lands, then the entries are declared valid. It is a simple question of healing; curing the non-action of the United States in reoffering the lands. It can not affect any other claims. Where there are two conflicting claims of any kind whatever, then it does not heal.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to ask him a question for information? I do not know anything about the particular case he is arguing.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir. The Senator from reading the provision will see that I have stated the point correctly.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to get at some facts about it. Who are the conflicting claimants? Who are the persons alluded to in the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. The United States.

Mr. MORGAN. And nobody else?

Mr. CONGER. That is all there is who can be affected by the amendment. It merely heals the lack of title clouded by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MORGAN. And there are no persons——

Mr. CONGER. If there are other conflicting claims it does not heal them, it does not cure anything. If even some settler squatted and made a settlement on these very lands for which other men have patents, the amendment does not heal that title. I think the amendment is drawn carefully to protect simply the rights of those who suffered because the United States authorities did not do their duty in proclaiming and offering at public sale these lands. That is all that is intended to be healed by it.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, he is arguing that nobody can be hurt by the amendment? He is arguing that no conflicting claims of any validity can be affected by the provisions of the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. There might be some difference of opinion about the effect of this provision between the Senator and other Senators. I wish to ask the Senator in regard to one fact. Are there persons living upon these lands or any of them who have acquired an interest in them either under the homestead laws or the pre-emption laws, or by purchase from the Government of the United States in good faith?

Mr. CONGER. These very men whom we are trying to protect have by purchase or by pre-emption, or as homesteaders, settled upon the lands. They have got their patents, and they would be secure in their possession if it was not for a decision of the Supreme Court which says that the lands were not properly in market to be patented or to have homestead settlements upon. I will tell the Senator who would be affected adversely by this legislation. By that decision of the Supreme Court technically these settlers and these purchasers had no legal title. Having no legal title, the Senator or myself, or any other man if he desired to go there and pre-empt one hundred and sixty acres of land, or if he desired to go and make a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, these occupants having no legal title, may go and claim pre-emption upon one hundred and sixty acres of land that has been cultivated for years, and when it is tried the occupant now can not protect himself by his title under the decision of the court.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how I could go and pre-empt that land, or how I could go and take a homestead on it in the face of the fact that a person has settled upon it, and has got his home there already, and is claiming it?

Mr. CONGER. There can not be any question about that. I have had here in the Congress of the United States a case which illustrates that so completely that I will state it for the benefit of the Senate. One of my neighbors in Saint Clair County bought twenty-five or thirty years ago a piece of land in Saint Clair County. He got the patent of the United States for it, lived there, and cultivated it with his family. He wrested it from the wilderness and made a beautiful farm out of it with a fine house and barn. Finally some person went to the State land office of Michigan and found that that happened to be, by the listing, among the swamp lands given by the extension of the Arkansas swamp-land act to Michigan. He went and bought it by description of the State of Michigan, and when he came to find where his description was it covered the eighty acres of land of which I have spoken. Suit was brought in court. The person who bought the swamp-land right brought suit to eject the man who had lived upon the tract for thirty years. The court decided that the Arkansas swamp-land act, extended to the other States, operated per se; that although the lands were not described and were to be listed afterward, it operated as a grant per se to the State. After the passage of that law, but before the lists were made out, the United States had sold this tract to the occupant and given a patent for it and received his money; but the court held that the United States had already granted that land to the State of Michigan by an act of Congress, the particular land to be found out by reference to the field notes and lists of the surveyor-general, and the new purchaser held the land, and there was no remedy. The Supreme Court of the United States said it was the law, and I tried in vain to get a bill passed giving some relief to this neighbor of mine who lost his land by operation of law through the fault of the Government.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to the distinction between that case and the one I put to him. In the case of the swamp-land grant the title was granted in fee by the Government of the United States to the State of Michigan?

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. After that of course the Government had no further title to the land.

Mr. CONGER. Of course the court decided right.

Mr. MORGAN. But in a case where there has been no grant of land to any person, where an attempt was made to grant the land which failed because the lands had not been brought into market and thereby the certificate of entry became void or voidable, if that person is in the occupation of the land claiming it as his homestead or having upon it the right of pre-emption, he having complied with the conditions of the law as prescribed in the homestead and pre-emption acts, how could I go there and claim a homestead upon that land or claim a pre-emption right upon it? I could not go and ride down the possession and claim of a person on a tract of Government land in that way.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator knows very well that the settler could not sustain any right there under the pre-emption law.

Mr. MORGAN. He could if he was protected under this amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Under this, yes; but he could not without this.

Mr. MORGAN. The question of fact is this: Are there any persons upon these lands who have bought them, for instance, at $2.50 per acre and claim the right of ownership over those who bought them previously at one dollar and a quarter?

Mr. CONGER. Not at all. There can not be one. The man who bought them at $2.50 an acre got his patent for them at that rate. He holds them by virtue of a good title because he could buy without their being restored. Such men have patents, and there is no conflict between these two classes of cases. They do not interfere with each other. They can not from the very nature of the case.

Mr. MORGAN. Now will the Senator indulge me one word further, because this is all new matter to myself; I heard nothing of this controversy about the questions of title until it was mentioned by the Senator from Missouri.

Is it conceded that those persons who hold these lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre under certificates that they got from the local land offices obtained them in good faith, or did they go and induce—as has been done in some cases and complained of by the Department—the local land office to issue certificates for these lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre for the mere chance of getting the title if they could afterward work it through?

Mr. CONGER. Oh, Mr. President, these men bought their lands in good faith after the lands had been restored to market by the determination of the limits of the railroad grant in that class of cases. There is no question about that. The Senator has not heard and will not hear all this session or all next session any public statement contradictory of what I am saying here from anybody in Michigan.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It was held by the Land Department that the lands were properly restored to market, and that they could be legally sold and entered at that price, and no one doubted that until the determination of the Supreme Court which has been referred to.

Mr. CONGER. There was no question about their being properly restored to market and properly subject to sale, except this technical thing, that the President had not proclaimed them and ordered them to be offered at public sale; and if the Senator will read the amendment he will see that it says, "without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction." That is the only thing attempted to be cured.

The Senator says it has been many years since this decision of the Supreme Court. Men with their patents in their hands, settlers in the wilderness, the common people of the country, do not stop to think, with such a muniment of title, whether there is any defect in the Government's action about these things. They are too busy at work; the toil of the day and the necessary sleep of the night prevent their hunting around for defects of title or for crimination against their Government for having deceived them.

Mr. MORGAN. But I understood the Senator's colleague to say that many of these lands had gone into the hands of speculators.

Mr. CONGER. No. If the Senator will just bear this in mind, I have said that the defect in title will now allow men to go there and jump these lands and put on another title. This defect was not understood till within a very short time, although the decision may have been as long ago as the Senator from Alabama said. The people did not dream that a decision could take away their lands in that way until men began to go and put pre-emptions and homesteads onto the farms of these men. That is what awakened attention to it. And now, I say it in sorrow, sir, to-day all through the northern part of Michigan and Wisconsin and some parts of Minnesota families are trembling at the approach of the land-shark to take away their farms. Letters are being sent by those who have just awakened to a sense of the precarious condition of their titles, imploring their representatives to lay their case before Congress and ask for relief, not against other holders, because where there is a conflict there can be no question of the operation of this provision, but against their Government.

I hope that this amendment will prevail. In my solemn judgment it can do no injury to any honest claimant in the world, but it will quiet the hearts and quiet the homes of thousands and thousands of the citizens on the wilderness lands of Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota. I do not know that it applies anywhere else; probably not.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this debate seems to attract only the attention of three or four Senators, and I do not feel like addressing the Senate on a subject in which there appears to be no particular interest; but the truth ought to be vindicated at any hazard, at any expense of time.

I said to the colleague of the senior Senator from Michigan, who has just taken his seat—possibly he was absent from the Chamber—that I did not think there was a solitary Senator here, and speaking for myself I was positively certain that not a vote would be cast against a measure whenever offered, at any time, to secure to any bona fide settler his home. I will vote for any such amendment; and I would not under any circumstances take away from any human being a home upon the public lands of the United States, because, to say nothing more about it, I am a Western man, appreciate what a homestead means, understand it thoroughly, and would never directly or indirectly violate the spirit of the public-land system of the United States and our manifest destiny, which is for giving to every settler a home upon the Western prairies. That is not this case. I read here from a reputable gentleman, a constituent of the Senator, a statement over his own signature, and I gave the Senator his name this morning, in which he says there was collusion between the officers of the land offices and a body of speculators in order to get the most valuable lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin at a dollar and a quarter an acre in violation of the laws of the United States; and I undertake to say now that I hold in my hand a paper which, in my judgment, makes it absolutely impossible that there should not have been collusion between these speculators and the officers of these land offices in regard to this matter. I quote from a report, No. 684, from the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives upon this subject, and I call the attention of Senators to it. Says the majority of the committee:

It further, in respect to these entries, satisfactorily appears to your committee that they were made in violation of direct and positive instructions from the General Land Office, forbidding such disposition of the land; that these instructions were issued at intervals from 1865 to 1880; that not the slightest attention was paid to them by the local officers, who still continued to dispose of the lands at private entry, and that in this way, within the limits of the Ontonagon and State Line grant alone, there were disposed of, between 1856 and 1880—as already stated, 88,471 acres of lands, more than three-fourths of which were entered by less than thirty corporations, firms, and individuals.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I venture to challenge the gentleman to show that that refers to one single acre of this class of lands in any possible way.

Mr. VEST. We will see:

These figures are compiled from the pamphlet entitled History of the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Grant, a document prepared by the private-entry claimants themselves, and furnished the committee for use in this case.

Some of the orders, emanating from the Land Department, prohibiting these entries, read by counsel to the committee, found in their brief, with references to the official record, and uncontradicted, were as follows—

Now see whether these are the lands or not—

The Commissioner [of the General Land Office] to register and receiver, July 5, 1885—

Twenty years ago.

You will not forget—

Says the Commissioner—

that all odd-numbered sections in your district north of township 40 and west of range 21 (including the lands in contest)——

Mr. CONGER. What lands in contest?

Mr. VEST. The lands that are involved in this very amendment now.

Mr. CONGER. Not an acre of them.

Mr. VEST. Then this committee have stated what was absolutely false and incorrect, and put it on record.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It refers to a different matter altogether. It has not the remotest relation to the lands that will be affected by the proposed amendment.

Mr. VEST. These lands were withdrawn, as I understand, by an order of the General Land Office, and then they were entered at a dollar and a quarter, when they ought to have been, under the decision of the Supreme Court, put up at auction. Is not that so?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is not the whole truth. The lands to which the Senator from Missouri refers were never restored to market by executive order or otherwise.

Mr. CONGER. And are not yet.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. And are not yet.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Missouri will read the amendment he will see that the cases he is referring to are excepted.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He is on the wrong track altogether.

Mr. VEST. This is the very bill that is now in discussion here before the Senate. The House committee say in the report from which I am reading:

During the argument of the matter before your committee it was asserted by counsel for homestead and pre-emption settlers that most of the applications to enter were filled out in the handwriting of the then register of the Marquette office, the officer to whom the various prohibitory orders were sent; that they were frequently made on top of subsisting pre-emption and homestead claims, and that the register who allowed the most of them is now a member of a "committee of land-owners," urging the passage of the confirmatory bill.

Mr. CONGER. That is a matter which has been in controversy for years as to what are called the Ontonagon and Brulé Railroad lands. That is the kind of land that the land officers there allowed people to purchase inside of the railroad limits, the alternate sections, but that can not be affected and can not be reached in any way by this amendment, for those lands have never been restored to market, they never have been forfeited. A bill is pending now in the Senate to forfeit them. They are no such lands as these that have been restored to market.

Mr. VEST. Even assuming that the statements made now by the Senators from Wisconsin and Michigan are true, one fact remains about which I take it there will be no sort of question, and that is that large tracts of this land, the very land in controversy here now, amounting, according to a statement which I read this morning, to 100,000 acres, in the hands of three or four individuals, are affected by this amendment. If the Senators will bring in an amendment which confines this remedial act to homestead settlers or to men who own a home, whether it is one hundred and sixty or three hundred and twenty or six hundred and forty acres, I will vote for such an amendment, and I do not believe a single Senator in this Chamber will vote against it; but I do say in justice and in perfect candor that where a set of gentlemen, ingenious and refined in the art of making money, have amassed capital together to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, have deliberately gone to the land office and in violation of law, plain, express, and manifest law, as the Supreme Court of the United States has declared, entered hundreds of thousands of acres of pine land in order to make immense fortunes out of them, they ought not afterward to come to the Congress of the United States and say "we must have relief in the interest of homestead and pre-emption settlers." They do not stand upon any such footing. They speculated with their eyes open; they put in their money, and they now ask the Congress of the United States to take this enormous amount of the public domain and hand it over to them. I submit to Senators in all candor and truth and justice that is not right, that is not the spirit of the public land laws of the United States.

As to these facts I know nothing. I have exhibited my authority for the statement I have made. The gentleman who wrote me that letter gave names, and he gave the names of five gentlemen in this city at the time he wrote the letter, on the 26th of January, who were here in the interest of the bill now offered as an amendment, for the purpose of confirming their title; and he asserts in that letter that they hold 100,000 acres of the public domain. That is not the pathetic picture that my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has drawn here of a humble settler on the public domain, under his vine and fig tree and with his wife and children about him.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator's letter and the statement he read in a report was in regard to 88,000 acres of land of the alternate sections of the Ontonagon and Brulé Railroad lands, which never have been restored to market. The five gentlemen the Senator speaks about were here to try and get a bill passed securing them their titles. I say I do not know a living man from the State of Michigan or Wisconsin who is interested in this proposition who has been here in reference to this measure or in the city of Washington at all, now or formerly—not one solitary man.

The Senator speaks of 80,000 or 100,000 acres. That relates to land inside of the limits of the Ontonagon and Brulé Railroad which the land officers at Marquette permitted to be entered while they were then, as they are now, alternate sections within the railroad limits, and gave patents for. I know of 88,000 acres. That one statement there refers to that. I presume there are others. There were last year and the year before, but not this year that I know of, for I have not seen that class of men here—there were men interested in that railroad disputing the right to those lands. They were sections belonging to the railroad as contemplated by the law, not lands belonging to the United States; and those were the gentlemen—I could name them if it was necessary—who have been here trying to hold against the railroad company those lands which were sold while they were railroad lands and have never been forfeited. It does not apply to an acre of the class of lands affected by this amendment.

The Senator from Missouri I know wants to be fair in such a matter as this, but he has caught up accidentally a report which refers to a class of lands the dispute about which is between a railroad company and private purchasers. I know these lands very well. They are the subjects of another bill; they are the subjects of frequent comment between Senators on this floor, one Senator and another. Now, the picture that I have drawn of these purchasers and homesteaders and settlers and pre-emptioners is not a vine-and-fig-tree picture. The gentleman has mistaken the character of that rude boreal region. It is a settlement in the northern cold regions of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior.

I thank the Senator for giving me permission to use so much of his time.

Mr. VEST. That is all right. We will eliminate the vine and fig-tree from this compensation, and can talk now of the pine-woods settlements. But I am in favor of protecting the home of the settler whether it is in the tropics or at the North Pole. I want that distinctly understood; and I will vote for any amendment that does that. But this amendment covers any case where—lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto, or settlements thereon.

I call the attention of the mover of this amendment to the fact that if he means there a settlement in good faith, the phraseology ought to be changed, because as it is there it applies to any settlement, even the settlement of a party who went to the land office and in whose interest this amendment is presumed to prevail, unless by construction the word "conflicting" applies both to the words "claims" and "settlements"——

Mr. CONGER. Conflicting claims or conflicting settlements.

Mr. VEST. I suppose that may be the meaning of it; but if that is the meaning, the word "conflicting" ought to be repeated. But whether this bill affects the Ontonagon lands or not, the point still remains that there are different statements here made in regard to the quantities of these lands that have been entered under this law. If the intention be to protect homesteaders and pre-emptors and bona fide settlers to build homes on these lands, let such an amendment be offered here and I will vote for it; but as it stands now it protects enormous tracts of land, and it is intended to protect speculators and does in fact protect them.

As to matters of fact, I will not go into any controversy with the Senators from Michigan, who as a matter of course know all about the facts that cover this case; but the law itself ought to apply to those persons who have gone there and made homes upon these lands, and if there are speculators who by collusion with the officers of the land office or otherwise have devoted, as the letter stated which I read this morning, enormous amounts of money and years of their time in order to purchase these lands for the purposes of speculation, then the law ought not to protect them.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say to the Senator that I have been charged with the duty and have tried to perform it of preventing the carrying out of the plans of men who purchased large masses of land for pine purposes. I am one of those who have stood here for two or three years opposing any confirmation of the lands that I described and that are described in the report the Senator read, which were bought when they were railroad lands. I have stood here in obedience to a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan asking me to stand by the railroad corporations to which Michigan had intrusted the building of the railroad by extending to it this grant. Censured by my friends who own these lands, censured in the papers, opposed here for opposing the confirmation of the very lands mentioned in that report, I know what these lands are. My duty as a Senator under the instructions of my State, under the solemn resolution of the Legislature of my State, requires me as the representative of that State to oppose the confirmation of those lands and the title to those lands which the Senator has referred to. I think I know my duty; I think I know the interest of the people; I think I know that this amendment is to heal the title and cure the title of innocent purchasers and of homesteaders and of pre-emptors; and I think I know that I am not in advocating this amendment carrying out a measure in direct opposition to the instructions of the Legislature of my State.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator takes his seat I want to ask him a question. I make no issue with him as to his duty to his constituents; no question of that sort can be brought into this discussion; but I want to know from him if he does not believe, if there can be any doubt, in other words, about the fact that under this amendment as it stands now, if there are lands entered by speculators at $1.25 an acre in defiance of law, the amendment will perfect their title?

Mr. CONGER. If the defiance of law be that the President had not proclaimed these lands and had them offered at public sale, then all purchasers, pre-emptors, and homesteaders have violated the law in the sense the Senator means; but I do not stand here to say that when lands were properly in market and were liable to purchase, he or I or any other Senator may not buy forty acres or four thousand acres. I do not know of any of these great purchases of these lands. I do not believe they exist.

Mr. VEST. That is only a question of belief.

Mr. CONGER. I say this only cures the title where the defect was the non-offer of the lands at public auction. If from any other defect the title is doubtful, this amendment does not help it.

Mr. VEST. One thing is certain; no controversy can exist here about that; and that is, whether the person who made the entry was a pre-emptor or speculator, under the decision of the Supreme Court in nineteenth Wallace both parties violated the law.

Mr. CONGER. The homesteader did, too.

Mr. VEST. And the homesteader, too. In other words, these lands were not subject to pre-emption, they were not subject to homestead, they were not subject to sale. That was the decision made by Judge Davis in nineteenth Wallace in the Eldred case.

Mr. CONGER. Not these purchasers violated the law, but the officers of the United States from the President down to the receiver of the Land Office all violated the law, and we are trying to remedy their violation of the law.

Mr. VEST. I can not concede the proposition that these officers violated the law.

Mr. CONGER. They issued patents; they sold the land.

Mr. VEST. They did. They issued patents; but the President of the United States had an option as to putting these lands up at auction in regard to the time in which it should be done; and he might have been upon the eve of performing his duty at the very time the land officers permitted these entries to be made and these patents to issue.

Mr. CONGER. He has not done it yet, and most of these patents were issued years ago.

Mr. VEST. The circumstances may vary in particular cases. As a matter of course, where a patent has emanated from the Government it is beyond the control of the Government of the United States; the title having once emanated according to the decisions of the Supreme Court has passed away from the Government. It is true that as between individuals Mr. Smith may become, if he has perpetrated a fraud, a trustee of that legal title for Mr. Jones, but that is a question for the jurisdiction of the courts, and not for the action of Congress. All these parties are wrongdoers in the eye of the law, but I submit to the senior Senator from Michigan that there is a vast amount of difference between wrongdoers. If I innocently perpetrate a wrong upon my neighbor, if I innocently violate a law of the United States in letter, still if I am guiltless in spirit, Congress, as a great court of equity, ought to come to my relief.

Mr. CONGER. That is what we ask.

Mr. VEST. But if I go with my eyes open and undertake to appropriate to myself without the forms of law large tracts of the public domain, not for a home but for speculation, and I am deceived in my judgment, I am defeated in my speculation, stocks go down with me instead of going up, I have no more right to come to Congress for relief than a stock gambler in Wall street, when he says "I thought Congress meant so and so; I invested my money in Erie and it went down instead of going up; I am entitled to relief." There is a vast difference between a pre-emptor or the owner of a homestead right and a speculator who has gone in through his sharpness and his avarice and his greed to get the better of the Government and his fellow-citizens and put money in his own pocket.

I do not know anything about the facts, and I care nothing. The Senator from Michigan says he knows of no speculators interested here, and he believes there are none. That will not do for legislation. Let the Senator who claims to protect these settlers and pre-emptors come here with legislation that gives to every man who has made a bona fide settlement his home and I will vote for it; but I will vote for no law that covers men who have gone and bought 100,000 acres of the public domain and then come here and say to Congress, "We were mistaken about the laws; our lawyers deceived us, and now we want relief."

Mr. CONGER. The concluding remark of the Senator from Missouri would indicate that I had said that none of these lands were held by men who were not pre-emptors or homesteaders.

Mr. VEST. No.

Mr. CONGER. I meant to say no such thing. I said they might have been bought for pine lands. I knew of no such general purchase as that; still any man who knows anything about lumbering knows that no man can lumber on a single quarter-section, or section, or mile square of pine in the wilderness, any more than a herd of cattle can graze on a quarter-section of land in Missouri. They must accumulate lands. I am not saying that because it is so in this case, but there must be, to make any kind of lumbering profitable, accumulations of a tract large enough to warrant the expense of making the improvements, of building the tramway, of getting the logs to the stream, and getting them to the mill.

A man would be an insensate fool who thought he could come in and by entering quarter-sections of land miles and miles apart carry on lumbering in a pine region. Therefore I am not foolish enough to say that either from pre-emptors or purchasers or from whatever source some of these lands may not have been aggregated together in quantities of several sections for the purpose of lumbering in the pine lumbering States of Michigan and Wisconsin. I do not know how it is, but I do marvel at the opposition to this amendment so carefully guarded and carefully prepared, and where it only on the very face of it undertakes to cure and heal the defect of title caused by the wrongdoing of the authorities of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted. I was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SEWELL. I am paired on this question with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. ALDRICH. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Allison,	Cullom,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Hale,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Call,	Hill,	Pike,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Conger,	McMillan,	Sabin,

NAYS—22.

Bayard,	Garland,	Jackson,	Vance,
Butler,	Groome,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,

Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Maxey,
Farley,	Kenna,	Miller of N. Y.,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment to come in at the close of the amendment just adopted:

And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior; and in case there is any actual settler on any of said lands in good faith under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States, the rights of such settler shall prevail against any previous entry at the price of $1.25 per acre.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I will explain the amendment. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] stated that one of his purposes was to protect the homestead and pre-emption settlers there. A controversy would arise I think naturally between those persons who had entered the lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre and the homestead or pre-emption settlers upon the same lands. When we are ratifying and confirming the titles of those who entered at a dollar and a quarter an acre, those entries being decided to be illegal by the Supreme Court, I propose to provide for the honest, bona fide settlers and homesteaders, by saying that their claim upon these lands shall be adjudicated as other claims are in the Interior Department, and they shall prevail over those purchasers of the lands who have paid a dollar and a quarter an acre for them. Of course the effect would be this: Mr. A, a speculator, a lumberman, or whatever he may be, five or ten years ago has bought a tract of land there at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Suppose Mr. A be not a speculator or lumberman or a farmer, but bought a tract of land eight or ten or twelve years ago, and erected a dwelling-house upon it, and is residing thereon with his family?

Mr. MORGAN. That only suggests another one of the difficulties which I have adverted to several times, that we are trying to settle private titles by adjudicating them in the Congress of the United States. That is my objection to the entire proposition. We are by legislative decree trying to settle private land titles. That is what the proposition means anyhow. Of course difficulties of the kind suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin would arise to any man who has the subject in view, but the Senator from Michigan emphasized the fact that he wanted to protect this class of people, homesteaders and pre-emptors.

Mr. CONGER. And purchasers.

Mr. MORGAN. You can not protect them all. If there is a homesteader or a pre-emptor upon a forty, eighty, or one-hundred-and-sixty acre tract of land in good faith residing there, and at the time you pass this measure there is somebody else who holds title to the land at a dollar and a quarter an acre, an invalid title, a bad title, and you undertake now to make that title valid by an act of Congress, you say that you will not protect the homesteader and the settler. Does the Senator say now that he does not want to protect the homesteader and settler against the man who holds an invalid title acquired at a dollar and a quarter an acre?

Mr. CONGER. The Senator asks me that question. Would he like me to repeat what I said about my desire to protect the homesteader? Or does he say that to throw some discredit upon what I have said?

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all. The Senator asked a question.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to know what the object of the Senator is in insinuating as to my belief.

Mr. MORGAN. No insinuation about it. There is a little too much tender-footedness about this measure anyway; there is too much crowding about it anyway. It does not come in like other bills do on the floor of the Senate. If the Senator will allow me to say it, I have been a little mild in my opposition to it; but now if the Senator wants to have the subject brought up in square form I will say to him that I do not like the aspect of this measure in the Senate.

It looks to me too much as if some private enterprises were being carried forward here. When I bring in an amendment which carries out the very purpose that the honorable Senator himself insisted he wants carried into this bill, I hear objections.

Now, sir, if we mean in good faith to protect men who have honestly bought this land and paid a dollar and a quarter an acre for it let us do it. If we mean, however, in good faith to protect those men who have gone upon this land and have made their homestead and pre-emption settlements upon it, let us do that. Under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States every man not only has the right but he is invited by the Government of the United States to go upon the public lands and make his settlement.

Here is a class of people who have gone there under this invitation. They have made their settlements; they have built their houses and opened their farms. Now, the question is whether we shall validate a title, which somebody got ten or twelve or fifteen years ago at a dollar and a quarter an acre contrary to law, to the exclusion of a man who has a right of homestead or pre-emption. I do not profess to be particularly the partisan or friend of the homesteaders or any other class of settlers on the public lands; but I do profess to want every man to have his just rights under the laws of the United States. Senators who make themselves the champions of the homesteaders and the pre-emptors in this country have a fair opportunity for a square vote and no mistake about it between those speculators and lumbermen who have taken up these lands, as the Senator from Missiouri has more than intimated, under combinations with the Government officials there, fraudulent combinations, and the men who have gone under the invitation of the Government and settled upon these public lands and made their homesteads there. Now, sir, we have a square issue in this case. The amendment brings it up. I have no more to say about it.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not rise for the purpose of expressing any opinion as to the policy of attaching the amendment which has been already adopted to the bill. The effect of that amendment, as I understand it, is only to confirm the title of parties who have been permitted by the officers of the general and local land offices to purchase land at a dollar and a quarter an acre at private entry. Whether those purchasers were speculators or not I do not know, but a large proportion of the present owners of the land are persons who are residing upon the land, poor men. The amendment as adopted does not affect any controversy which exists between such holders of land purchased at private entry and settlers under the homestead and pre-emption laws, because they are specifically excluded from the operation of the amendment. Now, as I understand it, all such controversies must be determined in the General Land Office in the first instance, and if the purchases at private entry have been illegal the Commissioner of the General Land Office will decide in favor of the pre-emption and homestead settlers, and they will obtain their patents under existing laws. The only object of the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Alabama is to change the existing law and provide a new and special rule for the disposition of lands the title to which is controverted in the Land Office. Suppose it should turn out that some of these entries where there are contests were legal; suppose it should hereafter be decided that those lands were open to private entry when they were purchased, and by adopting this amendment we provide that notwithstanding that fact the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior should award these lands to the homestead and pre-emption claimants, would that be right?

There is no necessity in my judgment for this additional amendment, for any controversy concerning these lands must be determined in the General Land Office, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office must be governed in rendering his decision by the law of the case, and if the law gives lands to the homestead and pre-emption claimants they will get them, and if it does not they certainly ought not to have them.

This proposed amendment brings into this bill the decision of a controversy between private parties, the very thing that has been declaimed against by Senators on this floor. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] which has been adopted does not provide for the settlement of private rights. Because lands have been sold by inadvertence at private sale which were not subject at the time to private entry, and the Government has received the money for them where there are no other claims to them, it is proposed to confirm the titles. We had better get rid of the controversies concerning these lands now while we may do it.

There are already, as stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the particular locality where the lands in question lie, five hundred controversies between homestead and pre-emption claimants and persons who hold under private entries; and if we defer action until another session of Congress there will be five hundred more. These parties, both classes of claimants, have been before the Committee on Public Lands. There are cases which have been before the Committee on Public Lands in connection with railroad grants where the railroads claim the lands, where purchasers from the railroads claim the lands, where persons who have entered the lands at private entry claim them, and where pre-emption and homestead claimants claim them. It is time some action was taken to prevent further controversies. We should dispose of these lands in some way so as to prevent further controversy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Oregon how it happened that officers of the United States Land Office, acting under the laws and the instructions of that Department, utterly ignored the laws, trampled them under foot, and permitted these private entries to be made?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that I understand there have been different rulings by different Commissioners of the General Land Office, and by different Secretaries of the Interior. At one time it was held, as I now recollect, that lands which had once been offered at public sale and had become subject to private entry and were then withdrawn from private entry for railroad purposes, and afterward, on the location of the road, were restored to the public domain and opened to settlement, might be sold at private entry without being again offered at public sale.

Then another decision was made to the effect that such lands must be offered at public sale before they were open to private entry, and then the decision of the Supreme Court which has been referred to was made. In the mean time sales had been made under the rulings of the Department. Again, in one instance it appeared to the committee, or at least to myself, as if the local officers had disregarded the instructions of the General Land Office, although they claimed that for some reason the instructions, which had been sent in time, were not received until after the sales were made. The officers of the Government have been to blame. The parties who purchased the lands, whether speculators or not I do not know, duly entered the lands and paid their money for them; and the amendment which has been adopted is only intended to cure a technical defect in their title.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are those officers still in control of these land offices now?

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, no; that was years ago—thirty years ago, some one says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. CALL. I wish to say a very few words. I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] upon the ground that Senators assured us it was not in the interests of speculators, that there was no job in it, that there were large numbers of bona fide settlers, whether by purchase or under the homestead and pre-emption laws, in actual residence on these lands whose titles were involved in this error or irregularity which would be cured by the amendment. I wish it understood that I put my vote upon the assurance of Senators from the State that this was a measure to save and perfect the titles of actual residents upon the lands. Now I think it would be only wise to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Alabama which makes that absolutely conclusive, and gives to any settler now upon the lands who has a claim under the law a right to appear before the Department of the Interior. It is true he has that right already, but it is also true that it is more certain with a legislative declaration accompanying the law that it is not intended to preclude him from the assertion of that right.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator from Alabama who offered this amendment whether the time in January in the body of my colleague's amendment relates to the provision of this amendment also?

Mr. MORGAN. My amendment is a mere addition to the amendment already adopted.

Mr. CONGER. Would the limitation as to the 25th of January apply?

Mr. MORGAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. CONGER. If it does, it leaves the law just, as far as I know, as it was before.

Mr. MORGAN. My understanding is that it operates from the date stated in the original amendment. For instance, a settlement made now, a homestead taken now, would not prevail; indeed the question could not arise between a homestead taken after the passage of this bill and a prior entry, I think.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment of my colleague undertakes to say that no conflicting claim by jumping these lands after the 25th of January shall be allowed. If the amendment does that also, it saves the rights of these men to that extent.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think it changes it, though the Senator can make it perfectly certain by moving to amend.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator will put in the limitation, "made prior to the 25th of January," so that it shall not cover entries being made now, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection. The Senator can amend my amendment. I will accept it.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be amended.

Mr. BLAIR. The word "heretofore" is in the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, so that that word would make the limitation which is suggested.

Mr. MORGAN. I think so, too; but I am willing to make it satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama state the modification?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not offering any modification. I said I would accept that offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk again read Mr. MORGAN's amendment.

Mr. CONGER. After "laws of the United States" I move to insert the words "made prior to the 25th of January, 1885." All I desire to accomplish is that the constantly accruing attempts to get these lands by settlement shall not be efficacious.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I regret exceedingly to feel compelled to say another word in this debate, and I do not propose to say a word on the merits of the bill. I am anxious to get to a vote. At the same time I do not like to have this matter pass off by apparent agreement between two Senators. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he does not understand that all such contests must now be adjudicated by the Land Office?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. I want to keep the Land Office from getting into the courts.

Mr. DOLPH. Then the object of the amendment is to make the decision of the Land Office conclusive, so that the party defeated can not get into court?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir, we can not do that, because we can not deprive the judicial establishment of this country of jurisdiction in that way. That is a constitutional question.

Mr. DOLPH. If the contest must now be determined in the Land Office, I suppose it must be determined according to the existing laws, and if the homesteaders or pre-emption claimants have the best title they will prevail in the Land Office.

Mr. MORGAN. I should think so.

Mr. DOLPH. Therefore we will add nothing to the existing law by this amendment unless we provide that notwithstanding the person who entered the land at private entry has the best title, the pre-emption claimant claiming the land shall be preferred to him.

Mr. MORGAN. If we confirm a patent, for instance, issued by the United States Government at a dollar and a quarter an acre which at the present moment is invalid, and confer the title of the United States upon that patentee, he can go into court and eject the homesteader?

Mr. DOLPH. No.

Mr. MORGAN. I want that question settled in the Interior Department before the patent acquires any validity.

Mr. DOLPH. But does the Senator from Alabama suppose for a moment that the amendment already adopted refers to any land where there is a present pre-emption or homestead settler claiming it?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I am afraid it might.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that is not the intention, and certainly in my judgment it does not have that effect.

Mr. PALMER. I will state that the amendment from its very phraseology indicates that it does refer to where there are conflicting claims.

Mr. DOLPH The amendment of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PALMER. No, my amendment. It merely confirms titles where there are no conflicting claims.

Mr. DOLPH. Then the Senator means to say it does not refer to such claims.

Mr. PALMER. It is in the negative.

Mr. DOLPH. It refers to them and excepts them.

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. So I can not see the necessity for this amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not know whether I understand the effect of this legislation or not, because I am not familiar with the facts to which it is intended to apply; but if I understand the amendment already adopted, with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, it would have this effect, that if upon any of these lands there have been settlers who have acquired their titles by pre-emption or homestead settlements and received a patent therefor, and upon other portions persons have secured title by purchase, by entry, and have procured their patents as purchasers, and they may have disposed of portions of that land to innocent persons who knew nothing about any defect in the title, and these innocent persons, purchasers from the original patentees, may have actually settled upon the land holding their titles under the patent, and they would be ousted under the amendment of the Senator from Alabama—it would distinguish against settlers by purchase in favor of settlers by pre-emption or homestead settlement, and it would not protect such at all, if I understand the effect of the amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Minnesota will remember that there can not be any valid holders by purchase of these lands until we confirm the title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes; but our legislation should not produce any confusion in titles. That is to be avoided. If I understand the effect of the first part of the amendment, it relieves the defect in the title to any part of these lands which consists in having entered or purchased them when they had not been offered for sale at auction. That extends to all titles by entry and purchase and by pre-emption and settlement. The first part of it covers the whole ground; but the latter qualifies it only as to pre-emptors and homestead settlers, and distinguishes bona fide purchasers even in the occupancy of land. That I understand to be the effect of this amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state, if the Senator will allow me, that the effect is simply to validate what are now invalid titles in favor of persons who have purchased and paid for the same at a dollar and a quarter an acre, saving to the homesteaders and pre-emptors their rights, giving them a prior right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If I understand the effect of the amendment it is this: The provision already adopted does cure the defect in titles either of pre-emptors, homesteaders, or persons who purchased at private entry. The latter part of the amendment, that now proposed, protects pre-emptors and homesteaders against any persons who entered the lands and against any persons who hold under a title by entry, though they may be in the actual occupancy of the land under a conveyance from the original patentee where the entry was by private purchase.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Minnesota will allow me to make a suggestion. He seems to be interested for those who, having acquired title under the persons whose imperfect title is to be confirmed by this bill, and who under that title so derived are on the land, lest they may be affected by this provision of the Senator from Alabama. It can not do so at all. This bill operates to confirm the title of their grantor, and of course they would be secure in their title unless it was a case where some homesteader had a prior right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the Senator from Indiana does not comprehend the scope of this amendment. Upon these lands which were purchased at private entry there may have been persons who entered as settlers but have not obtained a patent, and as against any person holding a title under the purchaser by private entry those men would take and their title would prevail, because the first part of the amendment is qualified and restricted; but the latter part of it distinguishes against any title which accrued under the purchaser by private entry. I think it would produce confusion. I know nothing about where this legislation is to apply or what would be the effect of it further than the language of the amendment, and I see it has that effect.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not inclined to resent the imputation of the Senator from Minnesota that I do not comprehend——

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I say I am not at all inclined to resent it, but I rise to say that I think that has been the trouble with this whole amendment with which we are dealing here. We are dealing with a proposition that the committee of this body that should have had charge of it have never investigated, and that not a single member of the committee has yet been able to contribute any information on the subject; but still I think as to the particular matter to which I called the attention of the Senator from Minnesota I had perhaps a fair comprehension of the scope of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I made the allusion to the Senator in no offensive sense, and I am sorry that he is so sensitive upon the subject. I had been listening to the entire debate upon this amendment, and I am rather inclined to think the Senator did not hear it all. This amendment of the Senator from Alabama is intended to qualify the original amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to this bill. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama does qualify the original amendment and leave the matter in confusion.

Mr. CALL. There is no difficulty between the original amendment and that proposed by the Senator from Alabama. The original amendment provides simply and unmistakably that the entries of all unoffered lands, except where there are conflicting claims or settlements, shall be confirmed. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama proposes that where there is a conflicting homestead or pre-emption claim or settlement, that shall be adjudicated in the Department of the Interior, and shall be heard and decided there. That is all. There is no difficulty, I apprehend.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be laid aside informally in order that I may bring before the Senate the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN HANCOCK of Texas, Mr. JOHN F. FOLLETT of Ohio, and Mr. W. D. WASHBURN of Minnesota managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES N. BURNES of Missouri, Mr. RICHARD W. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, and Mr. W. D. WASHBURN of Minnesota managers at the conference on its part.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 11th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1793) to amend section 4434 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam vessels; and this day the act (S. 646) for the relief of R. G. P. White, Peter Hanger, and L. T. Green.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the first or formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that as the bill is read the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be considered in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the first reading of the bill in extenso be omitted and that the bill be read for amendment and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the reading proceeds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "departments," in line 20, to strike out the words:

Being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office and desk furniture, stationery, binding, maps and books of reference, police utensils, and similar necessaries.

So as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Department at the headquarters of military divisions and departments, $2,500.

The next amendment was in line 27, after the word "including," to strike out "such;" so as to read:

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs; signal equipments and stores; binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including absolutely necessary meteorological instruments for use on target-ranges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Pay Department," to strike out the following proviso from lines 86 to 91:

Provided, That the cost of such telegrams shall not exceed the amount fixed and paid by the Government, under contract, for telegrams composed of a similar number of words, exclusive of address and signature, officially sent to and from the Signal Service stations of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I ought to say a word with reference to this amendment. The effect of it is to increase rather than diminish the cost of Government telegraphing. The Government now has no contract with reference to the sending of these messages. They are all sent under a schedule of rates fixed by the Quartermaster-General from time to time under the law of 1866. The cost has been reduced within the last year about 45 per cent. from previous years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 124, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for "subsistence of the Army" from $1,900,000 to $1,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Quartermaster's Department," in line 138, after the word "offices," to insert "and for sale to officers;" and in the same line, after the word "officers," to strike out:

And for extra-duty pay to such enlisted men as may be employed in procuring and caring for fuel, forage, and heating apparatus: Provided, That fuel in kind may be issued to officers when on duty.

So as to read:

For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus and repair and maintenance of same, for heating barracks and quarters; of ranges and stoves for cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, including its care and protection, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 158, to reduce the appropriation for purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery and for the Indian scouts and for such infantry as may be mounted, from $200,000 to $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 159, after the word "that," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation added to the number actually on hand shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department," in line 178, after the word "clerks," to strike out "and other employés;" so as to read:

Compensation of clerks to officers of the Quartermaster's Department; compensation of forage and wagon-masters authorized by the act of July 5, 1838, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 182, after the word "for," to strike out the words "the rewards for;" so as to read:

For the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 192, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for incidental expenses" of the Quartermaster's Department from $690,000 to $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for transportation of the Army," in line 219, before the word "repairing," to insert the word "or;" and in line 220, after the word "transportation," to strike out:

And employed as train-masters, and in procuring water, opening roads, navigating vessels, and building wharves.

So as to read:

Pay of enlisted men on extra duty driving teams or repairing means of transportation; transportation of funds for the Pay and other disbursing Departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 229, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for transportation of the Army" from $3,000,000 to $2,900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 231, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to read:

Provided, That the whole number of civilian employés, including agents, superintendents, mechanics, packers, teamsters, and train-masters, paid from appropriations for transportation of the Army, shall not at any one time hereafter exceed 1,000, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 255, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven hundred" and insert "six hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, and for grounds for camp and summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations; for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 256, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no expenditure exceeding $500 shall be made upon any building or military post without the approval of the Secretary of War for the same, upon detailed estimates of the Quartermaster's Department; and the erection, construction, and repairs of all buildings and other public structures in the Quartermaster's Department shall, so far as may be practicable, be made by contract, after due legal advertisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from lines 274 to 276, inclusive:

For quarters for quartermaster-sergeants, commissary-sergeants, ordnance-sergeants, and veterinary surgeons, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 286, after the word "million," to strike out "four hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

'For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army; for issue and for sales at cost price, according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleansing when necessary; for equipage, and for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries, $1,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "thousand," in line 306, to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Army Medical Museum, including ordinary repairs of the museum hall, preservation of specimens, and the preparation or purchase of new specimens, $5,000; for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $10,000; in all, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 353, after the words "purchase of," to strike out "Gatling or Hotchkiss;" so as to read:

For the purchase of machine-guns suitable for field service, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That article 94 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and amended so as to read as follows:

"ART. 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on during such hours as the court-martial shall determine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary read so rapidly that I did not have an opportunity to call for a division on the last amendment on page 16, to strike out section 2. I ask that it be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read section 2.

Mr. SHERMAN. Article 94 reads as follows:

ART. 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on only between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, excepting in cases which, in the opinion of the officer appointing the court, require immediate example.

Under the provisions of that article a recent court-martial was continued here for weeks and months because the court was compelled by the express provisions of law to adjourn at 3 o'clock each day. I am told that the origin of that rule was derived from the British service, and the reason for it was that after 3 o'clock a gentleman on a court-martial was not expected to be sober enough to pass judiciously upon a proposition. The whole habits of our people, the hours of taking meals, &c., have changed, and therefore it is perfectly absurd to keep alive the old article of war which requires a court-martial to adjourn promptly at 3, and yet they must do it by law.

It is true this is legislation in an appropriation bill; it changes an article of war; but as it is here put on by the House, evidently in the interest of economy, I take it every Senator will assent to it unless some good reason should be given for striking it out. The article as proposed by the House is:

ART. 94. Proceedings of trials shall be carried on during such hours as the court-martial shall determine.

Surely a general court-martial convened for the trial of offenses ought to be allowed to adjourn and fix their hours of adjournment so as to be convenient to themselves and convenient to witnesses and the public. I hope therefore the law will be changed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I agree with the Senator from Ohio. This article of war ought to be changed substantially as the House has attempted to change it. The language, however, of this section 2 is very peculiar:

SEC. 2. That article 94 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed and amended so as to read as follows:

I think that is rather contradictory, to repeal a section and then amend it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can amend that by striking out the word "repealed."

Mr. MILLER, of California. It ought to be, "that article 94 be amended to read as follows."

Mr. ALLISON. We can not amend it here under our rules.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We can not amend it! Why not?

Mr. ALLISON. It is legislation.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We can do it by unanimous consent so as to give it sense and meaning.

Mr. ALLISON. Unanimous consent can do it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is obviously a mistake in the print, or else done by inadvertence.

Mr. ALLISON. This article 94 has been in existence, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, since the foundation of the Government, and was drawn from the articles of war of Great Britain. The law now provides that a court-martial shall be held between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon. I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio that it may be inconvenient at times in general courts-martial, such as that referred to by him for the trial of General Swaim, to hold the court between these hours; but this is a general provision; it relates to the entire Army of the United States, and I suppose it was inserted originally somewhat for the benefit of those who are accused of crime in the Army. It was intended that the accused should have full opportunity every day to bring his witnesses to the presence of the court; that a court-martial "organized to convict," if you please, as courts-martial have sometimes been organized hitherto, it is said, should not put the accused through under a hop, skip, and jump; that he should have an opportunity day by day with his counsel to bring forward witnesses and to examine the testimony as far as the trial had gone. It may be necessary, after the close of the day's sitting, that the accused should have an opportunity of reviewing the testimony.

The Committee on Appropriations did not feel itself authorized to take up on an appropriation bill the change of an article of war which had been carried through several wars in this country, including the late civil war, without change.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told by officers that it was not observed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that during the war, when we had numerous courts-martial, they held sessions at other hours than from 8 to 3. They held sessions all day sometimes.

Mr. ALLISON. These articles, I believe, were revised after the war.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I suppose the Secretary of War, being the authority by which courts-martial are authorized during the war, probably set the article aside in that particular, because I know that court-martial sessions were held all through the day and in the night.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree that this is rather an inconvenient hour in the city of Washington, but it may be a very convenient hour elsewhere; and I trust because of some inconvenience in a single instance that we shall not on an appropriation bill change this law, especially as we have no report from the Secretary of War and no report from the Committee on Military Affairs, the proper organ of the Senate in reference to such matters. If this is an inconvenience and if it requires change, it will be an easy thing any morning for the Military Committee to report an alteration of this article of war and to pass it through in a moment, and if it is so pressing, certainly there can be consent to pass it in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate being so thin, I do not propose to divide the Senate on a question of this kind; but I think the new idea of avoiding legislation on appropriation bills is running to seed, although I see some provisions of a legislative character even in this bill that are not stricken out. But I have called the attention of the Senate to it, and I hope the committee of conference when they meet on this bill, if they do at all, will allow this section to stand. I do not propose to divide the Senate at this time and in its present condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the amendment of the committee to strike out the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a copy of the report of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, dated February 2, 1885, requesting an additional appropriation to extinguish a deficit in its accounts, and asking authority to reopen the exhibition during the winter of 1885–1886.

A failure on the part of the management to carry out the original intent in regard to the exposition might reflect upon the honor of the United States Government, since twenty-one foreign nations and forty-six States and Territories have joined in the enterprise through faith in the sanction of the Government. In view of this fact, and in consideration of the value of the exposition to the cause of material progress and general education, I respectfully submit the report mentioned for the favorable consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 12, 1885.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT, MICH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich., which passed the Senate and has been returned by the House of Representatives with an amendment. The action of the House will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 12, 1885.

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate, No. 1609, entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," do pass with the following amendment. In line 25 of the bill, at the end of section 1, add the following:

"Provided, however, That if a new site shall be purchased for said building, as hereinbefore authorized, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $900,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building."

Mr. PALMER. I move the reference of that bill with the amendment to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives concurring in some and non-concurring in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Let the accompanying documents be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the petition of Samuel B. Gregory, with the accompanying papers, now on the files of the Senate, be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of John Hancock and other gas-consumers of Washington, D. C., praying Congress to take such action in their behalf that they may be supplied with illuminating heating gas of superior quality and cheap manufacture known as steam-carbon gas; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONGER presented resolutions of the committee on foreign and coastwise commerce of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., and the executive committee of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, protesting against the passage of the bill (H. R. 7163) to regulate the forms of bills of lading and the duties and liabilities of ship-owners and others; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAHONE presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Richmond, Va., praying that Richmond be made a naval station; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COL. HENRY J. HUNT.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted a report to accompany the bill (H. R. 78) to provide for the retirement of Col. Henry J. Hunt as a major-general of the United States Army, heretofore reported by him from the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ERIE, PA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair), laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor.

The amendments were read, being in lines 6 and 7, to strike out the words "three hundred" and insert the words "two hundred and fifty;" in line 10, to strike out the words "three hundred" and insert the words "two hundred and fifty;" and at the end of line 10, after the word "dollars," to add: "And no plan shall be approved which will involve an expenditure for site and building complete greater than the amount hereby fixed as the limit of cost."

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House. I will state that the House amendments reduce the limit $50,000. We think it ought not to be reduced; but to secure the passage of the bill I consent to the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Printing are hereby directed to report what, if any, further legislation is necessary to secure the proper distribution of the copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, which members of the Forty-seventh Congress who have deceased since the passage of the act of August 7, 1882, were entitled to at the time of their death.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent, pending the consideration of that bill, to take up House bill No. 7522, which is on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 7522) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir; there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee objects.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to take up House bills in their regular order.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a statement about this case. No, I believe I will not make a statement.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object to a statement, but I object to the consideration of the bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. PALMER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Michigan, perhaps both Senators from that State, to say that with some modification this amendment was altogether in harmony with the amendment which has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to have the amendment read so that I may know what we are voting upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 7—

And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior, and in case there is any actual settlement on any of said lands in good faith under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States made prior to January 25, 1885, the rights of such settlers shall prevail against any previous entry at the price of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. MORGAN. I confess my surprise at the objection made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I thought the amendment was exactly in the line of his policy in regard to the public lands. Now, I wish to remark to the Senate that the bill as amended secures titles by subsequent ratification of the Congress of the United States to those men who had no titles, who had entered lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre, and it stops right there. Both the Senators from Michigan said that they had a desire to protect homesteaders and pre-emption claimants upon these same lands who had no right, of course, to file their entries upon this description of lands until Congress enabled them to do so or until the lands were offered a second time for sale. I thought that while we were securing titles to those lumbermen who had bought these lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre under circumstances that were not entirely free from suspicion, it would be exactly in harmony with the policy indicated by the senior Senator from Michigan that we should also secure titles to those men who had made homestead and pre-emption entries upon the same lands, who in good faith had built their homesteads and made their pre-emption entries upon the same lands.

I also thought that it was right, inasmuch as I supposed both Senators concurred in it, that we should give the preference to a homesteader or a pre-emptor over a man who had bought the land at a dollar and a quarter an acre and had got a certificate which was entirely void, entirely invalid under the law. Therefore I proposed to improve the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan. While we were granting good titles to these men who had void titles and who had paid a dollar and a quarter an acre for them, I proposed to grant patents also, after investigation in the Interior Department, to those men who had made homestead entries upon these lands, and in case of contest between the homesteader or pre-emptor and the person who held the invalid title, my amendment gives the preference to the homesteader or the pre-emptor.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose the conflict is between a homesteader and a pre-emptor, what would be the effect of the amendment in that case?

Mr. MORGAN. Then the amendment suggests that it shall be settled in the Interior Department.

Mr. BLAIR. And that the settlement be final and that the existing right to go to the courts be denied. The word "final" is still in the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. A final settlement of a matter of this kind in the Interior Department relates only to the issue of the patent. It does not relate to the title, because that is all the time a matter open for controversy in the courts. Nobody can prevent that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose that under the amendment proposed the imperfect right of a person who has entered the lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre and paid his money into the Treasury of the United States is defeated by a subsequent entry by some person under the homestead act, would not that make at once a claim against the Government of the United States in favor of the person who had bought the land for the amount of the purchase-money of the land, perhaps with interest, and would not that multiply the difficulties that arise out of this state of affairs?

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt about its making a claim against the Government of the United States for the amount of money paid in, the dollar and a quarter an acre, and we have a general statute now which provides that in all such cases the money shall be returned to the party who had made the entry, without interest. The Senator from Ohio does not want to pay interest, I presume?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the law now. I confess my surprise at the attitude of some of the Senators on that side of the Chamber on this question. I thought that they in good faith were trying to protect the homesteaders and the pre-emptors. That was the impression made on my mind by the different resolutions, motions, and amendments that have been made. Now, when I suggest that these men shall have patents for their lands upon the basis of the homestead and pre-emption laws, and that those patents shall prevail against the void entries and against the void patents paid for by the lumbermen and the speculators at a dollar and a quarter an acre, I find opposition from the Senators from Michigan and others. Well, sir——

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I was not present when the vote was taken on the Senator's amendment and I suppose it is still pending. I do not understand why he uses the word "final" with reference to the controversy before the Department when under existing law parties always have a right to go further to the courts.

Mr. MORGAN. The word "final" relates to the action of the Department.

Mr. BLAIR. Does it have any effect whatever? Does the Senator mean it to have any effect whatever?

Mr. MORGAN. It has effect on the officers of the Department, of course.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand in what way it has any effect on the officers of the Department to provide that their action shall be final. Their action will be the same in any case. The word "final" comes in in such a way as to prevent further action beyond the jurisdiction of the officers of the Department. It seems to me that the Senator's position limits and restricts and injures the homesteader or the pre-emptor, as the case may be, who is in possession; it deprives him of a right to be relieved of injustice by the action of the courts when it is perpetrated against him by the Department. That right he now has. If that word "final" were striken out, the amendment, to my mind, would be perhaps one in the direction of relief. It is now one of injury and restriction.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator attributes too much weight to the word "final" in the context. The object of putting that word in was to have the decision finally made as between these litigants or contestants for the patent, and only for the patent.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not that the case now? Does not the Department proceed to a decision upon which the patent is to be issued?

Mr. MORGAN. It certainly does, but at the same time——

Mr. BLAIR. Then, if the Senator will pardon me for asking a question, what is the effect of the word "final" so far as the action of the Department is concerned?

Mr. MORGAN. The bill brings within the jurisdiction of the Department a class of cases that are not now within its jurisdiction, and while the adjudications of the Department are final under the existing law in respect of the issue of a patent, giving the consent of the Government through its authorized agents to the passage of the title from the Government to the party purchasing—while that is the fact in regard to the general operations of the Interior Department, when we bring a new subject within the jurisdiction that is not now within it, it is proper to apply the law as it exists to this new subject.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that the Senator proposes to make a law under which the Department will have a jurisdiction to decide something and to decide everything up to the point of the issuance of the patent. The adjective "final," if I comprehend it and its use, can have no reference whatever to the action of the Department in the exercise of its jurisdiction until it has issued the patent, and then its operation is such as to restrict the exercise of the litigant's right of appeal. It prevents the exercise of any such right to go further.

Mr. MORGAN. An appeal to what?

Mr. BLAIR. If the decision is final there can be no appellate jurisdiction beyond it.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any now? I ask the Senator, is there any appellate jurisdiction now from the Department of the Interior to any court in the United States?

Mr. BLAIR. Not direct from the Department, perhaps, but there is a right to go to the courts. There is no provision of law that the litigant is concluded by the decision of the Department; he may have his resort to the courts. The Senator's amendment deprives him of the right to try his cause and have it adjudicated by a jury of his countrymen, if I understand it.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator does not understand it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Alabama whether the word "final" as used in the amendment is at all essential to the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think that it is at all essential.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me not.

Mr. BLAIR. Then strike it out.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest to leave it off.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; I do not choose to submit to a mere hypercriticism which does not amount to anything. Every lawyer understands that the action of the Department of the Interior upon a question of title to a tract of land culminates and is fully expressed in the issuing of a patent or in the rejection of an application for a patent; and after the party gets his patent to that tract of land it is open to attack in court precisely as if he did not have any patent, precisely as the title is. That is all I undertake to provide in this case. I merely try to apply the laws of the United States in the very sense in which they are now applied to this new case brought within their jurisdiction. That is the whole matter.

Senators seem to be very much afraid that somebody who has bought these lands and got a patent for them at a dollar and a quarter an acre, the patent being entirely void, will not be able to oust somebody else of the right to an interest in these public lands. I insist that the statutes of the United States ought to apply to this case precisely as they are applied to all other questions adjudicated in the Interior Department, and as this is a new jurisdiction conferred only by the bill giving rights which now do not exist, I thought that it was only proper that we should apply the law as it does exist to these new titles and this new jurisdiction. That is the whole of it.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask whether the law as it now stands in reference to the jurisdiction of the Land Office upon matters properly before it in controversy provides that the decision of the Interior Department shall be final?

Mr. MORGAN. Final as to the right of the party to the muniment of title, the patent?

Mr. BLAIR. Final in its broad sense?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIR. Final in the broad sense in which the word "final" is used in the amendment? That is the question.

I wish now while I am speaking to resent the suggestion of the Senator that the proposal that the word "final" be stricken out is an effort in the direction which he intimates. I should be very glad to support his amendment if I did not believe that the use of the word "final" has the effect to rob the litigant of a right which he now has and must have.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not the intention of it. The Senator broadens the meaning of the word "final" so as to extend it to title, and I am applying it only to a muniment of title. That is the difference between us. The action of the Department shall be final so far as the patent is concerned in passing the title from it to the other party through a deed, a patent. That is all of it. After you have got it into the hands of the patentee it is open to litigation in respect of everything but the lawful issue of the patent, precisely as it was before any action was taken upon it. I am merely applying the law as it stands to the new case that is to be brought before the Department in which a new jurisdiction is to be conferred. I have no pride of opinion about it, but still I can not recognize that the Senator's point of objection is material, for he is thinking about the bill having an effect upon the question of title, when I am sure it does not. It will have an effect only upon the muniment of title, the patent.

Mr. HARRISON. I have just looked at the amendment for a moment, and I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he will not consent to insert after the words "Secretary of the Interior" the words "and the judicial courts of the United States;" so that the decision would be left to the Interior Department so far as the law provides for the consideration of any questions there, and so far as questions may arise for the courts the parties may go into the courts. I think it would help to secure the adoption of some portion of the amendment, which I think is in the right direction.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to having those words go in to explain it to the satisfaction of any Senator who does not understand the law very well.

Mr. HARRISON. I was making a concession.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana move to amend the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, I move to insert after the words "Secretary of the Interior," in line 6, the words "and the judicial courts of the United States."

Mr. BLAIR. How will it read then?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as it would read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior and the judicial courts of the United States; and in case there is any actual settlement, &c.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator that he had better put in words so as to include the judicial courts of the States.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Alabama make a suggestion that the phraseology used would limit the jurisdiction to the Federal courts?

Mr. MORGAN. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. HARRISON. That was not my intention. I did not intend to exclude the jurisdiction of the State courts in any case where they would have jurisdiction, and if the language does that it does not express my intention. I ask the Senator if he now thinks that would be the effect of it?

Mr. MORGAN. No, I suppose not; I am indifferent about it. I merely wanted to have Senators understand it before voting upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The courts of the United States have final jurisdiction of all questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true.

Mr. DOLPH. Is the question now before the Senate on the motion to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to occupy but one moment. As I said, the amendment which has been adopted does not affect any case where there are conflicting claims between individuals. It only affects a case where there is a conflict of title between an individual and the Government, and with such lands we have a right to deal as we please. But when we come to legislate in regard to a tract of land which is claimed by two or more citizens under different laws, we have not a right to do as we please. I am not in favor of any amendment which proposes to forestall the action of the Department of the Interior and forestall the courts and say that when you come to adjudicate a contested case you shall decide in favor of one class of citizens and against one class of claimants.

I will go as far as any member of the Senate in favor of a homestead and pre-emption claimant, but what is done in their favor must be done in accordance with law and right. If there are two or more claimants to a tract or to several tracts of land, they now have a right to go into the Department or to go into the courts and have their rights adjudicated. I can not sit here and vote for an amendment which will undertake to forestall the action of the courts and say that the courts and the Department must render a given decision right or wrong where there is a conflict of claims.

I do not care particularly what is done with the pending amendment, but I wish to state my position upon it. I can not vote for any amendment by which we shall undertake to settle private rights by act of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not trying to forestall the action of the courts and compel them to decide where the title might be after we got through with this very delicate subject; but I was trying to provide that the officers of this Government should issue patents which Congress would declare valid to certain persons. The bill provides for the confirmation of a patent heretofore issued in favor of a purchaser at a dollar and a quarter an acre, notwithstanding his purchase was invalid at the time he made it. My amendment provides that if there is a homesteader or pre-emptor there he shall have a patent for his land under the adjudication of the Interior Department, provided he establishes his claim, and that his claim shall be paramount to that of the man who claims the land under a previous purchase at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

That is the situation exactly. I am not trying to forestall a judicial decision about this matter; I am merely trying to secure to homesteaders and pre-emptors upon these lands their rights. They have gone in innocence, they have gone by invitation of the Government upon these public lands, and when they get there they find themselves confronted with a patent or certificate issued to a purchaser at a dollar and a quarter an acre, who says to the pre-emptor and to the land officer and to the courts, "this is an invalid arrangement, it carries no title, because at the time the certificate was issued the lands were not marketable, they were not subject to sale by the local land officers." A provision was offered here, as I understood it, for the purpose of confirming their rights, and in cases where there were no conflicts between such persons and the prior purchasers for the purpose of confirming the rights of the prior purchasers who got the land at a dollar and a quarter an acre. That is the way I understood the matter.

In order to secure to the homesteaders and the pre-emptors an adjudication in their favor in the Interior Department in the case of conflicting claims, and also a patent upon which they could rest, I have offerred my amendment to the bill, and I find that it stirs up a great deal of strife. It seems to me that I have touched upon a sort of tender point about this case, and that after all, while there are great professions here in favor of the homesteaders and the pre-emptors, the real object is to protect the logmen and the lumbermen; it is to protect that class of men about whom the Senator from Missouri spoke to-day, who he said had gone in there and had inveigled the public officers, contrary to instructions in some cases, to permit entries to be made at a dollar and a quarter an acre, they knowing and the purchasers knowing that all they were buying was like a ticket in the Louisiana Lottery; it was a mere chance to draw a prize.

I have not brought this subject into this case. The Committee on Public Lands did not bring this question into the case. We have been considering a bill having reference only to the modification or repeal of the pre-emption laws, the timber-culture laws, and the desert-land laws. Now we have switched off until we have got the main issue before the Senate, which has occupied the time of this body for hours and hours together, the control of certain lands in the State of Michigan, about which there seems to be more interest and to which more attention is drawn than there is to all the rest of the lands in the United States, although the bill covers the whole country.

In the pursuit of this controversy a question has arisen here as to whether the titles which we are trying to confirm are titles that are at war with the rights of homesteaders and pre-emptors, and also whether that title is at war with persons who have bought these lands subsequently and paid for them at two dollars and a half an acre. A good deal of debate has gone on about that. I had the honor to offer an amendment which I thought would reconcile everybody about it so that we could get rid of this bill and the Senate could proceed with the public business. After some lapse of time, when the proposition was duly digested on the other side of the Chamber among the Senators who are particularly interested in this matter, it obviously turns out that the whole intent and purpose of this legislation is to protect the men who hold the titles at a dollar and a quarter an acre, which are invalid, against everybody, against the men who paid two dollars and a half an acre for land subsequently, and against the homesteaders and pre-emptors. That is an obvious fact; and I am here trying to defend those persons in their rights acquired under the laws of the United States, while Senators who professed to be their champions and defenders a few hours ago are here warring against them. That is the situation.

I maintain that the Senate of the United States ought not in justice and duty to the country to ratify and confirm these void titles, pronounced twelve years ago to be void by the Supreme Court of the United States, unless in the mean time it protects those men who have honestly gone upon these lands and acquired homesteads there.

My amendment refers only to bona fide homesteaders and pre-emptors, not to men who set up pretended claims. While this controversy has been going on and since the decision of the Supreme Court twelve years ago, which invalidated the entries at a dollar and a quarter an acre, men have been settling themselves upon these lands in Michigan, claiming under the invitation of the Government of the United States the right to go there and to locate their homesteads and pre-emptions; and now it is proposed that we shall ratify and confirm the previous title and cut these men out entirely. That is what is meant by the amendment put upon the bill on the motion of the Senator from Michigan. I have said about it all I intend to say; and I shall let the Senate vote upon the amendment I have offered, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask leave to modify my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Instead of making it read, "and the judicial courts of the United States," I will modify it so as to read, "and the proper judicial courts." I suppose the final jurisdiction is in the United States courts in these cases; but I do not want to exclude the idea that preliminary jurisdiction may be in the State courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana modifies his amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. The amendment to the amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the word "Interior," it is proposed to insert "and the proper judicial courts;" so as to read:

> And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior and the proper judicial courts, &c.

Mr. CONGER. It is very unfortunate that any Senator on this floor should presume to call in question the argument, or the reasoning, or the conclusions of the Senator from Alabama. One might know beforehand that it would fall into a personal attack upon one who was so presumptuous.

Now it does not turn out, as the Senator with so much assurance asserts, that any Senator on this side of the Chamber, or any Senator from Michigan, or any Senator who has advocated the original amendment, has forsaken his position; that he has been inconsistent; that he stands here as the advocate of men who have accummulated vast amounts of land for any purpose whatever; and the Senator had no business to make such an intimation or such an insinuation. I dismiss it by saying that it was unworthy of him and of the place where the assertion was made.

The amendment which we advocated related only to claims where there was no conflict. In the express language of the amendment offered by my colleague, it related only to claims where there was no conflict. To what does the Senator's amendment relate? It refers to all such "conflicting claims." That is a new subject introduced. It has nothing to do with the amendment offered by my colleague. The claims referred to in the amendment offered by my colleague are claims where there is no conflict, and the amendment says so. Why does the gentleman wish to introduce an amendment here about another set of claims, the conflicting claims which are not reached in any possible way by the measure which we have been advocating?

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether the words "no valid conflicting claims" do not form a part of the language of the amendment as adopted?

Mr. CONGER. Of course valid conflicting claims or conflicting claims are excluded. It says where there are no conflicting claims the confirmation shall operate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Michigan will suspend, the Chair will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama. The amendment heretofore agreed to by the Senate, in that part of it, reads:

> Without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there were no valid conflicting claims thereto or settlement thereon.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator misquotes the amendment. I suppose he does it by accident.

Mr. CONGER. I do not do it by accident. I say where there were no conflicting claims the amendment makes the title good. That is plain enough; and the Senator has retired from it on my assertion, I see.

Notwithstanding the Senator has chided us for introducing into the bill new matter, he has introduced a new class of claims. Whether they come in or do not come in, it does not affect the previous provisions where there are no conflicting claims. I think the amendment offered by my colleague was a just and a proper one, protecting the rights of citizens of the United States against the fault or default of the Government of the United States, and that is what we wanted to meet. If the Senator wishes to bring in other claims, if he wishes to introduce into the bill additional matter, that is his proposition. He is determining beforehand by his amendment that the decision either at the local land office or at the Land Department generally shall be final on all these questions. He brings in new matter and a new class of claims which are especially excepted out of the previous amendment, and I object to it.

Mr. VEST. Before the vote is taken on the pending question I should like to make an inquiry of the mover of the amendment as to what is the meaning of a valid conflicting claim? When a claim is not in conflict with another, the one that prevails I suppose is the valid one!

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator will read the provision he will see that it says where "there are no valid conflicting claims" then it shall take effect.

Mr. VEST. I understand that. I suppose that if it were a conflicting claim that is not valid, it would be a different thing.

Mr. CONGER. They are an exception.

Mr. HARRISON. As to the meaning of the clause which the Senator from Michigan has been talking about, I think the bill intends to say that as between the holder of a valid claim and any other claimant the holder of a valid claim shall have preference, whether he be a homesteader or a pre-emptor or whatever his relations to the lands may be. It is declared that the men who confessedly have an invalid claim shall have their claim made valid against other invalid claims. That is the effect of the provision.

For one I wish to say, and that will end this debate so far as I am concerned—I have not taken up much time in it—that in every case where a homesteader, a man who goes to make his home upon the land of the United States—upon a reasonable amount of that land—to make a farm and a home, even if he mistakes the law, even if his proceedings to acquire title under the land laws are inefficient and ineffective, so far as I am concerned I always shall be ready to support legislation to secure him in that purchase, or attempted purchase, and to resist the invasion of others upon the land; but I do hold that where men go to buy the pine lands of the United States, or where men undertake to buy vast quantities of the grazing lands of the United States, men who ought to be advised as to what the laws are, men who have the means and the time and the ability to know what the laws are, and purchase vast tracts of these lands, and then come to the Government to ask the Government to confirm those invalid titles, for one I shall not be willing to do it, certainly not as against any man who wants to use any part of those lands as a home.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept that if I have the right to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama can not accept it, the yeas and nays having been ordered upon his amendment.

Mr. HOAR (to Mr. MORGAN). Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may accept the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment to the amendment is accepted. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 7:

And all questions relating to such conflicting claims or settlements shall be subject to adjudication and final decision in the Department of the Interior and the proper judicial courts; and in case there is any actual settlement on any of said lands in good faith under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States made prior to January 25, 1885, the rights of such settlers shall prevail against any previous entry at the price of $1.25 per acre,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were here, I presume he would vote "yea;" I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Aldrich,	George,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Bayard,	Groome,	Lamar,	Platt,
Blair,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Pugh,
Coke,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Vest,
Garland,	Jackson,	Morrill,	Voorhees.

NAYS—14.

Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck.
Conger,	Hill,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Lapham,	Pike
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—34.

Allison,	Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Fair,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Farley,	Logan,	Sewell,
Butler,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Call,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Walker,
Camden,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Williams.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Plumb,
Chace,	Hoar,	Ransom,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass? [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was in the cloak-room and the bill passed to its present stage before I was aware of the fact. There was an amendment prepared by me in the first instance, but I think improved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], which would give the bill, if it is to pass, the approval, I think, of a great many Senators who otherwise might not vote for it. In order to enable me to propose the amendment I move to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Ohio will have unanimous consent to move an amendment at this stage.

Mr. DOLPH. I think there will be no opposition to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote ordering the third reading of the bill will be reconsidered in order to enable the Senator from Ohio to offer an amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Ohio has sent to the desk the amendment submitted and printed as intended to be offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the one I prefer. It accomplishes the same purpose and in fewer words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After section 4 it is proposed to insert as a new section:

SEC. 5. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations and mineral and other lands, the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I fear the amendment will provoke discussion, but I hope the last clause, the words "or be subject to private entry," may be stricken out, because no land is subject to private entry unless it is first offered at public sale. Then the amendment will prevent any land being offered at public sale, and, of course, any land in the future being subject to private entry.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have shown the amendment to several Senators who are more familiar with the land laws than I am, because I am not very familiar with them, and it has met with their approval. I think those words would do no harm. Entry at private sale means entry for money. My purpose is that all lands that may hereafter be offered or ordered to be offered for public sale, or which may be offered under special laws limited to particular tracts of land, shall only be open for entry under the homestead system of the public lands.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask the Senator to except soldiers' land-warrants.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that is necessary. However, I have no objection to adding to the provision that it shall not apply to entries under soldiers' land-warrants.

Mr. DOLPH. I think, as that would specify some exceptions and leave out others, the amendment had better remain as it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better be left as it is, because the entry of land by warrants is not an entry with money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New York state, so that the clerks may take it down, the modification which he proposes to the amendment? [A pause.] Has the Senator withdrawn his proposition to amend?

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw it. I do not think it necessary to make that provision, because there are very few such land-warrants out, and I do not think they are considered in the Land Office as being private entries. They are provided for by existing law; and the amendment I offer will not interfere with entries by land-warrants if there are any outstanding. I did not know that there were any out now.

Mr. DOLPH. If the amendment would at all affect lands which are now subject to private entry, then it would be necessary that the amendment suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and which was printed and laid on the desks of Senators, should be adopted also, so as to allow agricultural-college scrip, bounty-land warrants, and all other scrip authorized under acts of Congress to be still located. If it is clear that the amendment applies only to public lands which have never been offered at private sale, and does not affect public lands which have been heretofore offered, then it is not necessary.

That is the reason why I propose to strike out the words "or be subject to private entry." Every Senator knows that lands are not subject to private entry until they have been offered at public sale. The amendment as it would stand after those words were stricken out would prevent the offering of lands at public sale, and consequently no additional lands would in the future become subject to private entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from Ohio has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that he has withdrawn his amendment. It was the amendment proposed to the amendment that he withdrew after having first agreed to accept it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that the amendment interferes at all with entries upon any existing lands now subject to sale. It does not affect the existing law in that respect. Besides, I have excepted from the operation of this proposed law all lands heretofore open for private entry. It only applies to lands which may become subject to private entry upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior by offering them for public sale.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Ohio to have withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; I only withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair apologizes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. An amendment was proposed to the amendment, and there was some controversy between Senators around me in regard to the necessity of it, and I preferred to let my amendment stand as it was first offered. As it now reads it has been carefully considered by Senators who are familiar with the land laws. I submitted it also to the Senator from Oregon himself, and I supposed it would be satisfactory.

Mr. DOLPH. In justice to myself I should state that I suggested to the Senator that the last clause of the amendment should be stricken out. I agree with the Senator that the construction of the amendment will be as he supposes; and now that the matter has been the subject of debate so as to show what is intended, and will be some direction to the land officers, I shall not insist upon any amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Ohio it is to cut off the right of private entry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, that is what is intended, except as to land-warrants, &c. I say nothing about them, because the technical phrase "private entry," I am told, is confined to the entry of public land with money.

Mr. MORGAN. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, who is not present at this time, made rather a complete statement on the subject in regard to the amount of lands in the United States subject to private entry.

Mr. SHERMAN. My amendment expressly excepts all lands that have heretofore been offered at public sale. It does not affect any of the lands that have been in controversy in the Southern States.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as an additional section after section 4 of the bill:

SEC. 5. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment purposely excepts all lands that have heretofore been offered at public sale.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SLATER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair assumes, and if there be no objection will take it, that the yeas and nays heretofore ordered on the passage of the bill shall stand as the present order. The Secretary will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The result was announced—nays 26, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Blair,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Sabin,
Brown,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Conger,	Lapham,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	McMillan,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Dolph,	Mahone,	Pike,
Harrison,	Manderson,	Platt,

NAYS—20.

Bayard,	Groome,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Slater,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Vest,
Garland,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Voorhees.

ABSENT—30.

Aldrich,	Chace,	Gorman,	McPherson,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Hale,	Plumb,
Beck,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Sewell,
Butler,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Walker,
Call,	Frye,	Kenna,	Williams.
Camden,	George,	Lamar,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gibson,	Logan,

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill just passed be reprinted as amended. It is an important bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the bill just passed about pre-emption laws, &c., be printed as passed. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the next special order, being Order of Business 336, which by unanimous consent was to-day placed at the head of the Calendar of Special Orders. The title will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If that bill will take but a short time I shall consent to taking it up, but I do not wish to do anything to displace the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let it be informally laid aside then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2550. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. INGALLS. May I make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President? In case the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire should be agreed to, will the special order that has just been named by the Chair be displaced and go upon the Calendar of General Orders?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it will.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I trust it will not be laid aside.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection on my part to the special order being laid aside informally. I did not suppose it was before the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope we shall be allowed to have an executive session.

Mr. HARRISON. A brief executive session is necessary.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I felt under obligation to the Senator from Nebraska, as he yielded for a motion to go into executive session, to make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Enrolled Bills desires to submit a report.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. YAPLE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to submit certain executive communications, and asks permission of the House.

There was no objection.

GREEN AND BARREN RIVERS, KENTUCKY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the Chief of Engineers upon the condition of Green and Barren Rivers, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CLINTON RIVER, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of the survey of Clinton River, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of the survey of Lake Champlain at Four Channels, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. CRAIG, indefinitely, on account of illness
To Mr. RIGGS, for the rest of the week, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the following resolution—
"Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the House for the remainder of the session be 11 o'clock a. m."— having had the same under consideration, report it back with the following substitute:
Resolved, That on and after Monday next the hour of daily meeting of the House for the remainder of the present session be 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the report.
Mr. THOMAS. I desire to offer an amendment. I called the attention of the Speaker before the previous question was demanded.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was recognized, and the gentleman from Illinois had no right under the rules to sweep the gentleman from Pennsylvania from the floor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has submitted the report of the Committee on Rules and asks the previous question. It is in the pleasure of the House either to order it or to refuse it.
The previous question was ordered.
Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.
The substitute recommended by the Committee on Rules was agreed to; and the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute was agreed to.
Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 7857) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, and to move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.
Mr. THOMPSON. I reserve all points of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is no point of order that can be reserved now. The gentleman from Missouri moves non-concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate.
Mr. THOMPSON. Is it not the right time now to reserve all points of order against those amendments before they are non-concurred in, so that they shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think there is any custom generally of reserving points of order at this stage. The gentleman from Kentucky has a right to make any point of order he may state.
Mr. THOMPSON. As I understand the rule, the amendments ingrafted on a House bill by the Senate are subject to the same points of order as if the propositions had originated in the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides that any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the same point of order sending it for its first consideration to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that would apply if the proposition originated in the House.
Mr. THOMPSON. I only want to reserve the points of order so that we may know what we are doing. There may be something in those amendments which ought to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to be considered there.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reservation of points of order now, in the judgment of the Chair, would amount to nothing. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is to non-concur in the amendments and send them out of the House.
Mr. THOMPSON. If the points of order be reserved and the amendments be read, would it not then be in order to make the point against any amendment that it should be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order should be stated when the amendments are submitted for consideration.
Mr. THOMPSON. I mean that the amendments should be read now to the House.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman demand the reading of the amendments?
Mr. THOMPSON. I think we should know what is being done.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think the amendments should be read.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendments of the Senate.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will not insist upon the reading of the amendments. There is a large number of them; many of them are merely formal, and the Committee on Appropriations have unanimously recommended that they be non-concurred in.
Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman who asks non-concurrence whether these amendments have been considered by the Committee on Appropriations?
Mr. BURNES. These amendments have been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee has unanimously instructed me to ask what I have asked—that the House non-concur and that a committee of conference be appointed.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There is so much conversation in the Hall that it is impossible to hear the statement of the gentleman [Mr. BURNES]. I have no desire to take up the time of the House by having these amendments read if the gentleman will state the points of difference.
Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, there is quite a number of these amendments, but many of them, and indeed most of them, are merely formal and inconsiderable. For instance, many of them involve merely a change of title, as from "consul-general" to "consul;" from "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary" to "minister resident," and so on. Then there are some changes with regard to amounts. There is about $200,000 increase and some two or three thousand dollars decrease in the total appropriation. These amendments have been considered by the Committee on Appropriations and, without dissent on the part of any member of the committee, I have been instructed to move that the House non-concur in all the amendments and to ask for a committee of conference. I now demand the previous question.
The motion to non-concur was agreed to.
Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore announced, as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNES, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and Mr. WASHBURN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry and put it upon its passage.
Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not in order under this call.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I have this morning felt it my duty to insist upon the regular order and have declined similar requests from other members, and therefore I must object to this resolution.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this is a privileged matter under the rule.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it is privileged, of course I can not object to it.
Mr. KEIFER. Not privileged for present consideration, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so hold. The Chair asks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] whether the resolution which he offers is reported from and under the order of any committee of the House?
Mr. REAGAN. It is not.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then it is not privileged.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to said bill, and ask for a committee of conference.
The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HANCOCK, Mr. FOLLETT, and Mr. WASHBURN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour under the special rule begins at this time—half past 12 o'clock. The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over from the last hour, which is the bill (S. 1609) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich. The question is on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, when the first amendment was put there was not a quorum present, and for that reason the yeas and nays were called for. There being a quorum now present, I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and ask for tellers upon that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is correct. The House was dividing upon the first amendment submitted by him, which was to reduce the amount appropriated from $750,000 to $500,000. Upon that question no quorum had voted. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now asks for tellers; and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MAYBURY.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 112.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which will be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment about to be read applies to the first section of the bill; and in view of the action just taken it should be modified by striking out "$750,000" and inserting "$900,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following to section 1:

"Provided, however, That if a new site shall be purchased for said building, as hereinbefore authorized, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $900,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for. And no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building."

Mr. MAYBURY. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYBURY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAM ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT BRAINERD, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6764) to authorize the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Mississippi Water-Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., is hereby authorized and empowered to construct across the Mississippi River, at some point not more than two miles from the limits of the said city of Brainerd, a dam, canal, and the appurtenances thereof, for water-power and other purposes, and in connection therewith a wagon and foot bridge for public travel: Provided, That the Government of the United States may at any time construct in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes: Provided also, That the Government of the United States may at any time take possession of said dam and control the same for purposes of navigation by paying said company the actual cost of the same, but shall not do so to the detriment of the water-power created by said dam: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such modification and changes in the construction of said dam as he may deem advisable in the interests of navigation; and that said dam shall be so built that boats and rafts may pass through the same when necessary: And provided further, That all suits relative to any obstruction of navigation arising from said dam may be tried in the United States circuit and district courts for Minnesota.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. NELSON. That will not be taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky to control the time in opposition to the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the reading of the report in his time.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the gentleman from Kentucky would allow me to make an explanation.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I can not yield to the gentleman any of my time. I will let the gentleman occupy his time now. I reserve my time.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, has not the gentleman from Minnesota the right to occupy the first five minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has the right to occupy five minutes in favor of the bill, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky as entitled to the five minutes in opposition.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the Committee on Commerce, by whom it was referred to the Secretary of War, who joins with the committee in recommending its passage. It provides for the construction of a dam in the Mississippi River at a place called Brainerd, where the Northern Pacific Railroad crosses the river. This point is between two hundred and fifty and three hundred miles above Minneapolis or the Falls of Saint Anthony, which is to-day practically the head of navigation on the Mississippi River. The Falls of Saint Anthony at present totally obstruct navigation beyond that point. One hundred miles above the Falls of Saint Anthony is a dam constructed, under authority of an act of Congress, at a place called Saint Cloud. Three miles above that is another dam constructed at Sauk Rapids, a dam which has been in existence over ten years. Beyond that some sixty or seventy miles is a succession of rapids called the Little Falls; and beyond that is this place called Brainerd, where it is proposed to construct this dam.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the Government has not been appropriating money for the improvement of the navigation of that river above where it is proposed to put this dam.

Mr. NELSON. I was coming to an explanation on that point. Some two hundred miles above this dam is what is known as the reservoir system of the Mississippi River. These reservoirs are built for the purpose simply of retaining water to be let out when necessary to improve the navigation of the Mississippi below. On this reach of the river from Saint Cloud to Brainerd and thirty miles beyond the river has never been navigated. If the Government undertook to make that portion of the river navigable, it would have to do so by the construction of a system of locks and dams. Under the advice of the Secretary of War, the committee have ingrafted upon this bill amendments providing that this dam shall be so constructed that boats and rafts may pass, and that the Government may at any time take possession of the dam and use it for purposes of navigation.

Mr. GIBSON. But you require the Government to pay for the work.

Mr. NELSON. We propose to require that if this work be taken for the purposes of the Government the reasonable worth of the property shall be paid.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But the Government is not required to pay for any lock or other work to be made now.

Mr. NELSON. No; the bill does not involve any appropriation at present.

Mr. MAGINNIS. There is no reasonable expectation that there ever will be any navigation on that part of the river. I have traveled in that country and know this to be the fact.

Mr. NELSON. There is no opposition on the part of any of the people of Minnesota to this measure.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would like to say to the gentleman from West Virginia I am personally acquainted with this whole region, and that it can not in any state of the case interfere with practical navigation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is intended for water-power, as I understand.

Mr. NELSON. And help the floating of logs down the Mississippi. There is to be left a free passage for logs in the dam.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. At the expense of those who build the dam, and not the Government?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. It does not involve a cent of expense to the Government.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, took the floor.

Mr. NELSON. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of no personal concern to me. But as affecting the right of Congress to appropriate money to improve the navigable rivers of the United States it is a matter of importance to me and every other gentleman.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. WASHBURN rose.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not yield.

Mr. WASHBURN. Only for a question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not just now. Mr. Speaker, I will read from the report attached to this bill, which I suppose is the most favorable which can be brought to bear in favor of this extraordinary measure:

* * * The Mississippi River at Brainerd is a part of the navigable waters of the United States, and its improvement, as a part of the third subdivision Mississippi transportation route, was reported upon in Senate document, first session Forty-third Congress.

There has been no steamboat navigation in the vicinity of Brainerd for a number of years. Should such navigation be resumed, a lock would become necessary were the proposed dam built. But so long as the river remains unobstructed by a dam the supply of water from the reservoirs above that point will preclude the necessity of any expensive river improvement by the United States.

That is signed by the Chief of Engineers, but I can not take up my time by reading further from this report. It was the duty of the gentleman asking this Congress to pass this bill to have this report read in his own time.

I have read the most favorable statement in favor of the passage of this bill, and to that I desire to make one reply. It is the intention of even the Democratic party, as it has been the practice of the Republican party and it was the purpose of the old Whig party, to make internal improvements throughout the United States where it could be done, and when there was money enough in the Treasury for that purpose. We have done a great deal for the Mississippi River above the Falls of Saint Anthony. This is above those falls. A member of Congress on this floor, for the benefit of a portion of his constituents, asks to put a mill-dam in there for the purpose of securing water-power. They propose in the end to sell that dam to the Government when they want to improve the navigation of that river. Above this we have the Mississippi River reservoir, nominally to supply the Mississippi River, when there is no water, but really to supply the mill-owners along that river.

Now, that this bill should come in here at this time in this way is preposterous in view of the strenuous efforts being made to improve the navigable rivers of the country. There are one hundred and forty-one rivers, which the Government engineers recommend to be improved, which have been ignored by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House. Now, if you are going to turn them over to the mill-owners on those rivers, how many shall we need to improve at all? That is the gist of this whole matter of the improvement of navigable rivers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of sustaining the objection to the present consideration of the bill will rise. [After a pause.] More than a sufficient number has risen, and the bill is not before the House.

SALE OF NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2047) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over 21 years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for three hundred and twenty acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than $3 per acre, payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum in cash at time of purchase; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for and to be paid to, said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In section 1 strike out "in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in cash at time of purchase."

And in section 2 strike out the following words:

"Together with such tracts as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I send up to the Clerk's desk, to be read and considered as pending at this time, an amendment which I propose to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to speak on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be reported for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, strike out "at not less than $3 per acre" and insert in lieu "the appraised value of said tracts as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.'"

Also strike out, in lines 3 and 4 of section 2, the words "per acre" and in lieu thereof insert the words "the appraised value."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, a bill relating to this subject has been reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, and the passage of the bill providing for the sale of these lands for the benefit of these Indians has been favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has been read by the Clerk, is not the bill the passage of which is recommended by the Secretary. That bill provides an arbitrary price for these lands of $3 per acre, and the amendment which I have sent up, and which has been read and considered as pending, provides that these lands shall be sold at their appraised value.

Now, then, I hope the House will consent to the consideration of this bill. It is my purpose to press the passage of the bill, not as reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, but as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. The House will remember that this is the same bill called up a few days ago by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] and to which I objected at the time, not, however, to the passage of a bill relating to the subject, but to the passage of the particular bill offered by him. I said at the time that in my judgment a bill on this subject should pass, but that a bill should not pass which fixed an arbitrary price for the lands. The amendment I sent up covers the defects in the bill, as I understand them, as reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I reserve the remainder of my time until the opposition is heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, as suggested by the gentleman from Louisiana, a bill on this subject ought certainly to be passed by the House. For a long time the necessity for legislation upon this subject has been recognized. There has been no difference of opinion upon that. It has been pressing for many years.

The Secretary of the Interior of to-day, and the Secretary of the Interior of the last administration, and every Commissioner of Indian Affairs to whom the subject was referred have recognized the necessity and the importance of just such legislation. The only difference of opinion that has ever existed upon the subject has been as to the price fixed for the lands; whether they should be sold at the price fixed in the bill or some other fixed price, or be sold at a price to be fixed by appraisement.

I think the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana should not prevail, for the simple reason that it would result in accomplishing nothing. In 1877 Congress gave the settlers on the land an opportunity to acquire title to the lands at the sum or price fixed by the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, but they would not take it because it was regarded as an excessive rate, and the result has been that they are in possession of the property and have been since 1859, cultivating the lands and improving their homes, but without title, while the Indians hold their certificates of allotment and get nothing. Now the Indians as well as settlers want something to be done, and are satisfied with the provisions of this bill. No Indian has been found who has objected to the price fixed in the bill. On the contrary, they sent an attorney here six years ago, proposing to take at the rate of $2.50 an acre for the land, and the bill was reported favorably at that time. We propose now a settlement on the basis of $3 an acre, and I have no doubt that that price is ample, and particularly in view of the fact that those persons who have acquired title or who may acquire title under the provisions of the bill complain that they should have the lands for $1.25 an acre, which is the price their neighbors paid for their lands, and is the price for which the balance of the reservation was sold.

The Tonawanda Indians in 1859 settled with the Government for all their interest in this same reservation on the basis of $1 per acre for the land, and as late as 1874 the Oneida Indians, being a part of the New York Indians, submitted a proposition agreeing to sell their interest in the land at the same price, and to settle with the Government upon the basis of $1 per acre; and yet we propose to pay the allottees under the provisions of this bill $3 per acre, which is entirely satisfactory to them, and from which they will get something for the lands that will be of benefit to them and the settlers will get security.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the value now of unoccupied and unimproved lands in that vicinity?

Mr. PERKINS. The value of unoccupied and unimproved lands will probably range from $10 to $20 per acre. But these lands have been occupied by settlers since 1859, and at that time they were not worth $1.25 per acre. In 1858 Mr. Thompson, then Secretary of the Interior, declared this great reservation of 1,824,000 acres to be open to settlement, because the Indians had not gone there. In consequence, settlers went in and took possession. Some time afterward several of the New York Indians claimed that they had entered the reservation in time, and having complied with the law were entitled to an allotment of the lands. A commission was accordingly sent out by the Department to investigate and report upon the claim of these Indians.

This commission reported in favor of thirty-two of the Indians, and such thirty-two were allowed to select their allotments from any part of this whole reservation; and the commission further report that in almost every case they selected lands already occupied by settlers under the order of the Secretary of the Interior declaring them subject to settlement; and as a consequence these parties so dispossessed, or, in other words, having their homes given to the Indians, have never been able to obtain title. That is the condition and has been for many years.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I had reference to the value of unimproved and unoccupied lands in that vicinity.

Mr. PERKINS. It is about as I have stated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana has one minute remaining.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, there can be no question but that this amendment should be adopted. In 1873 Congress passed a bill directing that a commission should be appointed and that this commission should appraise the lands. That commission executed the duty assigned to them, and I hold in my hand a report of the commission. That commission made their report and appraised this land at from $3.75 an acre up as high as $10 an acre.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No; I have but a moment. I state that the average price as fixed ten years ago is $6 an acre, as shown by the report of this commission; and this bill which is now before us proposes arbitrarily to fix the price at $3 per acre. The bill ought to be considered and amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. RYAN. That amendment ought not to be adopted. It is unjust to the settlers who have made their homes there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BENNETT. I object. But if the amendment suggested is accepted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] I shall withdraw the objection, if not I shall insist on it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment can be submitted to the vote of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those objecting to the present consideration of the bill will rise.

More than the requisite number objected.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ERIE, PA.

Mr. BRAINERD. I call up for consideration from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the first section of the act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, amended by substituting the words "three hundred thousand dollars" in place of the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars;" so that the said first section of said act, as amended, shall read as follows: "Shall not exceed the cost of $300,000."

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended and used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the prosecution of the work of construction and furnishing materials therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard in support of the bill?

Mr. BRAINERD. I will reserve my time for the present.

Mr. CURTIN. I suggest that the report be read.

Mr. BRAINERD. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] calls for the reading of the report.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then it will be read in the time allowed in support of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRAINERD] demand the reading of the report?

Mr. BRAINERD. I do not demand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be taken out of the gentleman's time unless he demands it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRAINERD] will not insist on the passage of a bill doubling the amount originally fixed as the limit of cost of this building without some cause being shown either by a statement or a reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize any gentleman who wants to control the five minutes in opposition to the bill. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania call for the reading of the report? It will come out of his time if he wants it read.

Mr. BRAINERD. For the information of the House I desire the report shall be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before he had completed the reading,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The time allowed for debate in favor of the bill has expired.

The report (by Mr. BRAINERD) is in full as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1415) for a public building at Erie, Pa., submit the following report:

Erie is a rapidly growing city of nearly 30,000 inhabitants. It is situated on the south shore of Lake Erie. It has the only harbor of refuge on the south shore of Lake Erie, and the only lake harbor in the State. There are four main lines of railroad running to and through the city, thus making it a place of large and increasing commercial importance. The post-office does a large business, and is a distributing office for an extensive section of country, and has no place for the transaction of business except such as can be rented.

The collectors of customs and internal revenue hold their offices at present in the old Government building, and are imperfectly provided for. They need much better accommodations. The United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Pennsylvania are held here and hold sessions twice a year when able to secure a place in the county court-house for that purpose. The want of a proper building in which to hold the court, and provide for the accommodation of its offices, and the keeping of its records has long been felt and has impeded the progress of the public business to the annoyance of the courts and to the great detriment of suitors and the public.

At the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was passed authorizing the purchase of suitable grounds and the construction of a building at Erie.

In 1883 a site was purchased by the Government fronting on the public park. The site is a very desirable one, and the best that could be obtained. This was purchased at the sum of $36,000. This was a very reasonable price. The property is said to be worth much more. The bill limited the cost of the building and grounds to the sum of $150,000. The sum of $100,000 was appropriated for immediate use. The Government has thus far expended, in the purchase of grounds and expenses, $36,180. This leaves $63,820 of the appropriation unexpended, and leaves the sum of $113,820 with which to construct the building. The balance, authorized to be expended by the act of 1882, is not sufficient, in our opinion, to construct such a building as the public interests demand. The necessities seem to require a large and well-constructed building at this place.

The construction of the building has not yet been commenced for the reason of the inadequacy of the amount authorized to be expended in its construction.

Mr. Hill, the late Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, in his report, says:

"It would seem in the interest of economy to construct a building that will accommodate all the customs, post-offices, and court officers in Erie, but the balance of the amount fixed by Congress, as a limit, will be insufficient for a building large enough for this purpose."

The present Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, M. E. Bell, in answer to our inquiry as to his opinion as to the amount a building to meet the requirements in this case would cost, including the cost of the site, says:

"It would seem to be advisable to have a building of sufficient capacity to accommodate all the Government officials, and, in my judgment, the amount specified in the bill H. R. 1415, namely, $300,000, will be necessary for the construction of such a building."

The opinions of the architects are entitled to weight.

A public building having been authorized, and considerable money already expended, as a matter of economy such a building should be constructed as will meet all the requirements of the case, and provide for the post-office, custom-house, internal-revenue office, and the United States courts. The amount authorized to be expended is not sufficient for this purpose.

Under the facts, your committee recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill what amount—if it is in the report I did not hear it—what amount has been paid for the site?

Mr. BRAINERD. Thirty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Leaving $114,000 for the building?

Mr. BRAINERD. That is what is left.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There is, I understand, a United States court at Erie?

Mr. BRAINERD. Yes, sir; that is the place where regular sessions of the circuit and district courts for the western district of Pennsylvania are held twice a year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This bill proposes an addition of $150,000 to the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost. That will make how much for the building alone?

Mr. BRAINERD. The difference between the cost of the site and expenses, $36,180 and $300,000; being about $263,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has the plan been approved?

Mr. BRAINERD. There has been a plan made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And that plan involves how much?

Mr. BRAINERD. Only $150,000 as originally made; and then they stopped on account of the inadequacy of the appropriation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accept the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. I think he will accept it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the House for consideration, but the amendment can be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Add to the first section the following:

"And no plan shall be approved which will involve an expenditure for site and building greater than the amount hereby appropriated.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not want a plan approved that will involve any more than the amount in the bill.

Mr. BRAINERD. The gentleman's amendment says "greater than the amount hereby appropriated." That should be changed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I mean the amount fixed by your bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point that the amendment is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is not at this time before the House for consideration. The bill is not yet before the House.

Mr. BRAINERD. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he makes his amendment to apply to the amount fixed as the limit of cost I will not object to it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will change the language of the amendment so that it will read "greater than the amount hereby fixed as the limit of cost."

Mr. BRAINERD. In that form I accept the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have nothing further to say than this, that if the bill comes before the House I will propose to reduce the amount of increase from $150,000 to $100,000; which will still leave over $200,000 for the building itself.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania willing to accept an amendment of that kind?

Mr. BRAINERD. I think I could not accept an amendment of that kind, because I am informed $300,000 is as small an amount as a proper building can be erected for.

Mr. McMILLIN. It appears to me no sufficient reason is given in the report for the expenditure of another $150,000 on this public building. In general terms we have a description of the business transacted; but there are no figures given that I was able to hear which show the necessity for this increase.

Mr. BRAINERD. About $200,000 of revenue are collected there every year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. CURTIN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will be accepted as a part of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the agreement?

Mr. BRAINERD. That the limit shall be $250,000 instead of $300,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to the appropriation of $250,000 for this building.

Mr. BRAINERD. By the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio the limit of cost will be $100,000 additional to the present limit.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Objections being called for, the consideration of the bill was objected to by nine members; not the requisite number.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is before the House, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], which the Clerk will read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"And no plans shall be approved which will involve an expenditure for site and building complete greater than the amount hereby fixed as the limit of cost."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, reducing the amount appropriated by the bill from $300,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering this bill to the third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYBURY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NIOBRARA VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hour has about expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inform the gentleman that there are three minutes left.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7081) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 17 of the act of July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," be, and is hereby, amended by adding the following:

That such railroad company, now organized or that may hereafter be organized under State or Territorial laws, as the President of the United States, by its request, may designate or approve for that purpose, shall construct and operate a line of railroad and telegraph from Sioux City, Iowa, westwardly, via the Niobrara Valley, to such point on the Union Pacific Railroad west of the one hundredth meridian as such company may select, not west of Granger, in the Territory of Wyoming, and on the same terms and conditions and with the same rights as are provided in this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, for the construction of the said Union Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line and branches: Provided, That said company shall receive neither bonds nor lands, as provided in said acts: And provided further, That said company shall not be burdened by any of the obligations imposed upon the said Union Pacific Railway Company by reason of the lands and bonds given to that company, nor entitled to any special benefits conferred by said act growing out of such obligations, but shall be entitled to all benefits conferred by section 15 of the said act approved July 2, 1864, amendatory of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the said company and the said Union Pacific Railway Company shall be regarded as a continuous line; and each company shall receive from and deliver to each other freight, express matter, passengers, cars, and all traffic, and each company shall charge and receive compensation therefor pro rata according to distance: And provided further, That said road shall carry the mails at such prices as Congress may by law provide, and until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation: And provided further, That said road shall be completed within five years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter further to alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned; and this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal as, in the opinion of Congress, justice or the public welfare may require. And nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in favor of the United States.

SEC. 3. That each and every of the provisions in this act contained shall severally and respectively be deemed, taken, and held as in alteration and amendment of said act of 1862 and of said act of 1864, respectively, and of both said acts.

Before the reading was concluded,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour provided for by the special rule of the House has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to ask the Chair whether the consideration of this bill will be continued to-morrow in the special hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will go over as unfinished business, and will be the first business in this hour to-morrow.

MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and send up to the Chair the credentials of Mr. Nathan F. Dixon, a member-elect from the State of Rhode Island. He is now present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

By His Excellency AUGUSTUS O. BOURN, governor, captain-general, and commander-in-Chief of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations:

Be it known that Nathan F. Dixon, of Westerly, in the State aforesaid, qualified according to the Constitution of the United States for a Representative in Congress thereof, was, by the people of the second district of said State having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature thereof, on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1885, regularly elected a Representative from said State in the Forty-eighth Congress of the United States, in accordance with the laws of said State, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of JONATHAN CHACE, who resigned said office on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1885.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of said State to be affixed, at Providence, this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1885, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninth.

[SEAL.] AUGUSTUS O. BOURN.

By the governor:

JOSHUA M. ADDEMAN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. DIXON appeared at the bar of the House, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER and others called for the regular order.

JOHN G. THOMPSON.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back a bill (H. R. 8184) to pay the judgment rendered by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the case of Hallet Kilbourn against John G. Thompson, late Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not a privileged report.

A MEMBER. Yes; it is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The information received by the Chair from the Clerk's desk is that, under the order of the House, this matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. But subject to the point that if it makes any appropriation it must go to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; subject to the point that if it makes an appropriation that will carry it to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. KEIFER. Then if it is a privileged report it carries with it the right of consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the rule of the House can be avoided which requires all bills which make appropriations to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

A MEMBER. Does the Speaker overrule the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point of order has not been raised.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It has been made, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] was that this was not a privileged report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made the point of order that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] make that point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I state the fact, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] makes it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has not been read. The gentleman can not make the point of order at this time.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8184) to pay the judgment rendered by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the case of Hallet Kilbourn against John G. Thompson, late Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and to pay other expenses attending upon the trial of said case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to press the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill; I can not give way for any other matter. Therefore I make the point of order that this bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX, of New York. Why not pass it now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] insist on his point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do. The gentleman can withdraw the bill and present it hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moves to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move that at the close of to-day's session the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. If the motion be adopted I will at five minutes before 12 o'clock move that the House adjourn. My object, if the House will permit me to state it, is in those two hours to take up the river and harbor bill, consider it, and if possible pass it.

Mr. RANDALL. That part of the gentleman's proposition relating to the river and harbor bill requires unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Still it is competent for the House to determine by a majority vote whether it will take a recess and to fix the hour to which the recess shall be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House adopts this proposition it does not commit the House to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It amounts to this, that the river and harbor bill can be taken up at that time if the House so desires.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] expects to co-operate with the Committee on Appropriations in the consideration of regular appropriation bills after 12 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is just the question I intended to ask.

Mr. WILLIS. We hope in four hours to pass the river and harbor bill. I propose to move to limit debate on the whole appropriating section to one hour and a half, and to give one hour to the opponents of the bill and thirty minutes to its friends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that when the House finishes its business to-day it will take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 128, noes 16.

Mr. BRUMM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted tellers are ordered, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BRUMM.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 159, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now renew my motion that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to make a privileged motion. I desire to call up House bill 5479 from the Speaker's table, for the purpose of concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a point of order. Pending the motion I have submitted, is it in order to make a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a privileged report, but a privileged motion, with a view of concurring in amendments of the Senate to a House bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This does not come from a conference committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is upon a privileged subject. The Clerk will report for the information of the gentleman the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 10, 1885.

Resolved, That this bill pass with amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection to the measure which my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] wishes to bring up; but my point of order is that this privileged question, if it be such, can not take me off the floor on my motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt that the matter which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] seeks to bring up is privileged; but if the gentleman from Illinois on the right [Mr. TOWNSHEND] insists on his occupancy of the floor and protests against the introduction of this motion, the Chair must sustain the point.

Mr. PAYSON. May I have the attention of my colleague for a moment? We can concur in these amendments while the gentleman is making his point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection if it can be done in a moment.

Mr. PAYSON. It can. There will be no objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] insist on his point?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order to obtain final disposition of the Post-Office appropriation bill I must insist. I have no objection at all to the measure which my colleague desires to bring up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve the point of order against that amendment until the gentleman has made his explanation.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letter-carriers may be employed for the free delivery of mail matter as frequently as the public convenience may require at every place containing a population of not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits: Provided, The gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year from the post-office or post-offices in such place shall have aggregated at least $10,000. Letter-carriers may also be employed at the principal or most central post-office of towns or places within short distances of one another: Provided, Such towns or places contain in the aggregate a population not less than $10,000 and the gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year from the several offices aggregated not less than $10,000.

All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It has already been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. BLOUNT. Then let there be a decision.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. If the gentleman will withhold his point of order for the present it is all I ask.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to be illiberal, but we have little time to spare. However, as the gentleman from Illinois does not press the point, I will not do so.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly well aware of the fact that if the point of order made by the gentleman is insisted upon this amendment can not be considered, for it does "change existing law." The very purpose of the amendment is to change existing law, and I have offered it in pursuance of the recommendation of the Post-Office Department, and also in accordance with the unanimous action taken by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of this House in favor of the extension of the free-delivery system to places having 10,000 inhabitants, or gross revenues for the preceding fiscal year of over $10,000. I give below an extract from the report of the Postmaster-General for the past fiscal year (page 67) touching this matter, prefacing it with extracts from the same report in reference to the growth and present condition of the service, adding a reference to the working of the system in England and other countries:

THE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM,

The number of free-delivery offices at the close of the year was 159, an increase of 5, namely: Chattanooga, Tenn., Los Angeles, Cal., Montgomery, Ala., Ottumwa, Iowa, and Scranton, Pa.; and the number of carriers 3,890, an increase of 210.

The regular appropriation for this service was $3,500,000, to which was added a special appropriation of $14,653.40 to prevent an anticipated deficiency, making a total of $3,514,653.40. The entire cost of the service was $3,504,206.52, leaving an unexpended balance of $10,446.88. The increase of appropriation over that of the preceding year was $314,653.40, and the increase of expenditure $330,870.01. This increased expenditure was due to the extension of the service to additional cities, to the number of carriers added to the force at the old offices, and to the increased pay of carriers required by act of August 2, 1882, which provides for the increase of the salary of each carrier in cities having over 75,000 inhabitants by $200 each annually, till the maximum ($1,000) is reached, and in cities having a smaller population by $250 each annually till the maximum ($850) is reached.

POSTAGE ON LOCAL MATTER.

The total postage on local matter at the several offices amounted to $4,777,484.87, an increase over that of the preceding year of $417,745.65, and over the entire cost of the service of $1,273,278.35, an increase of 9.95 per cent in postage on local matter and 36.35 over the cost of the service. The average cost per piece in handling matter was 2.3 mills, a decrease of one-tenth mill as compared with last year. The average cost per carrier, based on the total cost of the service less the amount paid post-office inspectors, was $898.78, an increase of $38.83 over that of last year. This increase was owing to the fact that a large number of carriers reached the maximum salary.

The number of mail letters delivered during the year was 402,577,395, an increase of 17.70 per cent. over that of the preceding year; mail postal cards delivered was 97,421,725, an increase of 13.10 per cent.; local letters delivered 121,853,932, an increase of 16.68 per cent.; local postal cards delivered 69,230,704, an increase of 14.48 per cent.; registered letters delivered 3,093,961, an increase of 9.32 per cent.; newspapers delivered 231,645,185, an increase of 13.79 per cent.

The number of letters collected was 414,198,891, an increase over that of last year of 19.95 per cent.; postal cards collected 130,057,314, an increase of 12.98 per cent.; newspapers collected 70,475,010, an increase of 8.84 per cent.

The whole number of pieces handled—delivered and collected—was 1,540,554,117, an increase of 16.30 per cent., and the average number handled by each carrier was 396,029, an increase of 10.02 per cent.

Additional information concerning the operations of the free-delivery service will be found in the tabular statement marked E, appended to this report.

Average result of free-delivery service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884.

†Decrease.

Long experience has shown that this system of delivery is more acceptable to the people than the old mode of office delivery; that it is more accurate and thorough in the delivery of letters; that it reduces the number of dead letters; that it diverts to the post-office many letters formerly delivered by private expresses and private messengers; that it stimulates mail and local correspondence, and increases the postage on local matter; that it saves time and money to the people and fruitless calls at the post-office, and yields a larger surplus of postage on local matter alone above its cost, notwithstanding this class of matter for which it gets credit is only about 25 per cent. of the matter handled by carriers. In view of these facts, I do not hesitate to advise that the law governing the establishment of this system be so changed as to authorize its extension to places of 10,000 inhabitants, provided the postal revenue for the preceding fiscal year at such places amounted to $10,000; also that in case of several post-offices in the same city or place the revenues from all the offices may be aggregated and taken as a standard entitling such place to this system, provided it has the required population.

I would also call attention to a class of towns in the more densely settled portions of the country within short distances of one another, each with its separate post-office, which can not be reached as the law now stands, having in the aggregate the required population and revenue, but none of which singly reaches the requirements of the law, namely, 20,000 population within its corporate limits or $20,000 postal revenue.

The law should, in my judgment, be so changed as to allow the aggregation of the population and postal revenues of these towns, and when they meet the requirements of population and revenue this system should be extended. This could be easily done by establishing a service at the most important and central office and discontinuing the others, or substituting branches of the central office, as may be found on investigation to be most expedient. The result would be a diminution in the number of offices, and a more intelligent, economical, and satisfactory service.

In this connection, and as showing the extent to which the delivery of mail by carrier has been carried in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, I quote from a letter of July 19, 1883, from the general post-office, London, as follows:

"There is certainly no village, and but few hamlets, in the United Kingdom without a delivery of letters, &c., from house to house, and that, although in certain thinly inhabited districts the letters are not delivered every day, they are still delivered at least twice or more, usually three times, a week. Indeed, with but rare exceptions, letters are delivered even in rural districts on six days of the week, if not seven. * * * As a rule, all towns and most of the considerable villages have two deliveries of letters from house to house every week day. * * * Of 880 head post-offices about 350 have two deliveries in the course of the day, 300 have three deliveries, 115 have four, 17 have five, 6 have six, and 1 (Liverpool) has seven daily deliveries. * * * In the London postal district, which comprises an area of about 216 square miles, the number of deliveries on week days ranges from twelve in the central or 'town' district to three in a few of the outer suburban districts where the population is comparatively sparse."

The following table, compiled from the same correspondence, will show the extent to which the free delivery of letters, &c., by carriers has superseded the delivery through post-office boxes in several of the principal cities of the United Kingdom:

City.	Number of post-office boxes rented.	Number of letters, &c., delivered through boxes weekly.	Total number of letters delivered weekly.	Percentage of letters delivered to box-holders.	Estimated population within city delivery.
Birmingham	162	65,500	492,500	13.3	408,000
Dublin	77	53,000	442,300	11.9	316,500
Edinburgh	56	27,600	569,900	4.8	286,400
Glasgow	178	79,400	758,000	10.5	704,400
Liverpool	206	59,000	582,600	6.9	681,900
Manchester	548	186,000	875,500	21.2	597,700
Sheffield	176	38,500	205,300	18.7	284,400
London, E. C. district	190	193,000	2,710,300	7.1	.....

The present law fixes the limitation at 20,000 inhabitants or gross postal revenues of $20,000 annually. There are now one hundred and seventy-seven free-delivery offices in the United States supplying 12,000,000 of people directly, not to say anything of the convenience enjoyed by the 40,000,000 of people who mail letters to free-delivery offices.

So far as the question of population is concerned the 20,000 limit was exhausted long ago. So far as the gross revenues are concerned those places now entitled to that privilege under the present law, measured by $20,000 gross receipts, number only nine. During the past year eighteen new free-delivery offices have been established. As the law now stands it will be absolutely impossible to extend that system except to these nine places. These places are Ann Arbor, Mich.; Battle Creek, Mich.; Bradford, Pa.; Fargo, Dak.; Ithaca, N. Y.; Lawrence, Kans.; Mahanoy City, Pa.; Middletown, Conn.; and Washington, N. J. These are the only places which can be supplied under the existing law. The amendment I offer would extend this privilege to one hundred and seventy new points, containing a population of 10,000 inhabitants each or having gross receipts during the past year of $10,000.

I take it for granted that this Congress is not going to stop the free-delivery system where it is, or when these nine places are supplied. One of the points named above, according to the last census, has a population of 9,000 and the smallest is 2,693. If the free-delivery system is not to come to an end when that list is taken care of, then the present list must be amended and the law must be amended, or when that limit is reached the free-delivery system must stop.

It has been shown in this debate that on an outlay of four millions of dollars there was a profit to the Government in the free-delivery system of a million and a quarter of dollars during the past year. It is true that only twelve cities out of one hundred and seventy-seven are more than self-sustaining, but there is not one of these twelve cities, not one inhabitant in one of these twelve cities, who objects to the free-delivery system being extended to the other one hundred and sixty-five.

It has come to be accepted as a mutual benefit to all places which enjoy its privileges, and an inestimable convenience to every man, woman, and child who can read and write or appreciate a picture.

In that connection it is also true there are only ten States in the Union where the post-office system is self-sustaining, while in twenty-eight States it is not; but there is not one of those ten States which objects to the extension of the system to other States. If there were, where would the system go?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I ask by unanimous consent to print this list of post-offices that would come under the proposed amendment as well as other documents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. The list is as follows:

THE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

This system was in operation during the year at one hundred and fifty-four offices (including forty-two newly established ones), and employed in the aggregate 3,680 carriers.

The total appropriation for this service was $3,200,000, including a special appropriation of $200,000 to carry out the provisions of the act of August 2, 1882, an increase of $575,000 over that of the preceding year. The total cost of the service was $3,173,336.51, leaving an unexpended balance of $26,663.49. The increase of cost over the preceding year was $550,073.77. This was owing to the extension of the service to forty-two additional cities in different sections of the country, employing in the aggregate two hundred and twenty-two carriers, to the appointment of three hundred and forty-three additional carriers in the older free-delivery cities, to the increased pay of auxiliary carriers from $400 to $600, and to the promotion of carriers from the lower to the next higher grade at the expiration of one year's service, as required by the act of August 2, 1882.

POSTAGE ON LOCAL MATTER.

The postage on local matter at the various offices amounted to $4,195,230.52, an increase over the preceding year of $378,654.43, and over the total cost of the service of $1,021,894.01. This increase in postage on local matter was 9.92 per cent., while the increase in the cost of the service was 20.96 per cent., mainly attributable to the requirements of the act of August 2, 1882. The average cost per piece for handling matter was 2.4 mills, an increase of one-tenth mill as compared with last year. The average cost per carrier, including incidental expenses, was $859.95, an increase of $24.20 over the preceding year.

The number of mail letters delivered during the fiscal year was 342,913,750, an increase of 14.66 per cent. over the preceding year; mail postal cards delivered, 86,133,228, an increase of 20.49 per cent.; local letters, 104,437,146, an increase of 16.03 per cent.; local postal cards, 60,472,193, an increase of 18.75 per cent.; registered letters delivered, 2,830,208, an increase of 10.86 per cent.; newspapers delivered, 203,568,005, an increase of 26.60 per cent.

The number of letters collected was 345,317,803, an increase over last year of 4.90 per cent.; postal cards collected, 115,113,531, an increase of 15.78 per cent.; newspapers collected, 64,751,842, an increase of 4.90 per cent. The whole number of pieces handled during the year was 1,324,637,701, an increase over last year of 15.83 per cent., and the average number handled by each carrier was 359,955, a decrease of 1.99 per cent.

REVIEW OF THE SERVICE.

The free-delivery service was inaugurated July 1, 1863. A summary of its business during the period which has since elapsed may therefore not be inappropriate, though in its earlier years its statistics were not as complete as they are at present.

* The apparent reduction in excess of postage on local matter for the last year is accounted for by the increased expenditure ($3,173,336.51) required by the act of August 2, 1882.

REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

In 1864-'65 the cost per letter for delivery at nine of the principal cities was 1.1 cents each, as against 2.4 mills for the delivery and collection of each piece of mail matter in one hundred and fifty-four cities in 1883-'83, a reduction of 8.6 mills per piece. The report of the superintendent of free delivery contains other interesting information in regard to the working of the system.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the point of order against the gentleman's amendment and submit it without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order for the reason stated by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel, $490,000. That hereafter the Postmaster-General may lease premises for use for post-offices of the first and second classes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly; but no lease shall be made for a term exceeding five years; and whenever any building or part of a building under lease becomes unfit for use as a post-office, no rent shall be paid until the same shall be put in a satisfactory condition by the owner thereof for occupation as a post-office, or the lease may be canceled, at the option of the Postmaster-General; and a lease shall cease and terminate whenever a post-office can be moved into a Government building.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in line 44, after the word "second," the words "and third;" so that it will read:

That hereafter the Postmaster-General may lease premises for use for post-offices of the first and second and third classes, &c.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order upon that amendment that it changes existing law without retrenching expenditures.

Mr. ANDERSON. But it might frequently retrench expenditures. Leases can be made for long periods at less rates than for short ones.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no law allowing leases to be made for third-class post-offices. There is no allowance made for them.

Mr. ANDERSON. But in the very nature of things it is evident that a saving could be effected in many instances where the privilege was given to make a lease for a long period.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let it be voted upon by the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it any more subject to the point of order than the whole paragraph which has just been read and which changes existing law? If that paragraph is to be acted upon by the House any amendment that is germane to that must be in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman of course can make the point of order upon it if he chooses

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not.

Mr. ANDERSON. Nor do I.

Mr. HISCOCK. But when a provision is once before the House—when a clause or paragraph of this character is pending in a bill—it is subject to amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Provided the amendment does not change existing law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Whether it does or does not is not a question that enters into consideration. If it be a subject over which the committee has jurisdiction the amendment to that subject is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion——

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the argument of the gentleman from New York to be that whenever you get in one proposition that changes existing law you may put in just as many as you please.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, that is not the argument; but when you once get before the committee a subject over which the committee has jurisdiction, then you can perfect it by amendment, and the only question with reference to the amendment is whether or not it is germane to the subject-matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Allow the rule to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let us have a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken. Although the clause or section in question may itself have been subject to the point of order, still no point of order was made upon it; and the Chair understands that while the clause does contain some new legislation in it, yet it does not affect the question as to the authority to lease buildings for post-offices of the third class. That general law not being affected by the clause in question, the amendment does change existing law in that respect and authorizes payment therefor. Therefore to that extent it changes existing law and does increase expenditures, and is clearly subject to the point of order, which is sustained.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then I move an amendment to include the third-class offices, where the provision for their lease will reduce expenditures in the amount of rent paid.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the amendment be reported from the desk. I do not believe it is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print some remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk proceed to read as follows:

For office furniture——

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill, before we pass from this section, to the language in the forty-fifth and forty-sixth lines:

And no lease shall be made for a term exceeding five years.

That, I think, should be amended to read:

But a lease may be made for a term not exceeding five years.

As it now stands it is a sort of negative way of giving authority. Under the law as it stands to-day, as I understand it, leases can not be made for more than a year. If you propose to extend this period, why not extend it in terms and not leave it a matter of dispute?

Mr. RYAN. I think that had better be done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move that the paragraph be so amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 45 and 46, the words "and no lease shall be made for a term exceeding five years" and insert "but a lease may be made for a term not exceeding five years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to inserting an amendment that will require the Postmaster-General upon the failure of the Government to comply with its part of a contract for the lease of a post-office building to surrender the lease to the party making it.

I have a constituent of my own who leased a building for post-office purposes under a contract that he should be paid quarterly for the use of it. He complied with every condition of the lease upon his part, and the Government held that lease for over a year before it ever paid him a cent, and refused to surrender the premises upon demand, notwithstanding the fact that the Government itself, or the Postmaster-General, after having made the contract in writing to pay quarterly, had not done so, or complied in any way with its part of the contract.

Now, I should like to know if there is any objection to inserting in the law a requirement on the part of the Postmaster-General where the Government fails to comply with its part of the contract to surrender the lease to the lessor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I see no necessity for the amendment the gentleman from Alabama suggests, and I certainly object to it. The matter under this bill is left entirely discretionary with the Postmaster-General, and I have no doubt there will be judicious action on his part.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. What I object to is its being left discretionary with the Postmaster-General. I will put the question to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, whether such an amendment ought not to be made; whether the Government ought not to be required, when it fails to pay according to the contract, to surrender the lease?

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HISCOCK. For the purpose of having the provision read properly, in view of the amendment I suggested and which was accepted, I now ask that the semicolon after the word "quarterly," in line 45, be stricken out, that the words "but no lease shall be made" shall also be stricken out, and that after the word "term" the word "not" be inserted. With these changes the sentence beginning at line 43 will read properly and smoothly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no objection to these changes being made.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the verbal amendments suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following paragraph.

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General: For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $15,265,000; and if any railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails, when required by the Post-Office Department, upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount provided by law.

Mr. ROWELL. I make the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The whole proposition has not yet been read through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read one paragraph.

Mr. ROWELL. I wish to have the opportunity of making the point of order on each paragraph relating to this whole subject down to line 153.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read only to line 66. It has not yet been read to line 153.

Mr. ROWELL. I want to make the point of order now, this matter being divided into sections and paragraphs, so that the point shall cover each of the paragraphs. I do not wish to lose the opportunity of making the point of order on each of the paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will treat the whole subject as one paragraph. The various clauses down to line 153 seem all to relate to the same subject. It seems to be one matter.

Mr. CANNON. I want to be heard on that. I do not think the first paragraph necessarily stands with the second. But if it be understood that no rights are waived, of course there is no objection to reading all the paragraphs relating to the whole subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman has reserved all points of order on the provisions of the bill down to line 153. The Chair directs the Clerk to read down to that point.

Mr. CLARDY. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after line 66.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a point of order. Until the entire proposition is read through I insist that no amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is offered to come in at the end of line 66. The Chair is of opinion it is in order now if the gentleman from Missouri insists upon it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to withhold his amendment until I can make a request for unanimous consent that all points of order may be reserved on all the paragraphs relating to mail compensation until they are read through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that all points of order on those paragraphs have already been reserved.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not understand that they could be reserved in that way unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is understood the reservation of points of order covers the whole subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 66:

"The Postmaster-General is authorized to pay out of appropriations for transportation on railroad routes for special railroad service between the Union depot in East Saint Louis, Ill., and the Union depot in Saint Louis, Mo., a sum not exceeding the lowest rate which private individuals, express companies, or others may pay for transportation between said points, but not to exceed for any fiscal year the sum of $25,000, including allowance for depot room and transfer service at each terminal."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that that is now the law, and it is not affected by this bill. In the last Post-Office appropriation act we used language which makes this a permanent law and renders it unnecessary to have it re-enacted. That is the law to-day, and will remain the law until repealed; and this present bill does not affect it in any way.

Mr. CLARDY. That was my own opinion. But this is the identical provision contained in the two bills of the last Congress as well as in the bill of the first session of this Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the gentleman read the language in the last Post-Office appropriation act?

Mr. CLARDY. I have read it, and it occurred to me it was not necessary this amendment should be offered. I applied, however, to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General; and in answer to my question he states:

The appropriation should be made for the Saint Louis bridge the same as heretofore.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That, perhaps, is true, that the appropriation should be made as heretofore. But the appropriation is embraced in the aggregate amount of $15,265,000. It will be paid out of the aggregate appropriation for this service. My friend from Missouri will see the telegram does not apply to the question of the necessity for this amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. If that is the construction the committee place upon it, and if that is the reason the provision is omitted, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the remaining paragraphs relating to the subject of inland mail transportation.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mails on railroad routes upon the condition and at the rates hereinafter mentioned, and which shall take effect July 1, 1885:

First. That the mails shall be carried upon any train at the request of the Postmaster-General; and railroad companies shall provide necessary depot-rooms, with heat and light for the same, shall receive the mails from and deliver the mails to the Post-Office Department at depots, shall put the mails into and out of the cars, shall transfer the mails between trains at depots, and shall transport the superintendent and assistant superintendents of the railway mail service and post-office inspectors upon the exhibition of their credentials, and railway postal clerks over the lines upon which they may be assigned to duty.

Second. That the compensation for carrying closed mails in baggage-cars and for railway post-office service, the minimum car width in every case being hereby fixed at eight feet and six inches (inside measurement), or its equivalent in floor-space, shall not exceed the following rates, namely: For closed mails, 5 mills per linear foot of space (inside measurement) per mile run; and for two hundred pounds of mail or less the equivalent of six linear inches shall be required, for five hundred pounds one foot, and for each additional five hundred pounds one foot. For railway post-office service, at a rate of speed of twenty or less miles per hour from terminus to terminus, 5 mills per linear foot of space (inside measurement) per mile run; and for each additional two miles per hour to and including thirty miles per hour one-tenth of a mill, and for each additional mile per hour one-tenth of a mill. And the adjustment of space by linear feet for railway post-office service shall be as follows: For a daily average of from twenty-five to five hundred pounds, not to exceed thirteen feet; from five hundred to 1,000 pounds, not to exceed fifteen feet; from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds, not to exceed twenty-five feet; from 2,000 to 4,000 pounds, not to exceed forty feet; from 4,000 to 5,000 pounds, not to exceed forty-five feet; for 6,000 pounds, fifty feet; 8,000 pounds, sixty feet; the weight to be ascertained by a weighing of not less than twenty-eight consecutive days; and in all railway post-offices the load shall not exceed double the greatest weight for the respective lengths as herein provided; and for any gross weight, if carried on two or more trains daily, the space may be subdivided upon the basis of amounts of space for lower weights as the nature of the service may require; and no additional space shall be required or paid for unless found to be necessary: Provided, That the pay for the transportation of mails upon any railroad route for six round trips per week shall not be less than $35 per mile per annum; and at any post-office contiguous to a railroad route, and where trains do not make regular stops, the Postmaster-General may require that the mails shall be exchanged directly with the railway post-office at the nearest available point upon the track; and in the case of all special mail-trains no more time shall be consumed at terminal points in transferring mails between different lines of railroads at such terminal points than is absolutely necessary for such purpose, and there shall be no delay in departure of any special mail-train after receiving the mail from the connecting line than is absolutely necessary; and at post-offices located not more than one-fourth of a mile from railroad stations railroad companies shall also provide for carrying the mails as often as may be necessary between such post-offices and railroad stations; but the Postmaster-General may provide mail-messenger or contract service at terminals: Provided further, That railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by land grants made by Congress, on the condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress should by law direct, and the railroad companies incorporated under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, shall hereafter receive for the transportation of the mails over their respective railroads only 80 per cent. of the compensation authorized by this act; and the said act approved July 1, 1862, and all acts amendatory thereof, are hereby amended to conform to the foregoing provisions; but the right of the United States to further amend said act, or any act amendatory thereof, is expressly reserved. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before further action is taken I desire to have action on some amendments suggested by the committee in order to perfect the text of the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that the point of order ought to be made before the amendments are acted on.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not until we have perfected the text of the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in charge of the bill desires to move some amendments to the text before the point of order is entertained by the Chair. That can only be done by unanimous consent; from the fact that, pending the point of order, the section is not before the committee for amendment. But it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. ROWELL. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the question of order on these two paragraphs.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to understand who has made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that any point of order has yet been made. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] now states that he desires to make a point of order on these two paragraphs, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] stated a while ago that he thought the point of order ought to be made, but did not state what the point was.

Mr. ROWELL. I said that I reserved the point of order, and I rise now to state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to say that he desired to reserve the point of order on the parts of the bill that had not been read, but of course the gentleman did not in that way obtain any right to the floor.

Mr. ROWELL. I understood the Chair to say that I would be recognized for that purpose when the point of order could be raised, and I desire now to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to reserve all points of order on that portion of bill, but it was not then before the committee, and the point of order could not be entertained until the paragraph had been read. The Chair did not know what point of order the gentleman desired to make.

Mr. ROWELL. Then I misunderstood the Chair. I now claim the right to make the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on these two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] rises to make a point of order which he will state; after which the Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to call attention to a provision contained in Rule XXI——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please make his point of order, and argue it afterward. The Chair does not yet understand what the point is.

Mr. BLOUNT. If I had not been interrupted the Chair would have understood it, because I was presenting the point of order. My point is that this provision changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures, and that the change is proposed to be made upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the point of order apply to all these clauses?

Mr. BLOUNT. It applies to all that relates to changing the mode of paying the railroads for the transportation of the mails—the whole scheme. I will read a part of clause 3 of Rule XXI:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that gentlemen may appreciate the force of this point of order, it becomes necessary to state the present law as to the mode of compensating railroads for transporting the mails. The provision in the act of 1873 is in the following language:

On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200; and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds; the average weight to be ascertained, &c.

This act was amended in 1876 by reducing these rates 10 per cent., and later on, in 1878, by a 5 per cent. additional reduction.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. MONEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery and which were now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2571) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. R. 635) to permit Thomas O. Osborn, minister resident and consul-general of the United States at Buenos Ayres, to receive a symbolic shield from the Argentine Republic.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 121) to authorize the return to the Government of Great Britain of the Arctic relief steamer Alert.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 122) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twelve hospital tents and outfits to the American Society of the Red Cross for use in New Orleans.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session and continued the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Recurring to the act of 1873 it appears by calculation that for 200 pounds $50 is allowed, making the rate $25 per hundred pounds; on 500 pounds additional, $15 per hundred; on a thousand pounds additional, $10 per hundred; on 1,500 pounds additional, eight dollars and a fraction per hundred; on 2,000 pounds additional, $7.50 per hundred; on 3,500 pounds additional, $5 per hundred; on 5,000 pounds additional, $4.50 per hundred.

The Clerk has just read the provision of this bill as to the mode of compensation, but as it is short I will again read it:

For railway post-office service, at a rate of speed of twenty or less miles per hour from terminus to terminus, 5 mills per linear foot of space (inside measurement) per mile run; and for each additional two miles per hour to and including thirty miles per hour one-tenth of a mill, and for each additional mile per hour one-tenth of a mill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is unnecessary for the gentleman to show that the provision of the bill is a change of existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object was to show not alone that it changed existing law——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take it for granted that it changes existing law without further reading from the provisions of the law or the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair does not apprehend my purpose in reading. I have no doubt that any man would be with me on the proposition that this bill changes existing law. I am not addressing myself to that point at all. The object I had in reading the old law and the proposition of this bill was to show that it does not appear from the bill itself that there is any retrenchment of expenditures. If the Chair is with me on this point I have nothing more to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very glad to hear the gentleman, but supposed he was reading the bill to show that it differed from the existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. I had that purpose, but it was subordinate to my other purpose to show that it does not appear from a comparison of these acts there is any reduction. But I will not take up further time of the Chair or of the committee in reading the provisions of the bill; I take it that its terms are understood.

Now the rule declares that a provision changing existing law must, to be in order, retrench expenditures in one of several ways, either—

By the reduction of the number or salaries of the officers of the United States—

It is clear there is no proposition of that sort here—

By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States—

I think it equally clear that it does not appear that there is any reduction in this respect—

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

There is nothing in the term of the bill making a reduction in this respect. The proviso added to the rule is in this language:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, I do not understand that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, having charge of this subject, has offered this proposition. But if it were so, still there is no retrenchment of expenditures appearing on the face of the bill, but on the contrary it is a debatable question whether there will be under this proposition any reduction of expense. It seems to me, reading the percentages of decrease under the old law in connection with the terms of this bill, without going into details, that this provision certainly amounts to an increase of expenditures. One gentleman argues, and very properly perhaps, that it will increase expenditures; another argues that it will decrease expenditures. It is a matter of calculation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Nobody will say that the provision of the bill as we now propose it will increase expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was only the other day when my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and my friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR] were disputing each other's calculations as to the compensation of one of these railroads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes; on one line.

Mr. BLOUNT. And that one line is a part of the calculation in ascertaining the final result. If my friend from Illinois should be mistaken as to the amount to be paid to that one road——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was not mistaken.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust my friend will not interrupt me. I will take back any allusion to him, and will suppose that some other gentleman has made a calculation as to the effect on a given line of railroad and ascertained to his satisfaction that the figures showed on that line an increase, while some other gentleman upon another calculation has satisfied himself to the contrary. In order for the Chair to ascertain whether or not the general result is to retrench expenditures it is incumbent on the Chair to make a calculation as to every line of railroad. Now, I submit that no gentleman who has ever examined the rules, or sat under their operation in this House, will undertake to say that the Chair was ever charged with any such duty. It must appear from the terms of the bill, as a legitimate and logical result, not as a mere matter of calculation to be made by this and that member of the committee, that there is a reduction. It must affirmatively appear that the provision does retrench expenditures, and if it does so appear the proposition must have come from a committee charged with the subject-matter, which is not the case here.

Mr. Chairman, this question was ruled on first by Mr. Kerr, when Speaker of this House; and I am apprised that the present occupant of the chair is familiar with that ruling, having been present at the time it was made, having frequently referred to it since, and having had occasion to rule on this very question several times. I shall not, therefore, take up time in citing rulings of the present occupant of the chair or any other presiding officer of this House, but will conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] desires to state a point of order, and the Chair will hear him.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, the point I desired to submit is substantially the same as that submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], with the additional remark that this bill on its face shows possibilities, not of diminished expense, but of largely increased expense. This provision for compensating railroads for carrying the mails goes upon the theory that weight, space, frequency, and speed are all to enter into the determination of the compensation.

The old law goes upon the theory that weight is to be considered except in case where space to the extent of a full car is required. But speed does not enter into the computation at all except in certain instances.

Now, there are possibilities of increased expenditures in this bill beyond what the committee has dreamed of, and which would satisfy the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] in his desire to open the doors of the Treasury. This bill provides for increased compensation where the frequency of service is increased without any necessary additional expense to a railroad company, because on the roads where a large weight of mail is carried, where it requires two or three cars for the accommodation of the mails if they are all carried on one train, it is to the destruction of it as a passenger train. Where divided up into three trains it is not only for the accommodation of the people but for the accommodation of the railroad company and diminution of its expense. But in the large number of railroads in the United States, where two passenger trains are run each day each way, there is but a single mail. This bill provides, although it is a light mail, that mail may be divided and be required to be carried on the two trains. When that is done there comes an immediate doubling-up of expense, and it shows it on the face of the bill. With three-fourths of the railroad companies in the United States pressing for such service and daily working up public sentiment all along the lines of these roads to press for that enhanced service, without an additional dollar of expenses to the railroad companies, and with the power to enhance it contained in the bill, we have doubling-up of compensation to be paid to railroad companies in three-fourths of the railroads of the United States.

Again, this bill provides for enhanced compensation according to increased speed. Not because it costs the railroad companies any more, for those trains which run twenty-two, twenty-four, and thirty miles per hour ordinarily are so run to accommodate the passenger traffic and the connections of the roads, and not to accommodate the mails. Where they are run specially for the accommodation of the mails we have special trains. But here is a gratuity in this bill provided for railroad companies who could not diminish the speed of their trains if they would and retain their passenger traffic.

So for frequency required which accommodates the company, for increased speed, and that the company must contain to retain its business, we are providing a gratuity without exacting of the railroad company any additional expense for carrying the mails.

But if any gentleman will take the trouble to figure and take up these roads which carry two and three mails a day under the compensation provided in this bill, he will find from one-third to double the present cost will come out of the Treasury. And if he will take the railroads which now run two passenger trains each way daily, but carry one mail, which divide that mail and carry it on two passenger trains, he will find again under the rating of this bill a largely increased expense.

It is the possibility shown upon the face of the bill to take money out of the Treasury to pay railroad companies I object to, and it is for that reason I prefer to see this section go out on a point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, if this proposition would result in increasing the compensation for railway mail transportation, every one in this House who is acquainted with my colleague on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and myself, would say we would be the two last members of Congress in favor of it. I say now if I could be convinced this scheme would result in increasing the enormous, unjust, and extravagant appropriations made for the railroad service of the country, I would go as far as he who goes farthest in denouncing and seeking to defeat this proposition.

At the last session of Congress my attention was called to this, and I feared it might result in an increase rather than in a diminution of the expenditures for that service. But since then I have had opportunities of consulting with those who know far more about this service than myself—who know far more about this service in my judgment than any one who holds a seat upon this floor—and they have convinced me beyond all possibility of doubt this proposition will result, as it stands in the bill, in saving to the Government over one million and a half of money a year. And in view of the great saving we are convinced will be accomplished by this proposition the Committee on Appropriations have reduced the amount of the estimates $1,000,000.

Now, as to the facts. Congress in 1883, authorized the appointment of a commission to consider this question and ascertain what would be the best method for compensating railroads and also do justice to the Government. In pursuance of that law three of the best experts which could be found in the Post-Office Department were selected. One Mr. Elmer, the late Second Assistant Postmaster-General; another, Col. W. B. Thompson, late chief of railway mail transportation service, and present Second Assistant Postmaster-General; and the third a gentleman by the name of Slater. These three gentlemen were furnished with clerks and all the means of thorough investigation. They had at their command the best experts in the Department and summoned to their aid the best experts in the country. They obtained information from every source open to them.

These men labored on this proposition for a period of eight months, and they labored patiently, industriously, conscientiously, and I believe most intelligently. They reached the conclusion that the saving to the Government would be at least $1,600,000 if the proposition now presented in the shape it is here presented in this bill should be adopted.

The present Postmaster-General in his annual report indorses the findings of this commission and recommends the adoption of this provision as the law. Now, what amazes me is to find, after so much time has been bestowed upon this subject, after so much patient labor and investigation on the part of experts and intelligent men acquainted with the subject which they have been investigating, that there is so much wisdom in some of the gentlemen on this floor that they are able to sit down during a few hours of a few evenings, notwithstanding their other engagements, and make such calculations and investigations as enable them, upon a multitude of matters before the House, to discover that all of the experience and all of the investigation and all of the knowledge and all of the information of these experts are worth nothing, and that they know better than those who have devoted so much labor and time to the consideration of the question.

Mr. Chairman, wherein is the economy shown upon the face of the proposition now before us? In the first place, under the present law the closed mail service of the Government, or what is known as the "sealed pouches," are carried in baggage-cars, to which no more attention is paid than to an ordinary piece of baggage. Under the present law we are paying as much for carrying that mail as we do or carrying the mails upon the splendid postal cars, furnished at lavish expense and all of the conveniences, comforts, and appliances that the postal cars are fitted up with, and on which our postal agents travel.

What do we do here by this provision? We simply change the rate of compensation for the closed mail by reducing it to one-half of the amount allowed for mails carried on postal cars furnished with agents, light, fuel, and other comforts and conveniences. We make them carry the closed pouches or bags of mail at about the same rate of compensation they receive for carrying ordinary baggage, and they certainly ought not to receive more. It involves no more expense upon them, and they furnish no better facilities. My friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] want us to return to the old law, and pay as much for carrying the closed bags as for the conveyance of the mail on postal cars, fitted up, as I have said, with every comfort and all of the paraphernalia of the present postal system of the country. That, I claim, is one of the great savings proposed in this bill. That is where hundreds of thousands of dollars are saved to the Government.

That mail is treated like baggage and carried like baggage; wherein, therefore, lies the justice of demanding that the Government shall pay the same terms that passengers pay for all of the luxurious accommodations now supplied to the traveling public?

There is another saving to which I wish to call attention. This proposition dispenses with the payment for postal cars, which aggregates about $1,625,000 per annum. Take for instance this: We appropriated for the current year $1,600,000 to pay for postal-car service. This bill dispenses with that altogether. That item is stricken from the bill, and we do not appropriate a dollar for postal cars; and why? Because the new scheme, as you are pleased to term it, does away with the necessity for it; in other words, in making up the great aggregate of what is needed for the working of the postal-mail service, it is determined by these gentlemen that no extra allowance shall be made for postal cars.

Now, then, there is a saving in this item of over $1,600,000. What further saving do we accomplish? In the bill passed at the last session of Congress we appropriated $250,000 for special mail facilities upon certain railroads. We have stricken that item out of the present bill. In my judgment, there is no necessity for one dollar being appropriated for special mail facilities. Why? Because one of the features of this new scheme is to furnish sufficient inducements to the railroads to quicken their time and supply fast-mail facilities without extra compensation or special appropriation for it. That item, therefore, was stricken out.

What further appears? If you glance over the rate of compensation paid to the railroads of this country, you will find that the minimum amount paid to any road does not fall below $42.75 except in some half dozen instances. Now there are 1,600 railroads in the country, and the majority of them, I believe—and I speak now in general terms—are the small roads, to which we are now paying $42.75 a mile per annum. We by an amendment I shall offer to this bill reduce the amount of compensation, or rather fix the amount of the minimum limit of $40 a mile, saving to the Government $2.75 per mile upon most of these roads. The bill in its present shape fixes the minimum limit at $35 per mile, which is a saving of $7.75 per mile; but in order to protect these roads we have established the limit at $40 a mile.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we have witnessed rather a singular state of affairs in this House. My friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR], if the amendments we have reported from the committee, but which have not yet been inserted in the bill, are adopted, says those amendments will cause the compensation to railroads to fall far below the present law, and in reducing the compensation will do railroads great injustice. On the other hand, my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who I know is an economist and who desires to bring about economy, and who, if he believed as I do about this proposition, would be the first on the floor to advocate it, is operating to defeat it from an entirely different standpoint—from the belief in his mind that the proposition will result in increasing the aggregate in the appropriation.

I want to make one further point. As I understand we are not to be confined to the language of the bill for proof of economy. I hold in my hand the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. He states on page 105 that under the present system more than half a million dollars of the public money is unnecessarily expended every year.

I hold also in my hand a report made by Mr. Lyman, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in which this language occurs:

> Under the plan proposed compensation would be made according to the amount and character of the service rendered in each case, and the result—> would be to decrease the cost of transportation by railroad per annum $1,687,980.

Mark the language—

And he further says:

> Even if we relieve railroads of what is known as side-service or side-messenger service we should still save to the Government $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I should like my friend to wait till I get through.

I say to you gentlemen if you succeed in defeating this proposition you will practically go hand in hand with the railroads in obtaining for them from a million to a million and a half of dollars more money from the Government than they would obtain if this proposition is adopted. I do not wish to argue the question further than to say I am convinced this proposition will reduce the expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HORR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] desire to sustain the point of order?

Mr. HORR. I desire to sustain it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has just been opposing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heard two arguments on that side. He will now recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I intend to speak but for a moment on this question, as it is confined to a single point. It is conceded the provision of this bill changes the law. There is no doubt about that. The only question is, does it retrench expenditures? If it does retrench expenditures, that fact can be shown but by two substantive facts or two that I know of. The only question is whether those facts can be sufficiently shown or not.

In the first place this provision does itself reduce the amount of the appropriation. The appropriation made by the present law is something over $16,000,000, and the estimates of appropriation for the present year are $17,571,000. Now, that the provision reduces the amount to be appropriated will be readily conceded.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend from Indiana allow me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman if it does not happen almost annually that the estimate of the cost of the railway-mail service as made by the Committee on Appropriations, and as enacted into law by the two Houses falls short of the actual results?

Mr. HOLMAN. I concede that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me to proceed a step further. With great deference to my friend's opinion, I ask him if that be true can he argue that the figures he puts in this bill are a sequence of the language he uses changing the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is just what I am coming to. I stated as my first proposition that the provision itself reduced the amount of the appropriation some $2,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Simply on its face.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon its face it does. But I do not regard that as sufficient. I freely concede—the Chair has so intimated a hundred times—that if that be sufficient, all you have to do is simply to reduce the amount and attach the provision coupled with that amount. On its face there is a reduction of expenditure; but at the same time it will be readily seen that taking the whole thing together, the amount indicated, the sum named, may not be the true sum.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. For a question, certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is this: Suppose that every road which is now running at a certain rate under this new act should increase its speed five miles an hour, would not that produce an increased expenditure which would do away with all your calculations?

Mr. HOLMAN. It would not do away with all the calculations. Those are elements entering into the cost.

Mr. DIBBLE. Does not that increase your present estimate?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all. That is one of the elements you have to consider in ascertaining the amount.

I trust I will have the ear of the Chair for a moment. I am suggesting that while this reduces the amount of the appropriation, that perhaps is not sufficient. Now, what additional evidence would be requisite to show that the plan proposed as it stands now in the bill, without any amendment, has the effect of retrenching expenditures?

What else can be relied upon with the exception of the official statement? I submit that the argument of the gentleman as to the probable results amounts to nothing upon a question like this, where you have to lay down different premises from which to draw your conclusions. That, I say, amounts to nothing in such a case, because it is purely argumentative, and the reduction or retrenchment of expenditures must be a fact established by some statement that does not depend upon a mere deduction. Now, Mr. Chairman, the only additional fact that can be presented showing that this is really a retrenchment of expenditures is the official statement. That statement is embodied in quite a number of documents, but in no other place is it presented so tangibly or concisely as in a communication addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads last session by the Post-Office Department. The communication was dated February 14, 1884, and was signed by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, one of the commission appointed by Congress to inquire into this service and report some plan to adjust and regulate the transportation of the mails. The language of that official statement is as follows:

Under the plan proposed, compensation would be made according to the amount and character of the service rendered in each case, and the result would be to decrease the cost of transportation by railroad per annum $1,687,980. From this deduct the cost of delivery of mails to the offices recommended by the committee, $687,980; net saving per annum, $1,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Wait a moment. Allow me to complete my sentence.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely want to know the gentleman's own position on this bill. That is all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, computation by figures for the purpose of showing a certain result is a fact. It may be what is called a verbal fact, but still it is a fact. The official statement before the Chair and before the House is that the plans proposed by this commission and put into this bill would retrench expenditures to the amount of a million dollars per annum.

Mr. MONEY. Six hundred and eighty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; a million dollars.

Mr. MONEY. But the provision which has been cut out of the bill reduces the saving to $687,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. But we have cut that out. That would still further increase the expenditure. I am now taking this official statement. It is proposed by this Committee on Appropriations, instead of taking the plan which would reduce the cost a million dollars, to reduce that amount 20 per cent.; that is, to reduce the first element in the cost from 5 mills down to 4 mills, which is a reduction of 20 per cent.

Now, I have this to say, in addition to what I have said already, that if an official statement as to the results of a proposed amendment of the law, coupled with an actual reduction of the appropriation, is sufficient to show a retrenchment of expenditure, then a retrenchment to the extent of a million dollars and 20 per cent. more is shown by the amendment now submitted. I admit that the question is not free of doubt. I think no question of the kind can ever be entirely free of doubt. But it does seem to me (and I have urged this view upon former occasions) that upon a question of expenditure, inasmuch as the Departments of the Government make their estimates and Congress acts upon those estimates and has acted upon them for a hundred years, as the basis for legislation as to public expenditures—in view of that fact it does seem to me that the official statement may be taken into account in determining the question whether a given provision of law does or does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. MONEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7577) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 323) for the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William A Duncan; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 327) providing for printing the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John H. Evins, late a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply want to call attention to the fact that this same provision is contained in another bill pending in the House—a bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HORR. As I understand this question of order it embraces but one point. The fact that the provision in this bill changes the law is of course admitted by every one. This provision is certainly out of order unless upon its face you can ascertain that it reduces expenses. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will give me his attention I wish to read what he said upon this point on the day before yesterday:

But the plan is strongly recommended. It is recommended by the superintendent of railway-mail transportation, and by this commission it is recommended—a commission appointed under the authority of Congress—a commission of very competent gentlemen.

Now mark this language:

And yet I am compelled to say for myself that I do not believe it can be stated with reasonable certainty what will be the cost until the effect of the poposition shall be determined by actual experience.

That, Mr. Chairman, was wisely said. Why, sir, this bill as originally framed by my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] provided for 5 mills per linear foot. The commission that they talked so much about agreed upon 5 mills per linear foot. Let the gentleman tell me how he and his colleague on the committee happened to take water on this proposition for 5 mills and change it to 4 mills. You did it because I demonstrated to the subcommittee that in all probability it would increase the pay of the railroad companies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no man can tell whether the proposition as now pending will increase or decrease the aggregate cost of this service. I defy any one here to tell me how many roads under this plan will get more than they at present receive and how many less. I do know that the compensation of the small roads which now get only a small portion of the money—$42.75 a mile up to $60—by this rule will be decreased. I do know that the compensation of a large number of roads running from New York city, carrying frequent and heavy mails, will even under the 4-mill rate be largely increased.

Is there any use in discussing this question when upon the very face of the provision it is utterly impossible to tell what will be the cost of this service under that provision? It can not come within the rule. What is the use of undertaking by our rules to exclude legislation on appropriation bills if we can admit a provision of this kind, where even the experts themselves do not agree as to the result?

Mr. TILLMAN. The probabilities are that it will result in an increase, because there is a premium offered for speed to the large roads that can make additional speed, and also a premium for frequency.

Mr. HORR. Undoubtedly there is a large discretionary power under this provision; and that is what the gentleman from Indiana meant when he said that no man could tell what the result would be until the experiment should be tried, because nobody can tell how many trains will be permitted to run; nobody can tell to what extent the roads will increase their speed. It is utterly impossible to get at any definite result at this time. Therefore I say the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heard gentlemen on both sides, and is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. One word in reply to the last point made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear any argument on that subject.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Before the Chair gives his decision I desire to ask a question. All this debate has been upon the entire provision. If the Chair should overrule the point of order, then I should desire to make a point of order as to a particular part of the provision to which the argument thus far made does not directly apply. I desire to reserve that right in case the point of order should be overruled. The argument up to this time has applied to the entire paragraph, yet it was clearly understood that points of order were reserved not only on every distinct paragraph but on every part of a paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE. I submit that for the purpose of expediting the public business all points of order should be made and settled now. I can see the drift of affairs here. I want these points made and decided so that we may get through with the public business. If there is any point to be made, I ask that it be made now and I ask a proper decision from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would prefer to hear the point of order now.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to make the point that the clause beginning in line 123 with the words "and in case of all special mail trains" down to the word "necessary," in line 129, is subject to a point of order under the third clause of Rule XXI, inasmuch as it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures in any of the three ways indicated by that rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The proposition must be taken as a whole—you can not single out a particular line.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is exactly what we reserved the right to do.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the point of order should run, and therefore I make it, to the whole of the second paragraph, commencing in line 83 and closing with line 153.

The CHAIRMAN. The same point of order has been made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to detain the Chair further than to state that as I read Rule XXI, this being a change of law it must retrench expenditure, first by reduction of the number or salary of officers—and that this does not pretend to do; second, by reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. There is where the claim comes in, and I deny it.

The gentleman from Indiana has made the only plausible argument, if it can be called plausible, against the point of order. He says you are remitted to the opinion of a bureau officer of the Government—that is, the Speaker is—whether or not a proposition is in order. I could play off against him the Postmaster-General lately in charge. Mr. Gresham expressly refused to recommend this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is mistaken. He is not able to put his finger on a line of Mr. Gresham's to that effect.

Mr. CANNON. I am stating what the fact is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You can not show a line.

Mr. CANNON. He never recommended it, for the reason it would increase expenses.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me correct the gentleman. If he will read Mr. Gresham's report he will find that he says that he does not recommend it because he did not study it.

Mr. CANNON. I only wish to say a word in conclusion. There is only one safe construction to this rule, and that is, where new legislation is proposed it must clearly appear on its face to the eye of the Speaker and to the Committee of the Whole it does retrench expenditure in one of the three ways mentioned in the rule. Otherwise you are at sea and any and all legislation is proper on appropriation bills. The surmises of any clerk or head of bureau or any other person amount to nothing.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I thought my method of stating this point of order was in the interest of the expedition of public business, because we can not assume the Chair is going to sustain or overrule the point of order. If the Chair does sustain the point of order there will be nothing more for me to say, but if the Chair is going to pass upon my point of order I now desire to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question. [Cries of "Decision!"] The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] makes the point of order on the part of the bill read by the Clerk that it is new legislation and does not retrench expenditure. He has cited clause 3 of Rule XXI as that to which this provision is obnoxious. The Chair desires to call attention to that part of the rule applicable to this case:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It is admitted this provision does change existing law. The only question for the Chair to decide is whether it retrenches expenditure in one of the ways pointed out. If it does reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury it would not be subject to the point of order. A corporation is a person and receives compensation for carrying the mail, and if that is reduced by the provisions of this bill the point of order can not be well taken.

How is the Chair to determine whether the compensation to be paid to railroads in this clause is reduced? The Chair does not understand that reduction must appear on the face of the bill itself. The present occupant of the Chair heretofore in deciding questions of this kind has held the Chair might take into consideration every fact which a court could take into consideration in determining similar matters, and could take into consideration not only the face of the bill but previous appropriations for this purpose under existing law, and also official reports of the Departments of the Government.

The question whether there is reduction is one of fact, and the Chair concedes that can not be determined here by taking evidence on either side, but must appear in some official way and be brought to the attention of the Chair and committee from reports submitted by the Departments.

From the law passed at the last session for the same purpose it appears there is a reduction of expenditure by this bill, and the Chair therefore to that extent overrules the point of order.

Now, in reference to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois on the left [Mr. ADAMS], as to whether a certain clause of detail here is in order or not, the Chair does not see that that clause is in order under the rule. He can not see that it relates to the question of reduction in any way; and is inclined to hold, if the point of order is made upon it, that it should go out of the bill. As there are many clauses in the bill, however, they must of course be taken altogether in consideration by the Chair in determining the point of order.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was an additional point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I made an additional point of order that there was a bill of the same nature and substance pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia made an additional point of order——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It strikes me that, the question having been submitted to the Chair and ruled upon, it is too late to raise a new question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order was made in time. The gentleman from Georgia made the further point of order that this provision is not in order because it is the substance of a pending bill. That point would be well taken if the proposition now before the committee were moved as an amendment.

The rule provides, clause 4 of Rule XXI:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

This is not an amendment, but a provision in an original bill; and the Chair has before it two bills, coming from two different committees, containing the same substance; but the Chair is not to say whether one committee or the other was entitled to report the same, but finds them here as original bills, and therefore not being an amendment to the pending bill, the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair as to the first point of order raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair on the first question of order.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the question be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair upon the point of order made by him, to wit, that this proposition is new legislation and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. NICHOLLS. That point came too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, and will entertain the appeal.

Before submitting the appeal the Chair desires to state that there is some doubt as to the propriety of the ruling, but the Chair has uniformly held that it was proper to rule such doubt in favor of submitting the proposition upon its merits to the committee, believing the committee to be the better judge of the proposition than the Chair; and hence the Chair will not exercise the arbitrary power of ruling out the proposition where any element of doubt exists.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 53.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 94.

So (no further count being demanded) the judgment of the Chair was overruled and the point of order sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that on this point of order which has been sustained by the committee all that part of the bill from line 67 down to and including line 153 goes out.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I wish to submit an amendment.

Mr. HORR. Before passing from this section I desire to offer the proper amendments which are made necessary by going back to the present plan and striking this provision out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has been recognized to offer on amendment.

Mr. HORR. I presume the gentleman from Georgia desires to offer an amendment to this section which should first be perfected.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I will withdraw for the present.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman from Illinois will observe that I shall move to strike out the words "for inland mail transportation" $15,265,000, and insert $14,010,000. I shall also move to insert after this clause "for railroad and postal-car service" $1,765,026, these being the estimates of the Department for the expenses under these two items under the rule that now exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 61 and 62 strike out "$15,265,000" and insert "$14,010,000," and at the end of line 66, for railroad postal-car service $1,765,026.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, we are now about to vote upon a question of taking over half a million out of the Treasury. It is proposed to insert an item in this bill which will effect that result. I do think the committee ought to listen to whatever reason may be shown for it as well as what answer may be presented against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order and public business will be suspended until order is restored upon the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall yield to hear the gentleman from Michigan before proceeding to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HORR. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois I desire to state to the House that the two sums I have fixed upon are precisely the amounts that the Post-Office Department estimates it will take for this branch of the service under the present rule, omitting the Pacific railroads as they have been omitted in the past. I wish to say to the committee that this is an item which I am not strenuous about, because it is not determined at all by the amount we appropriate. Last year we appropriated a good deal less than the gentleman from Illinois well knows it was going to take to run that service. There is a deficiency already of $875,000 or $750,000, I am not sure which.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Eight hundred and fifty thousand for that service.

Mr. HORR. Yes, $850,000 is what the service costs more than was appropriated last year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that for the year 1884?

Mr. HORR. No, sir; it is for this fiscal year, being within a few dollars of the amount the Post-Office Department said it would require in their estimates. But the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Indiana succeeded in cutting it down, and now we have to make it up by a deficiency.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We gave the estimates of the Department.

Mr. HORR. I beg your pardon. The gentleman was mistaken yesterday, and he is mistaken now. This was one of the items we cut down.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We reduced the item a million because the Department said we could do so if this scheme was adopted.

Mr. HORR. I am talking about the appropriation made last year. There is a deficiency for the current year of the amount I have named.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct as regards the estimates of last year.

Mr. HORR. I fix this amount in my amendment because it is the amount which the parties best able to judge say the service will take. Now, it does not make any difference whether you appropriate $6,000,000 or $16,000,000 or $20,000,000. It has got to be paid any way, and to be paid according to the law upon the weight that the railroad companies carry, so that you will not cripple the service by refusing it. I can not appeal to you on that ground. But if you want to make a law so that there will not be a deficiency to provide for next year you will have to vote the sum I have named. If you prefer to cut it down a million dollars, and then next year appropriate a million to make up the deficiency, simply for the purpose of making this bill look smaller than it really is, you can do that. There is no law to prevent it; nobody can prevent it.

But this is not a year, Mr. Chairman, that we need to make such appropriation bills. Last year in the discussion of these bills we were told repeatedly that "this year" this thing ought not to be done. But now we are in another year. We are entering upon a new era. The distinguished gentleman who is to occupy the Presidential chair the next four years has not called upon me yet to give him any advice as to his Cabinet or policy. I do not know why he has not done so. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He will call upon you.

Mr. HORR. If he should, I could tell him there is one gentleman in this House who understands the Post-Office business and has shown it in this debate; and I am glad to find there is one Democrat who not only understands it, but who is willing to stand up and declare his views upon it here on the floor of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope I will not be interrupted during the five minutes I am entitled to on this amendment. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has said rightly we have inaugurated a new era. We have done so right here and now, and it is an era of extravagance, of unnecessary appropriation of the people's money; and I quote the language of the officials of the Post-Office Department in saying so. When the proposition that was ingrafted upon this bill was stricken out the Treasury of the United States lost, according to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, over half a million of dollars. And the position of the Post-Office Department and of the Committee on Appropriations and the argument used by the gentleman from Indiana and myself could not have been more quickly sustained by its adversaries than it has been sustained by the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Illinois is lecturing the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for what it has done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Appropriations in this item of $15,265,000 gave every dollar that was estimated by the Department, taking out an appropriation for the Pacific railroads, which the gentleman from Michigan admits must come out of the bill. Now, as soon as this provision is cut out of this bill the gentleman from Michigan, who insisted this system would increase rather than cut down expenditures, comes to the front with a proposition increasing the appropriation to the service over half a million dollars, and perhaps this House will sustain him in it. That is the logic of it. Our proposition in the bill gives the Post-Office Department every cent that was asked for. We gave the full estimate of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HORR. I will ask the gentleman does the amount fixed in this bill under either plan show at all what the real expenditure will be?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; but the Postmaster-General says if we give his estimates we will give every dollar that is needed. And the Second Assistant Postmaster-General says now, "If you give us our estimates and adopt this new scheme, then you may deduct from this amount $1,000,000." That is just what the Appropriations Committee did. The gentlemen who opposed the proposition all insisted that our scheme was increasing the expenditures, and now upon the heel of that declaration one of the principal opponents of the proposition comes in and asks that we shall give an additional sum of over half a million dollars. Was an instance ever seen where the champion of the opposition has so quickly and so readily confessed that his opponent was right? By his action he now admits we were right in declaring that the scheme brought about economy and reduction instead of an increase. The gentleman is compelled to take the back track; he is compelled to go back upon his argument, for we in our scheme gave every dollar the Department asked. And now you come in and demand, after that provision has been stricken out, that we shall give over half a million more.

Now by striking out that provision, according to the confession of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] himself, the Treasury loses over half a million dollars that will go down into the pockets of the stockholders of the railroad companies, and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General brands the appropriation as "an unnecessary use of the public money." I leave it for this committee to determine whether they will adopt the gentleman's amendment or not.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I want to be heard for a few moments at this point.

There are now six appropriation bills, large ones, pending, and four of them in the hands of subcommittees: The fortification bill, which appropriates over $7,000,000; the naval appropriation bill, which has just reached the full committee, and which appropriates $30,000,000; the sundry civil bill, which is in the hands of a subcommittee, and which appropriates $32,000,000; the deficiency bill, appropriating $8,000,000, also in the hands of a subcommittee; the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, which is on the House Calendar and not acted upon; the Post-Office appropriation bill, now under consideration; and the other appropriation bills in the Senate and not sent to the President—only one little bill appropriating $310,000 having yet gone to the President.

There are but sixteen legislative days remaining in which to act upon these bills. In the last Congress it took nineteen days to pass the number of bills now unacted upon here, and yet we are frittering away our time and necessitating an extra session of Congress.

Mr. HORR. What of it?

Mr. BAYNE. And, Mr. Chairman, it looks to me, although disclaimers have been made, as if there is a contrived plan here to force an extra session. It looks to me as if it were the purpose of the men who are delaying the appropriation bills to dump them in on the Senate at the end of the session, too late for action and then try to put upon the Senate the blame of making an extra session necessary. Where is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations found urging this legislation? What has come of the promises made before the session began, that the Committee on Appropriations would sit before the convening of Congress and during the recess, so as to perfect the appropriation bills and have them ready for the action of the House? Nothing ready, nothing acted upon; yet we spend hour after hour here in endless discussion.

Here is your Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads proposing new legislation, when you know that the Senate will strike out every bit of new legislation that you put into this bill—everything that changes existing law. You have that notice, and yet you introduce this new legislation into this bill. Why do you introduce it? I can see no other purpose lying back of this than a design on the part of the Democratic members of Congress to delay legislation so as to remain here and be in Washington when the new President takes his seat, so that they may go to him and make appeals for appointments to office, and thus avoid the necessity of pilgrimages from their homes under circumstances which might make it less likely that they would be granted the favors they seek. I see in this action a determined purpose on the part of the majority of the House to force an extra session of Congress; but the country does not want an extra session, and the country will hold this Democratic majority responsible if there shall be one.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is unnecessarily alarmed; there will be no extra session. There is no danger of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I regret to have occasion to say one other word in reference to this bill; but my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has, I think, been doing great injustice to his colleagues on this floor. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] moves that the amount estimated by the Post-Office Department as necessary for the next fiscal year shall be inserted in this bill. That estimate was made under the law of 1873; the rates in that law were reduced 10 per cent. on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] during a period of great financial distress in 1876, and that reduction was followed, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations (I having charge of the bill), by an additional reduction of 5 per cent. That is the law that Congress was content to act under in a period of great financial pressure, and we have gone on with it from that time until the present; and now at this late hour, when we are embarrassed from lack of time to consider properly a proposed revolution in the mode of compensating the railroads, the result of which, as to the amount of expenditure it would involve, is certainly debatable, my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], assuming his own conclusions to be absolutely correct, and ignoring and contemning the conclusions of honest and reputable associates upon this floor, stigmatizes them as seeking to squander the public funds.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I never made any such expression.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I will withdraw that remark for the sake of being allowed to go on without interruption.

Now the gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment in the terms of the estimate. It has rarely happened that gentlemen on either side, when in control of legislation here, have asked for the amount of the estimates, and on this item, so far as I know, they have always gone below the estimate. But the gentleman from Illinois, refusing to follow his own practice upon the subject and the practice of both sides of the House, prefers to let the estimate stand, to magnify the accusation against his associates on this floor. I submit that the gentleman is not dealing liberally and kindly with us. If he thinks the amount estimated for is too large and will ask to reduce it, I will co-operate with him.

The gentleman from Michigan has repeatedly stated that the law fixes the compensation to be paid to the railroads; there is no room for any discussion upon that point. It is a matter of weight—so much per pound. If the railroads do not carry enough to earn the whole amount appropriated, the money will be unexpended. If the appropriation should not be sufficient to pay for the amount actually carried, the Government will be bound to recognize the deficit in a deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on pending amendments is exhausted. As the Chair understands, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] does not present this case exactly as it should be presented. Of course there may be some facts which are not generally understood. There was a fixing of compensation of railroads in the act of March 3, 1873, but that act, in the face of reduced wages of labor and a general reduction of prices throughout the country, increased enormously the rates to be paid to the railroad corporations—increased those rates beyond the compensation paid during the whole period of the war and the era of inflation immediately following. The only effect of the acts of 1877 and 1878 was a reduction of 15 per cent. upon the previous extravagant rates, the first act making 10 per cent. reduction and the second 5 per cent. reduction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have but little time, but I must yield to my friend.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman himself had charge of the appropriation bill in 1876, and asked for a reduction of only 10 per cent.; and it was conceded.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was a reduction of 20 per cent.; and that was a compromise between the two Houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all; my friend reported it from the Committee on Appropriations as an original proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman will find it was 20 per cent. that we compromised on then.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, after a lapse of ten years I will not undertake to say who is correct in this matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I will run the risk myself, if the gentleman is so confident. [Laughter.] But I like to be cautious in my statements.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is manifest that the increase for the coming year over the present year, if we appropriate on the basis of the present year, must be over $3,000,000. I think gentlemen have not looked into this subject of the increase in the cost of transporting mails by railroad. I wish to call attention to the amounts paid during the last four years. For 1882 the appropriation for this service was $10,914,282; for 1883, $12,681,000; for 1884, $13,275,000; for 1885, $14,375,000. The estimate for the coming year is $17,559,205, an increase of $3,184,205 over the present year; so that, according to this rate of increase, the appropriation which we shall be called upon to make next year for this service will be more than $20,000,000. Gentlemen must see that this increase of expenditure must be arrested. Certainly we know that this is not a legitimate and honest increase.

Gentlemen must certainly be aware, if they will take the weighing over any road of which they have knowledge, that the great defect is the one we have been trying if possible to correct. From this system frauds upon the Government have resulted. My attention is called to the case of a single road where, upon a recent weighing, the weight was run up from 5,000 pounds to 18,000 pounds per day, although there was no reason to suppose any very material increase of business since the last weighing; and on the basis of this increased weight that road is now being paid. I desire to arrest in some small degree this extraordinary increase in the charges for this service. We are now paying $25 per mile per annum for the transportation of each 2,000 pounds of mail matter daily over and above 5,000 pounds.

I ask the committee to consent to reduce that to $20 per mile. Gentlemen will see the enormous increase is on the great trunk lines. I know when they do a large amount of business they can afford to carry the largely increased body of mails on a lower basis than a less amount. I hope the committee will consent to reduce that excess of 2,000 pounds of daily transportation over and above 5,000 pounds from $25 down to $20—that at least ought to be insisted upon by my colleague on this committee—and limit the amount paid to any railroad corporation to $600 per mile per year. The basis fixed a few years ago was $300. This act of the 3d of March, 1873, removed that limitation of $300 per mile and left us without any limit, so that you are paying beyond $1,000 per mile per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer as an amendment the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer my two propositions together, which I ask to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this offered as a substitute?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; but as an amendment in addition to the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That the pay per mile for transportation of the mails by railroads shall not exceed $20 for each additional 2,000 pounds transported in addition to the 5,000 pounds of mail matter transported daily by any railroad under the provisions of section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, and the pay for transporting the mails by any railroad shall not exceed $600 per mile per annum, and the second clause of said section is amended accordingly: Provided further, That railroad companies whose railroads were constructed in whole or in part by land grants made by Congress, on the condition that the mails should be transported over their roads at such price as Congress by law should direct, and the railroad companies incorporated under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, shall hereafter receive for the transportation of the mails over their respective railroads only 80 per cent. of the compensation authorized by this act; and the said act approved July 1, 1862, and all acts amendatory thereof, are hereby amended to conform to the foregoing provisions; but the right of the United States to further amend said act, or any act amendatory thereof, is expressly reserved. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention, if gentlemen will allow me, to the fact that this last proposition simply extends the postal laws to the Union Pacific Railroad. It puts that railroad under the same law which regulates the transportation of mails over the other land-grant railroads.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in regard to the first amendment of the gentleman from Indiana I am disposed to favor it, and under his explanation the second proposition too. Up to 1873 the maximum rate paid to first-class railroads for carrying the mails was $300 per mile per annum. When night service was performed on such rate 20 per cent. might be added, so that no road for any service could receive more than $375 per mile per annum for this service up to 1873. That year the law was changed and a different mode was adopted for compensating the railroad companies for transporting the mails. Under that law the compensation to some of the first-class roads reached $1,000, and more than $1,000, a mile, which was a change in a single year.

I remember, in an investigation made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department during the Forty-fourth Congress, soon after this change was made, it was developed a single road south of the lakes, carrying mails for $75 a mile, was under that act given $750 a mile for carrying the mails.

Other changes subsequently took place in the law, and each time we have been told in the interest of economy. Now the maximum paid to the largest of these roads I am informed is over $2,000 a mile. So in eleven years the rate of compensation has been increased nearly fourfold. Fortunately for the country, I think, on a question of order another change was stricken from the bill this morning that would have greatly augmented the pay of these first-class roads, and in my judgment would have increased it to not less than $3,000 per mile per annum.

I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is in the right direction, and it is the right thing that the House should sustain it. Certainly $600 a mile ought to be sufficient compensation. Under the new plan of compensation it is arranged to have a minimum rate of speed, and to increase the compensation if the speed is increased. It is proposed, too, to fix as part of the basis the car-space occupied and the number of trips.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is out on a point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. It is in the existing law.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are simply paid on weight.

Mr. REAGAN. Various kinds of ingenious machinery are used to multiply the price of railroads for carrying the mails. They ought to be properly compensated. I know it has been said in justification of this that improvements have been made in the service by providing postal railway clerks whose duty it is to distribute the mails as they pass along without the necessity of delaying them by distribution at various points. There is an advantage in that, and due allowance ought to be made for it. But I undertake to say that there is no railway in this country carrying passengers or merchandise of any kind that can earn $600 a mile per annum carrying one, two, or three cars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HORR. The gentleman is mistaken; if he will figure it out he will find he is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CANNON. That was my purpose in rising.

The CHAIRMAN. This, being an amendment to an amendment, is subject to ten minutes' debate, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman for five minutes in opposition.

Mr. CANNON. I was temporarily absent, Mr. Chairman, when this amendment was proposed by the gentleman. I have noticed it, however, at the Clerk's desk, and I see it contains a provision that the pay of no railroad for the transportation of the mails shall exceed $600 per mile per annum.

If gentlemen present will understand what the law is they will find that this amendment is not in the direction of economy but is absolutely in the direction of extravagance; and I can demonstrate it in a moment. Section 4002 of the Revised Statutes provides what the compensation of railroads shall be up to 5,000 pounds per mile per annum, or at the rate of $200 per mile. Then for every 2,000 pounds of mail matter in excess of 5,000 pounds provision is made for payment at the rate of $25 per ton per mile per annum. In other words, you pay for the additional matter not more than one-fourth of what is paid for the first 5,000 pounds.

Now, the result of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be to take these mails and distribute them among the various roads at the highest price; whereas if you allow the mails to seek the roads where they would naturally go, the roads being willing (not all the time, but generally) to carry them, you get the bulk of your mail carried at the lower rate, or $25 per ton per mile per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a moment? I ask if that can be done without the connivance, and the dishonest connivance, of the railroad officials?

Mr. CANNON. Another thing: There are many gentlemen who want an appropriation for special mail facilities under the present law to roads which get all of the compensation that is provided by the statute to which I have referred. You take $250,000 to get fast-mail facilities from New York city south. Nearly every dollar of that appropriation is spent on Southern roads.

Take this mail train from New York west to Chicago, to Milwaukee, to Minneapolis, to Portland, Oreg., to Omaha, and to San Francisco, and you get fast mail there without a dollar expended for special mail facilities; and how? Simply owing to the fact that the Post-Office Department masses the mail at the cheaper rate on a given line of road.

The Department says to the railroad companies, "Take this mail and give us a certain speed, and we will mass the mail on your road." The Department can save money by the operation, and although by massing the mail on a given line of road at the cheaper rate it may increase the pay of the road $1,000 or $2,500 per annum, still the entire bulk of the mail is carried at the cheaper rate, and the Department gets fast-mail facilities without the expenditure of a dollar. On the contrary, it saves the expenditure of large sums of money.

In other words, under wise administration it is cheaper to give fast-mail service to the people than it is to give slow service and divide the bulk of the mails among the different parallel lines of railway. But the moment you cut the appropriation down to $600 per mile per annum good-by to your cheaper carriage, and good-by to your fast-mail trains. It cuts the service up by the roots. Now I am not in favor of reducing their pay so as to compel them to accept an unfair price. I doubt whether generally they get too much or any too large a price for the service now; but I want to pay for the service what it is fairly worth. In conclusion, I do beg of gentlemen that they will not come here and seek to cripple the service that has been settled by wise administration under existing law for nearly fifteen years without sufficient investigation, because when they do they will find that great damage is done to the country at large.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate upon this amendment to the amendment is exhausted. The Chair can not entertain any other amendment until the pending amendments are disposed of. There is an amendment in the second degree pending unless the gentleman from Indiana withdraw it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 22. Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I will not insist upon a further count, as I think the sentiment of the House is manifestly against the measure.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask the House, and I suppose there will be no objection to it, to adopt the last provision of the amendment, putting the Union Pacific system on the same footing as the other land-grant roads in this country. I think even my friend from Michigan will not object to that.

Mr. HORR. Why, it is the most useless thing in the world to do, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer it then as a separate proposition. The gentleman knows as well as any other gentleman upon the floor, that we have no law imposing any limitation whatever upon the transportation of the mails on the Union Pacific system of roads.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have a decision of the Supreme Court in the last week.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the decision of the Supreme Court, as well as the Court of Claims, is to the effect that we have not extended the system to embrace these roads; in other words, that we have no law which applies to them in this respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is not now in order for the gentleman to offer the proposition which he has just submitted, since it has been already rejected by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not that proposition, Mr. Chairman, but combined with another. This proposition is simply a part of the proposition formerly submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee rejected both propositions by the vote on the question which was submitted. The gentleman could have called for a division of the propositions but he did not do so. They were both submitted to the committee and were both rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not bound to call for a division. Does the Chair decide that when a proposition is submitted, which contains two substantive propositions, and they are voted down together, you can not offer as an amendment any portion of the matter voted down? I submit that that is done every day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that when two substantive propositions are submitted to the committee in one vote and they are voted down, it is not in order to submit one of them again. It was in order to demand—and the rules provide for a division of substantive propositions if demanded; but the gentleman from Indiana failed to ask for that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not appeal from the decision of the Chair, because the matter is not of sufficient moment, perhaps, to justify an appeal.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out the last word.

I do not think my usually well-informed friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] was advised of the amount of work that the Committee on Appropriations have already accomplished, or of the condition of the business of the House or of the Senate either, when he sought to make an attack upon the action of that committee. This Post-Office appropriation bill has been pending before this House over ten days. It was kept back during all last week by the bill the gentleman himself has been pressing. I think that he himself owes it to the House to give an explanation of what has occurred in keeping back an important appropriation bill such as this in order to push the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. BAYNE. But I desire that the gentleman shall not misrepresent me. I voted against my own committee to take up this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am glad to hear that the gentleman appreciated the importance of this bill. But what I want to say is this: We have now two bills before the House, the present Post-Office appriation bill and the bill making appropriations for the legislative, judicial, and executive expenses of the Government. The bill I have last mentioned is the most voluminous bill that comes from our committee. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] It has more items in it and more pages in it than any other bill. I hope these demands for a vote will not come out of my time.

I want to let the gentleman further understand that the Committee on Appropriations have sent to the Senate two bills that they have not yet taken any final action upon. So the Senate has abundance to do in disposing of those appropriation bills whilst we are maturing this bill.

The Committee on Appropriations is pressing every day for action upon this bill. During the last two days the time of the House has been frittered away in my judgment by very frivolous motions and pretexts.

A MEMBER. Mr. Cleveland has been counted in.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Appropriations is doing its utmost to press action upon its bills. I want to say about the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] that I intended no reflection on any member of this House by the remarks which I made to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] took exception. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia had understood that proposition as I believe I understand it, and as I believe the officers of the Post-Office Department do, I would have found in him a strong and potent champion of it on this floor, because I am satisfied he would have been impelled by his love of economy to seek its adoption.

I wish also to say that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is not so far out of the way as I feared it was at the start. The defeat of the proposition stricken out of this bill does render necessary a large increase in the appropriation, provided you desire to give the estimates of the Department. The Committee on Appropriations provided every dollar the Department estimated for. That was the point I wanted to make. We took the estimates of the Department, and under the advice of the Department we cut down those estimates $1,000,000, provided this proposition should be adopted.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to know if the committee talks all of the time, and does not vote at all, whether we can avoid an extra session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit that in the discussion which shall take place on this bill in the future gentlemen should be confined to the bill and not be allowed to discuss the question whether their side of the House or the Senate is responsible for delay.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Or that side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that it be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 61 and 62, strike out "$15,265,000" and insert "$14,010,000."
Also, at the end of line 66, insert the following: "For railway postal-car service, $1,765,026."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 153, insert:
"For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $266,764."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the amendment. He will please state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the appropriation and that it does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. NICHOLLS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia on the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLLS. That amendment is in the precise language of the present law. In the last session a similar amendment was offered to the Post-Office appropriation bill and was ruled out upon the point of order. The bill went to the Senate, and it was there amended as had been proposed in the House, and this amendment is in the precise language of the law as it now exists. Therefore, while at the last session the point was probably well taken, yet surely it is not so now, because this amendment is the law just as it stands. This increase is necessary. There is no question about that. Unless this amendment be adopted we get no fast-mail service at the South.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, this same amendment was offered at the last session, and the same point of order was made and was sustained.

Mr. NICHOLLS. But the law was not then as it is now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The year before an appropriation had been made for this service, and last year the question was raised and this amendment was decided to be out of order.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is drawn word for word like the existing law; it follows to the letter the law that is now upon the statute-book.

Mr. MILLS. But not for next year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not care to detain the Chair upon this point, but if he has any doubt whatever about it I refer him to the RECORD to show that at the last session the same proposition was submitted, and was ruled out on the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLLS. But that was for the reason I have stated. The law was not then as it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see the decision that was made upon this point by the presiding officer at the last session.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I understand the fact to be that the amendment was ruled out last year on the point of order. It was then carried to the Senate, which never puts any new legislation on a bill, and there it was put upon the bill.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I have stated that fact.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I admit that my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is correct in saying that this was stricken out of the bill last year; but I doubt if it was done on the same ground. It went to the Senate and they put it in the bill, and then it was voted upon and indorsed by this House by a large majority. Now, I think the House is entitled to go on and do this year what it did last; but I may be mistaken about that, for if there is anything that I know less about than another it is what is permissible under our rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to state that this amendment was put upon the same ground last year that it is placed upon now; so that it comes before the Chair under the same circumstances as last year. The year before last an appropriation had been made for this purpose, and it was in the bill of that year; yet, when this point was made upon the amendment last year, and the same reasons were urged against it that are urged now, the Chair decided, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] admits, that as the amendment was new legislation, and was not in the interest of economy, it must be ruled out. Then the bill went to the Senate, and there the amendment was put on. The appropriation of the current year is confined to the current year; it makes no law for the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has some hesitation in deciding on questions of order of this kind from the fact——

Mr. DIBBLE. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to say a word as to the point of order. Under the third paragraph of the rule, no amendment is in order upon a general appropriation bill providing for any expenditure not previously authorized by law "unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress." That is one of the exceptions. Now, this is a continuation of an appropriation for a public object, which is already in progress. And, besides, what is the existing law, Mr. Chairman? Why, the Postmaster-General has the right to contract, and make expenditures, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines. He has that power to-day, and this is a continuation of the appropriation for that purpose; and if there was no general law which said that he might do that, still, until that annual provision is repealed, it constitutes from year to year an existing law; and when it was passed it repealed any implication to the contrary that might exist from absence of specific provision in the general law. Therefore there is nothing in existing law inconsistent with such an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that he felt some hesitation in passing upon points of order of this kind from the fact that there is a great disposition on the part of members to decide such a question as this upon its merits rather than upon the merits of the point of order; so that the Chair may be overruled when he is right and the committee wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to know whether it is parliamentary for the Chair to undertake to state the reasons for the votes of members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not done so; but, if the gentleman desires, the Chair will withdraw any statement that may be regarded as of that character. As this question is not free from doubt, and in order to give the committee an opportunity to pass upon the proposition on its merits, the Chair will overrule the point of order. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NICHOLLS.]

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word upon this subject of special mail facilities. The sums appropriated for this purpose heretofore have been generally expended in the portions of the country where the railroads make very few trips and at a slow rate of speed, except the expenditure in the city of New York, where trains must go out carrying the mail and nothing else. Of course, where that is required there must be some extra compensation, or else the railroads would not consent to adopt the schedule of time and stoppages required by the Post-Office Department.

But most of the expenditure for this purpose has been made at the South, where trains are slow, where the towns are comparatively small, and where it is desirable to have more rapid communication with the great commercial centers of the country; and I think it will be profitable to the committee if they will permit me to read a statement of the expenditures of this character in the present fiscal year. Only three roads at the North have received compensation from this appropriation. The road between New York and Springfield, Mass., has received $17,647, and the same road appears in another place to have received $25,000. The road between Philadelphia and Baltimore has received $20,000. This makes a total of something over $62,000 of this money expended in the North. The expenditure of this character is so small in that section because the trains there generally run at a greater speed than in the southern portion of the country, and when you get south of Mason and Dixon's line you find that the balance, $185,000, has been expended there upon Southern lines. The Southern lines upon which this money is expended are those running from Bay View to Quantico, from Quantico to Richmond, from Richmond to Petersburg, from Petersburg to Weldon, from Weldon to Wilmington, from Wilmington to Florence, from Florence to Charleston Junction, from Charleston Junction to Savannah, from Savannah to Jacksonville, and from Baltimore to Hagerstown.

This is a recapitulation in brief of the expenditure of this particular sum appropriated for extraordinary facilities on trunk lines. I think this is money well expended. I know it is money well expended if you consider the commercial interests involved in the rapid communication between great commercial centers. I hope the House will give its approval to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, would it be a crime for me to say a word in reply in behalf of the Treasury? I have but little hope of preventing any increase of expenditure sought to be made on this bill; but I shall at least keep my record consistent, and give the reasons why I think this appropriation ought not to be made.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, there is not another line of railroad in the Union on which a single dollar of extra compensation is asked for fast-mail facilities. We get fast-mail facilities in the West; you get them in the Southwest; and they do not cost the Treasury a single dollar additional. But on this Atlantic line the demand comes up every year that we shall vote over a quarter of a million of dollars in addition to the enormous pay these roads already receive for carrying the mails.

I have made a computation of how much is received per mile by these roads that are now begging for this additional pay for furnishing fast-mail facilities. The link from New York to Springfield, Mass., gets $872 a mile under the present law. Yet that line, among others, comes here and says it will not carry the mails fast unless we make this additional appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. How many trains a day are there on that line?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The line from Philadelphia to Baltimore—the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad—receives $656.66 per mile; yet we are asked to give additional compensation to this rich corporation for fast-mail facilities. Why, sir, the roads running clear through from New York to San Francisco give us fast-mail facilities without one dollar of extra compensation.

Mr. MONEY. Does the gentleman know the rate of speed on that line?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope you will let me go on.

Mr. MONEY. Will you allow me to ask——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not allow any interruption.

We have fast mails from Baltimore to Saint Louis, for which we pay nothing extra. We have a fast mail from New York to Saint Louis, for which no extra pay is allowed. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, one of the wealthiest corporations in the country, says it will not give us fast-mail facilities unless extra pay be allowed. That road is now getting $655.75 per mile for carrying the mails. Yet we must allow extra compensation to this poverty-stricken road.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir.

Mr. FINDLAY. I simply wish to know where you get your figures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. From the report of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. FINDLAY. Do you go to the Postmaster-General's report for an account of the financial condition of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the Chair will protect me from interruption.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is a most extraordinary place to get such information.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the Chair will give me protection.

Mr. FINDLAY. I think you need protection in making such a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the Committee of the Whole to be in order. The gentleman from Illinois must be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The report of the Postmaster-General has accompanying it a table giving the amount of mail compensation paid to every railroad in the United States. This report shows that last year the Government paid the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad $655.75 per mile for carrying the mails. So it runs throughout. It will be seen by the tables that many railroads in the West furnish fast-mail facilities and pay less dividends to their stockholders than the roads I have mentioned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope my friend will bear with me. [Cries of "Vote!"] I have rarely taken up the time of this House, and only ask for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed. Does the gentleman submit an amendment?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes; I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to see the plan of gauging payment of railway mail transportation by speed, weight, and space tested.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who strongly opposed this plan one year ago now reports it favorably. It is an experiment, of which the very strong argument by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] should make us critical. But this committee have taken one step backward in cutting off the appropriation of $250,000 for special mail facilities. Every investigation of them testifies to the value of these special fast mails.

The commission of experts who recommended the new system of paying for railway mails, the Postmaster-General and Second Assistant Postmaster-General who advise the new system, all insist that the special mail facilities we now have be preserved in connection with the new system.

The report of the commission says that the Postmaster-General of Great Britain has power to call on any railway to run trains exclusively carrying mails, with such stoppages and speed as he may designate, paying higher special rates therefor, and adds that the day is not far distant when our country will do the same thing.

The commission say it is now only practicable for our Postal Department to contribute its share in maintaining trains as nearly as possible similar in character.

Postmaster-General Gresham, justly praised on the other side of this House, strongly recommended these special mail facilities and arranged their schedules for the benefit of more than half the States of the Union. The present Postmaster-General recommended the new system for paying for railway mails, but recommends with it the continuance of these special mail trains, which he says should be extended rapidly.

Second Assistant Postmaster-General Lyman, who is the special advocate of the new system, advises that $266,764.50 be appropriated for special facilities this year.

Colonel Thompson, one of the commission who recommended the new system of payment, as Second Assistant Postmaster-General, insists that we must also retain the special mail facilities we have.

The special fast mail gives us a coast-line service from Halifax and Boston to New Orleans, and the short span of eighty-seven miles paid for between Baltimore and Hagerstown afford a fast-mail line to Roanoke, three hundred and twenty-seven miles long, whence is afforded direct connection with Memphis and New Orleans.

This branch of the postal service is one of the most important factors in the stimulation of trade, the letters and papers conveyed concerning lands, merchandise, and business of every kind, and the interchange of information being followed by interchange of persons and commodities.

It is proposed suddenly to take away all this, though interlinked with the life and business of half of the States of our country and though enjoyed by the people since 1873. It costs but $250,000 and repays in value to millions of our people tenfold. If we appropriate it we know exactly where it will be applied, and if there be any abuse of the system those who oppose it ought to point out what part of this service can be dispensed with, and wherein the uniform support of those special mail facilities by the Department is wrong.

The distribution of the mail under this system is more complete than any ever had through the Atlantic and Gulf States and a vast interior country by close connections now made to reach places remote from special lines under schedules arranged by Postmaster-General Gresham. I have succeeded in having the branch of it from Baltimore to Hagerstown investigated in its actual workings last week. I hold in my hand a report of Postmaster Adreon, of Baltimore, giving the result of Supervisor Bailey's inspection of that route.

The special mail train leaves Baltimore at 4.40 a. m., arrives at Hagerstown, Md., at 7.45 a. m., whence it is carrried to Roanoke, Va., at 6 p. m. It carries mail from all mail-routes centering at Baltimore and arriving on the previous night, the mails from Boston, Providence, New Haven, and New York leaving that city at 9 p. m., and Philadelphia leaving that city at midnight. Along with these go all mails of Baltimore received between 3.30 p. m. and 4.10 a. m. For three hundred and twenty-seven miles of Maryland, West Virginia, and Virginia, which it traverses, it furnishes mail six hours earlier than before.

Coming northward, the special mail train gathers the mail from the Memphis and Charleston, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, the Selma, Rome and Dalton, the Norfolk and Western, the Chesapeake and Ohio Railways, and from their numerous branches and feeders.

It saves from the long delay before experienced the mail from Corinth and Meridian, Miss., Decatur, Selma, and Birmingham, Ala., Knoxville, and Chattanooga, and Memphis.

All these reach Baltimore at noon in time for close eastern connection with fast-mail trains, which thus, for $15,000 only, connect the South and Southwest with the North and Northeast. The expense is trifling, the benefit far-reaching. To abandon it is to retrograde in the mail-service, and to deprive the people who receive little of direct Government aid of the little they have enjoyed, and which they can not part with except by loss to trade and commerce. This is one unusual branch of it which the railway advantages (in direct and lateral connections) of Hagerstown, Md., enable the Government to reach many States by obtaining a special train on the Western Maryland road between Baltimore and Hagerstown.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN. I renew the formal amendment to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Why is there any more propriety for paying for this fast mail under discussion than for the fast mail from New York to the West?

Mr. HORR. Simply because the mails going West aggregate three and four times and in some places twenty times, as they do going over these Southern roads, and they can afford for the price they now get to give extra speed. They can not do it for a smaller amount.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are always sure of a full load.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct a statement made by the honorable chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. I intended to do it when he was upon the floor for fear some one might attach some importance to it. I was unable to do it then and will do it now. He said we had a fast mail by the Pacific railroads with an average speed of eighteen miles an hour. We did appropriate three years ago $200,000 for the purpose of establishing a fast mail to San Francisco, but the Postmaster-General had that money covered back into the Treasury, because these roads said they could not afford to give it to us at that rate. That is the reason why we have not a fast mail there.

We have a slow mail there, a very slow mail; and I submit to the House when the commercial benefits derived are so much in excess of the expenditure, we can not with any propriety to the business of the country restrict it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to correct the gentleman from Mississippi. The Postmaster-General in his report, which I have before me, alleges he has secured fast-mail service from New York by way of Chicago to San Francisco without the cost to the Government of one single dollar. He states that he puts the mails down in San Francisco, by arrangement made with the Union and Central Pacific Railroads, one day in advance of ordinary time of travel, without the payment of a single extra dollar.

The question recurred on Mr. NICHOLLS'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes, $5,700,000.

Mr. HORR. I move to strike out "seven" and insert "nine." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If the committee wants to vote, all right; I will not detain it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 36.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope my friend will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the gentleman's instance, I do.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For railway post-office clerks, $4,482,300.

Mr. HORR. I move to strike out "$4,482,300" and insert "$4,682,300."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before the vote is had on that let us know whether that increase is for an increase of the number of postal clerks or of the salaries of the number now provided by law.

Mr. HORR. It is the amount needed to put sufficient service on the new roads which have been already built and will go into operation during the next year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And is not to operate to increase salaries?

Mr. HORR. No, sir. The Postmaster-General estimates that it will take every dollar of it to provide for the increase in the service for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. RYAN. The salaries are already fixed by law in amount, and can not be increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 95, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General: For manufacture of adhesive postage-stamps and of newspaper and periodical stamps, $174,000. That upon all matter of the first class, as defined by chapter 180 of the law of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," and by that act declared subject to postage at the rate of 3 cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof, postage shall be charged, on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof; and upon all matter of the second class as defined by said act, and by that act declared subject to postage at the rate of 2 cents for each pound or fraction thereof, shall be charged, on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, except as provided in section 25 of said act approved March 3, 1879, 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof; and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter, are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. On the part of the Committee on Appropriations, and by direction of the committee, I am authorized to submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, after the word "thereof," in line 192, strike out all that follows down to and including line 202 and in lieu thereof insert:

"That upon all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1885, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound, or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of 1 cent for each four ounces, or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto, and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885."

Mr. LONG. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will accept the following amendment to the amendment which I am requested to offer. It simply authorizes the sender of a newspaper or other publication to mark any article to which particular attention is desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment just read:

"And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. For my own part I have no objection to that.

Mr. LONG. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have no objection to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is right.

Is an amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment to the amendment should be voted upon separately.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before that question is put I wish to be heard a moment upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment just submitted must be voted upon separately by the committee, as the gentleman from Illinois states that he has no authority to accept it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not authorized by the committee to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Now, before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to say a word or two. I do not know but that the amendment submitted by the gentleman in charge of the bill is sufficiently restrictive as applied to newspapers and periodicals sent to actual subscribers on which it is proposed to reduce the postage. So far as the reduction on such matter goes I have no objection to it. But a vast deal of rubbish is sent through the mail under the guise of newspapers and periodicals, and to this class of matter the reduction ought not to extend. I think we should guard against letting in anything but established newspapers sent to regular subscribers and periodicals regularly issued to actual subscribers. The proposed change reduces transportation on papers to $20 per ton across the continent, while for letters it amounts at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof to $640 per ton. The difference is very great, and it seems to me the reduction on letters is sustained by better reasons than the reduction upon newspapers.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in response to the opinion expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in his report on this question, and to dissent in toto from the opinion expressed by him therein. I read from that report:

That postage upon written and printed matter is not a pay for service by the Government, but a tax, levied as imposts and excises are, for the general purpose of revenue.

I ask the gentleman under what clause of the Constitution a tax of that kind could be levied? Certainly not under the clause providing for the apportionment of direct taxes, nor under the uniformity clause. It is in no sense a tax. It is compensation for a specific service; and I think that the compensation ought to be sufficient to pay on the average the cost of the transportation whether of newspapers and periodicals or anything else. I do not believe in taxing one industry or one business to give more profit to another. On the assumption, therefore, that 1 cent a pound will cover the cost of mail transportation of regularly issued newspapers and periodicals—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I shall not be taken off the floor by a call for a vote from that side of the House. You will require to have a quorum to do it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is in order, and the committee is out of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have occupied no time on this bill before, and I deem this an important matter, especially as expenditures for postal service already largely exceed the postal revenues.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] states that he rises to a question of order. He will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is due to every gentleman while speaking to have the attention of this House; and I make the point that there shall be order while the gentleman is speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no desire to take up time, but I do not propose to be taken off my feet by the demand of anybody for a vote. But I have said all I desire to say; and believing the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois who has charge of the bill imposes sufficient restriction, I do not desire to say any more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations another amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment last adopted add the following:

"That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties; but provided that the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment it shall be for the best interests of the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If there be no objection to it, let it be adopted without debate.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General in relation to this matter.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1885.

SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 31st ultimo, and have to thank you for the prompt and favorable manner in which you have acted upon the suggestions contained in my letter of the 29th ultimo.

I am glad to know that you are already prepared to manufacture the adhesive postage-stamps and postal cards, the contracts for which expire on the 30th of June next, and that you think that the stamped envelopes, which are under contract until September 30, 1886, can be included in my general plan of having all postal securities done by your bureau, provided the same can be performed as cheaply as by responsible private parties. Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Casilear, who were kind enough to respond to my request made of you on the 29th ultimo for a personal conference, and to whom I suggested the propriety of including the envelopes, were somewhat doubtful as to whether you would provide facilities for this particular work, and your letter therefore proves to be more gratifying than I had been led to expect.

In answer to your inquiry as to whether there is "any present law which will prohibit this (your) bureau, with the consent of the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury, from submitting bids at the next letting," I beg to say that under the present statutes I do not know of anything that would prevent you from submitting bids, or that would justify this Department in refusing to consider such bids in competition with those of private parties. So far from that, when the proposals for the contracts were advertised for, nearly four years ago, I strongly urged upon your predecessor and other officers of the bureau that the bureau enter into the competition. My suggestions, however, were unheeded, for the reasons given in your letter. You will also remember that I most cordially entered into the movement made by yourself some two years since, looking to the procurement of the work, and that I gave you all needed facilities for examining into the requirements of the contracts and for arriving at the probable cost.

I am very glad to hear you say now that "in any event I (you) shall feel it my (your) duty, with the consent of the Secretary and Postmaster-General, to submit estimates, in the nature of bids, of the cost of executing such classes of postal securities, as invitations for proposals shall be advertised from time to time." Notwithstanding this assurance, however, I think, and doubt not you agree with me, that it would be better to have legislation making the matter compulsory upon the Treasury Department. In the face of the reasons so strongly urged by you for giving the bureau a monopoly of the work, I still adhere to the opinion I expressed to Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Casilear, that you should come in merely as a competitor, and that the work should not be given to you absolutely. Admitting the justice of much of what you say in support of your position, I am yet disposed to regard the question somewhat from the standpoint of the interests of this Department, separately considered.

While not disputing the grounds of public policy laid down in favor of your bureau, and admitting the security and possession of facilities claimed in your favor, still I believe that there are some private concerns, notably the leading bank-note companies, who could with all reasonable safety be intrusted with the work. In the case of any such concern I do not concede your proposition that if the contract be taken "at a sacrifice of its pecuniary interests" there "would be a constant inducement to reduce the standard of the work, and the safeguards which are necessary to the proper protection of the interests of the Government." To a reputable concern holding a Government contract there are indirect benefits—in the way of obtaining work in the line of private and corporate securities and obligations, and also Government work for foreign countries—that I think this Department is justly entitled to take advantage of in providing for its work.

Such advantage would inure not only to this Department, but to the General Government, if the work should be done more cheaply than you could do it. In the case of such concern as I have mentioned, there could be no inducement to slight the work in an artistic point of view, since the same is undertaken for the sake of the credit it carries with it, and bad work would be hurtful rather than beneficial in the way of realizing the indirect benefits which I have suggested. The same would be true of the more material part of the work, of whatever nature it might be.

With regard to the security to the Government, any reputable concern may, I think, be relied upon to use its utmost efforts, through the best system of checks attainable, toward safely guarding the large monetary values represented on the face of the work, since, independently of the heavy penalty fixed by the bond, it would result in utter ruin to have any serious misadventure occur with the securities while in private custody. Moreover, if you will pardon the suggestion, it would be likely to serve as a wholesome incentive to enterprise and economy on the part of your bureau to be placed in competition with the better class of private concerns engaged in similar work to that done by you. And I think if your bureau were required to compete for the work it would be productive of wholesome competition, not only in securing fair offers, but in preventing combinations among private bidders with the view to securing the contract upon their own terms.

The bureau and private concerns will hold each other in check, and the result in any case is bound to be to the advantage of this Department in securing moderate prices. In any event the amendment proposed by me leaves the matter wholly in the hands of the Postmaster-General, and he may order the work to be done by your bureau without reference to the bids of other parties; and in my opinion he will be likely to do this if you are not found to be too much in excess of other responsible bids. I am free to say that there are reasons looking to relief from official responsibility that would incline me to give preference to your bureau, but not at too great an expense to the postal revenue.

Noting your suggestion that "the true and wisest course would be to transfer the work to the bureau without going through the unnecessary form of advertising and receiving bids"—"upon the ground of public policy, leaving matters of price and other details to be adjusted between the officers of the two Departments," I can only say that it might assist the officers of this Department in fixing the price to ascertain through bids received upon public advertisement what is considered by competent authorities to be a just compensation. If I may ask you to pardon another suggestion, it might prove useful also in determining whether or not work of this character can be done as cheaply and as well by the Government as by private parties; a question which, I believe, has been seriously disputed, and concerning the merits of which I do not pretend to be advised.

Upon further consideration, I have modified my proposed amendment somewhat, so as to read as follows:

"Provided, That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties; but provided that the Postmaster-General may reject any or all the bids of private parties, and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if, in his judgment, it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so."

The modification, as you will observe, does not affect the position previously taken with reference to your bureau, being essential only in expressly authorizing the Postmaster-General to discriminate among the bids of private parties. In view of the important character of the work, involving, as it does, the highest style of art, and underlying the very foundation of the entire postal revenues, only the bids of the most thoroughly responsible and fully equipped concerns should be considered at all, and even these latter are left to be rejected in favor of your bureau, absolutely at the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Acting upon your affirmative response to my letter of the 29th ultimo, I shall take immediate occasion to lay the subject before the Postmaster-General, with the recommendation that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, he request favorable action upon my proposed amendment in the Post-Office appropriation bill now pending before the House of Representatives. I shall also request him to inclose copies of this correspondence with his recommendation, so that your proposal, as well as mine, if this latter be approved by him, may be considered by Congress.

Before closing, I can not forbear expressing my extreme gratification at your statement "that all who are at all familiar with this work recognize the fact that the rates now paid are extremely low." I am glad to know that the fact is recognized by others than myself, that not only are prices in the present contract very low, but that there have been great reductions in the cost of supplies furnished to this office since the beginning of my administration of its affairs, on the 1st of July, 1877. As an evidence of the fact, I beg to submit the following table, prepared some time since, showing the number and cost of articles furnished during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, as compared to the number and cost of those furnished during the year ended June 30, 1877, namely:

Comparative statement of supplies furnished by the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Articles.	Year ended June 30, 1877.		Year ended June 30, 1884.
	Number furnished.	Cost.	Number furnished.	Cost.
Postage-stamps	704,836,524	$110,189 59	1,469,209,996	$135,974 47
Postal cards	170,015,500	226,463 94	362,876,750	197,466 33
Stamped envelopes and wrappers	185,401,895	428,224 63	324,043,650	619,231 21
Registered package, post-office, dead-letter, and official envelopes	15,310,700	52,504 11	39,021,960	102,830 88
Total	1,075,564,619	817,382 27	2,205,152,356	1,055,502 89

Comparison.

Articles.	Increase in number furnished.	Increase in cost.	Per cent. of increase in number furnished.	Per centage of increase in cost.
Postage-stamps	774,373,472	$25,784 88	109.8	23.4
Postal cards	192,861,250	*28,997 61	113.4	*12.8
Stamped envelopes and wrappers	138,641,775	191,006 58	74.7	44.6
Registered package, post-office, dead-letter, and official envelopes	22,711,260	50,326 77	154.8	95.8
Total	1,129,587,737	238,120 62	105.0	29.1

* Decrease.

It will be observed that for the year ended June 30, 1877, the total number of the various articles furnished—postage-stamps, postal cards, stamped envelopes and wrappers, registered-package, post-office, dead-letter, and official envelopes—was 1,075,564,619, costing $817,382.27; while for the year ended June 30, 1884, the number of articles furnished was 2,205,152,356, costing $1,055,502.89—being an increase of 1,129,587,737, or 105 per cent. in the number of articles furnished, and of only $238,120.62, or 29 per cent., in the cost of the same.

Taking the different articles separately, the increase of postage-stamps was 774,373,472, or 109.8 per cent., in number, and $25,784.88, or 23.4 per cent., in cost; of postal cards, an increase of 192,861,250, or 113.4 per cent., in number, and a decrease of $28,997.61, or 12.8 per cent., in cost; of stamped envelopes and wrappers, an increase of 138,641,755, or 74.7 per cent., in number, and of $191,006.58, or 44.6 per cent., in cost; and of registered-package, post-office, dead-letter, and official envelopes, an increase of 23,711,260, or 154.8 per cent., in number, and of $50,326.77, or 95.8 per cent., in cost.

The subject of the great reduction effected in the cost of supplies for this office was touched upon in my annual report for the year ended June 30, 1882, in connection with the mention of a new contract, then recently made, for the supply of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers for the four years beginning October 1, 1882, as follows:

"The prices in the new contract (for stamped envelopes and wrappers) average a reduction of nearly 7 per cent. from those in the old one. The law requires that stamped envelopes shall be sold at the cost of procurement, as near as may be, and accordingly a new schedule of prices has been adopted for the sale of the envelopes to the public at reduced rates. The present reduction follows one of about 20 per cent. four years ago, under the contract then made. Under the new schedule the best quality note size envelopes will be sold, exclusive of the postage value, at $1.60 per 1,000; of full letter size, at $2 per 1,000; of commercial size, at $2.20 per 1,000; of extra letter size, at $2.40 per 1,000; of official size, at $3.60 per 1,000; and of extra-official size, at $4 per 1,000. The second quality envelopes are sold at 20 cents per thousand less than those prices, and the third quality envelopes at 20 cents per thousand less than the second quality, for corresponding sizes.

"The full letter and extra letter sized ungummed envelopes for circulars are sold at $1.20 and $1.40, respectively, and the newspaper wrappers at $1 per 1,000, in addition to postage.

"To illustrate the great reduction in the price of stamped envelopes during the past few years, a letter-size envelope, which in 1869 was sold at $4.80 per 1,000, is now furnished in equally good if not better grade at $1.80 per 1,000. An extra letter-size envelope, which then sold at $6 per 1,000, can now be furnished in as good quality at $2.40. The official size, then sold at $8.60 per 1,000, is now offered in an equally good quality at $3.40 per 1,000. The public has received the pecuniary benefits of these reductions, the envelopes being sold by the Department, as before stated, at the cost of procuring them. Equally great reductions have been attained in the cost of other supplies. Adhesive postage-stamps, which in 1869 cost 27½ cents per 1,000, are now obtained at 9.19 cents per 1,000; and postal cards, first introduced in 1873, and then costing $1.39½ per 1,000, are now procured at 54.43 cents per 1,000."

Again thanking you for the prompt and courteous manner in which you responded to my suggestion of the 29th ultimo,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. D. HAZEN,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. N. BURRILL,
Chief of Bureau of Engraving and Printing,
Treasury Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire, and I think the committee will make no objection, to amend the bill by striking out from line 181, after the word "dollars," to line 192, including the word "thereof," and inserting what I send to the desk, in order that the section in the bill may be consistent with local postage as well as domestic. It simply makes the bill consistent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 181, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 192, and insert the following:

"That on and after the first day of July, 1885, upon all matter of the first class as defined by chapter 180 of the laws of Congress, approved March 3, 1879, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes,' except postal cards and drop-letters, postage shall be charged at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof; drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery is not established; and postal cards shall be transmitted through the mails at a postal charge of 1 cent each, including cost of manufacture."

Mr. HORR. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the point of order on that proposition until the effect of it is seen. I desire to ask a question in regard to it. I apprehend the effect of it is this: Under the present system in view of the advantages given to the cities having free delivery they pay something for the benefit of that free delivery. The effect of this is to relieve the cities having the benefit of the free delivery from the payment of additional compensation. Is that the effect of it?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As there will be debate on this amendment I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] to yield to me for a motion that the committee rise. It is understood we are to have a night session.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is so clearly in consistency with your own proposition that I think it will be unnecessary to debate it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7851) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. CALL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Is it understood that at the close of to-night's session, in pursuance of the order of the House, he will make a motion for a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing to do so, or that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] should do so.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not understand there is any unanimous consent to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been ordered by the House.

NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the question on the motion for a recess the Chair submits a communication from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a copy of the report of the board of managers of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, dated February 2, 1885, requesting an additional appropriation to extinguish a deficit in its accounts, and asking authority to reopen the exposition during the winter of 1885–'86.

A failure on the part of the management to carry out the original intent in regard to the exposition might reflect on the honor of the United States Government, since twenty-one foreign governments and forty-six States and Territories have joined in the enterprise through faith in the sanction of the Government. In view of this fact, and in consideration of the value of the exposition to the cause of material progress and general education, I respectfully submit the report mentioned for the favorable consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1885.

The message of the President was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, with an inclosure, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information as to expenditures of the naval advisory board; also as to any changes in the plans for hulls, boilers, machinery, &c., in the ships Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs present, but I move that the communication be referred to that committee, and be printed in the RECORD.

It was so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 11, 1885.

SIR: This Department has received a copy of the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 3d of February, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform this House the amount that has been expended by the naval advisory board as the cost of the board; the number of employés, and amounts paid each; the amount of salary drawn by the civilian members of said board, and from what appropriation it was drawn; and the amount paid each member of the board as traveling mileage, or other expenses; also, what changes, if any, have been made from the original plans in hulls, boilers, machinery, &c., by the Secretary of the Navy and the advisory board, of the ships Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin, and the cost of such changes in each case."

The advisory board has expended no money and has no power to expend money. All expenditures on its account have been made by the Department. The board was organized October 24, 1882, and during the two and one-fourth years of its existence there has been expended for furniture, stationery, drawing materials, and petty miscellaneous objects for its use the sum of $5,830.83. The board has no employés, but certain necessary assistants have been borne on the rolls of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair and Steam-Engineering, and assigned to duty with the board, six being now so employed. The sums affixed to the following names are the amounts of compensation paid such assistants to February 4: C. R. Hanscom, draughtsman, $3,380; C. Hemje, draughtsman, $2,763.50; A. Becker, draughtsman, $3,397; W. H. Scott, draughtsman, $508; L. Eidlitz, draughtsman, $164.50; D. Zevely, writer, $924; W. G. Coburn, writer, $813. Messrs. Hanscom and Hemje were previously in the employ of the Department, and were assigned to duty under the board.

The duties of the board have included, in addition to those on the new cruisers, much labor on the plans of additional vessels and for the double-turreted monitors and much experimental work, all required by law.

There have been employed as assistants to the inspectors of materials at the steel works, with total compensation as affixed to their names: J. H. Davidson, $1,570; C. W. Boggs, $231; J. C. Calderwood, $111; A. B. Russell, $90; F. T. Streeter, $566.50. These are no longer employed.

There are borne on the rolls of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and assigned to duty at Chester, Pa., under the inspectors of hulls of the new cruisers, preparing finished and other drawings of the vessels, with total compensation as affixed to their names, the following:

J. A. Hargan, draughtsman	$2,078 00
George P. Frothingham, draughtsman	1,635 00
C. H. Simonds, draughtsman	1,360 00
W. H. Hart, draughtsman	172 00
J. D. Torrey, assistant draughtsman	1,106 00
F. L. Dubosq, assistant draughtsman	1,117 61
W. C. Besselievre, jr., copyist	577 02
R. L. Berry, jr	218 42

A very small proportion of the amount paid the foregoing employés is due to the existence and maintenance of the naval advisory board, as the work done has been essential to the designing and construction of the vessels and to carry out the laws of Congress, and would have been equally necessary if there had been no board.

Mr. Henry Steers, as civilian member, has been allowed a salary of $5,000 per year, and has received for salary and expenses $12,084.58. Mr. Miers Coryell was allowed the same salary, and was paid for salary and expenses up to the time of his resignation, October 1, 1884, $8,112.58. These amounts were, by authority of law, paid from the appropriation for the new steel cruisers. The expenses paid the other members of the board have been only for traveling mileage, as follows:

Rear-Admiral R. W. Shufeldt (former president)	$129 44
Rear-Admiral Edward Simpson	513 04
Chief-Engineer A. Henderson	1,966 96
Capt. J. A. Howell	210 72
Lieut. Commander F. M. Barber	1,450 44
Naval Constructor F. L. Fernald	1,698 92
Lieut. Edward W. Very (former member)	301 76

Accompanying this communication are transmitted statements showing the changes made from the original plans of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin, and the cost of such changes in each case. The statements do not include those ordinary minor changes in details which have been found expedient and have been authorized and made from time to time as the work has progressed, without increased cost or any loss to the Government; but they do include all material changes and all changes involving any variation in the cost. They also embrace all additions of requisites not contemplated by the original designs nor included in the contracts and specifications, but which it has been deemed necessary to have furnished by the contractor in order to seasonably complete the ships for service and to add to their efficiency.

The contract cost of each ship, the cost of changes and additions to date, and the percentage of the increase of the contract cost for changes and additions are as follows:

	Chicago.	Boston.	Atlanta.	Dolphin.
Contract cost	$889,000 00	$619,000 00	$617,000 00	$315,000 00
Cost of changes and additions to date	31,550 50	20,955 75	21,991 93	15,880 97
Percentage	3½	3½	3½	5

After making allowances, in considering the above figures, for the additions which were not included in the original contracts, and of course were not contemplated by the contractor in making his bids, it will be found that the changes have been fewer and their cost less than could reasonably have been expected in designing and building the first steel cruisers for our Navy.

Certain changes require special mention. Before work was commenced on the machinery of the Chicago a change was made in its general arrangement. The condensers were placed under the beam-centers instead of outboard, the stroke of piston being made the same for both the high and the low pressure cylinders, and increased to fifty-seven inches. The valves were placed on the outboard instead of the inboard side of the cylinders, making them more accessible. These changes were made with a view to increasing the efficiency of the machinery, and do not affect the cost of construction.

The "substitution of eight blowers for four large ones," the "drilling instead of punching rivet-holes," and part of the "ventilators of engine and boiler-rooms" were required because of a change in the arrangement of the boilers and some modifications of the specifications. The change was made after the work had been commenced. The weight of the boilers in the new arrangement of five double-ended and two single-ended boilers with four fire-rooms instead of fourteen single-ended boilers with two fire-rooms was reduced, and the cost was thereby lessened; but the value of the work already done which had to be abandoned was equal to the reduction; and no allowance was made either way. This change does not alter the type of boiler, and brick furnaces and external firing are retained, but the greater subdivisions of the fire-rooms admits of a more advantageous application of forced draft, and an arrangement of bridge-wall and combustion chamber which gives more effective combustion of fuel.

Careful examination and test of the fractured part and other length of the steel shafting of the Dolphin caused serious doubts as to the reliability of the shafts of the other ships, which, being similarly manufactured, were liable to the same faults, and raised the question whether the art of forging steel shafts from single ingots has been so developed in this country as to make the results sufficiently trustworthy. To avoid all doubt and risk and to prevent the delays which would become necessary while applying a series of adequate physical tests to the steel shafts, it was finally determined by the Advisory Board and the Department to allow the contractor to put into the vessels iron shafts of approved manufacture which, if they stand during the trial trips and final trials, are to be accepted, the contractor, however, to allow the Government the difference between the cost of making the iron and the steel shafting.

Such steel shafting as has been already made is to be subjected to all reasonable tests for determining its strength, and those parts which stand such tests are to be taken by the Government and paid for as duplicate shafting at their cost to the contractor. If any parts are broken by reason of any extraordinary tests which could not be fairly insisted on for proof, considering the existing conditions of steel manufacture in this country, the Government is also to pay the cost of such parts.

The ultimate cost of this change to the Government is not yet known. It was undoubtedly a fair, wise, and prudent arrangement. In this connection occasion is taken to repeat the suggestions of the annual report of the Department:

"The law requiring the ships to be built of steel of great tensile strength and ductility has been complied with, and rigid chemical and physical tests applied to the material, causing much difficulty and delay and extra expense to the contractor, owing to his losses from rejected material, which, as in the case of the broken steel shaft of the Dolphin, was imperfect only because of the inexperience of our steel manufacturers in producing metal of prescribed strength and ductility combined. Patience, forbearance, and liberal treatment of the manufacturers are necessary in order to encourage them to undertake the development of the production in this country of steel plate and armor for naval vessels and ingots for heavy cannon."

Very respectfully,

W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State to pay drafts of the United States consul at Osaka and Hiogo, Japan, for the salary of the interpreter at the consulate; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MISSOURI, KANSAS AND TEXAS RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a claim of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, allowed by the Sixth Auditor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES R. CARTER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to pay claim of James R. Carter, of Fauquier Springs, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills with the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

Joint resolution (S.R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery, and which are now in custody of the Secretary of War; and

A bill (S. 1705) to provide for the issue of duplicate checks.

JANE D. BRENT.

Mr. WOLFORD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably a bill to increase the pension of Jane D. Brent; which was ordered to be placed on the Private Calendar.

ELVIRA BLISS SHELDON.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8185) granting a pension to Elvira Bliss Sheldon; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, and the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock; pending which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] moves that the House do adjourn. The question is upon the latter motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 97.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is not needed on a motion to adjourn. The noes have it, and the House refuses to adjourn; and the question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. LE FEVRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a favorable report from the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 36.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] makes the point that there is no quorum voting. The Chair appoints tellers, and designates the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WHITE, to act as tellers.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. My point is that, the House having already voted to take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock, it is not in order now to reconsider that vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] that the resolution adopted this morning was that at the conclusion of this day's proceedings the House would take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow. The proceedings of this day are not concluded until the House determines to end them.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if the House should adjourn that would cut off the recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt of that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. So that I do not see that that vote of the House amounted to anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no motion to adjourn pending before the House. There is pending a motion to take a recess.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report 101 gentlemen voting in the affirmative and 16 in the negative.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum. I move that the House do now adjourn. It is twenty minutes to 6 o'clock, and we are to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move a call of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I second the motion. We ought not to proceed without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion does not need a second. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that a call of the House be ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House is ordered. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HISCOCK (before the roll-call was concluded). I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess till 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAMB). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a recess be now taken till 8 o'clock this evening. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by making it 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). The gentleman is too late. The Chair put the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and there was no objection. The House is now in recess till 8 o'clock this evening.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., Clerk of the House, who directed the reading of the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1885.

SIR: Hon. RICHARD P. BLAND is designated as Speaker pro tempore for this evening's session.

J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Speaker pro tempore.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). The recess having expired the House resumes its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a privileged motion—that the House at 10 o'clock to-night take a recess to meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know that I understand the object of this motion. What was the action of the House on this subject this morning?

Mr. WILLIS. The House, by an almost unanimous vote, decided that at the close of to-day's session it would take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock; but in making my motion I did not fix the hour at which the recess should be taken, because I wanted the Committee of the Whole to continue the consideration of the appropriation bill till 5, 6, or 7 o'clock, as members might see fit.

The question being taken on the motion by Mr. WILLIS, it was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is there not a call of the House pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the House took its recess this evening it was proceeding with a call of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. MORRILL] be excused from attendance at this evening's session, on account of sickness.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. DOWD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this evening, on account of sickness.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment offered this afternoon by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has already been done.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would like to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania state exactly what changes this amendment proposes to make.

Mr. BINGHAM. The object of my amendment is simply to carry out that which is doubtless the purpose of the subcommittee that framed this bill and of the Committee on Appropriations. It simply makes the basis of weight of a letter one ounce, instead of half an ounce. Under the phraseology of the bill as submitted to the House this would apply merely to what are designated by the Department "domestic letters;" that is, letters from one section of the country to another. I desire the basis of an ounce weight to apply to local letters in a city as well as to letters going from one section of the country to another.

Now, I took the proviso that is in the bill and submitted it the Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, stating to him the purpose of the committee was to make the minimum basis of weight in the future one ounce, and asked him to examine the statutes, in order that it might be consistent with reference to the domestic letter as well as to the local letter. The amendment I have sent up is the amendment the Post-Office Department submitted to me. I examined it myself in connection with the statutes and approved of it thoroughly and wholly. It carries out what is the intention of the committee, that the minimum weight of a letter shall be one ounce instead of half an ounce.

Mr. HOLMAN. This proposition affects the free-delivery cities. Of course that is the purpose of it. Now, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we pass over this amendment for the present, leaving the point of order stand as it is, and come back to it again. It is proposed this evening for the first time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing to accept that suggestion, and I am sure when the gentleman from Indiana examines it he will see that my statement is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the committee will pass over this part of the bill with the understanding that before the bill is concluded the committee will return and take up the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. In what part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. After the word "dollars," in line 181, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 192.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is concerning letter-postage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and this part is passed over for the present, to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to make a verbal amendment to the amendment adopted this evening—striking out the word "upon."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. After the word "thereof," in line 199, as it stands in the bill, I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That has been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the rate of postage on second-class publications deposited in letter-carrier offices for delivery by the carriers of the office shall be 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia we pass this paragraph and the amendment on the same condition as in the case of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to insert after the word "dollars," in line 181, what I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to issue return postal cards, or two postal cards attached, one for use by the sender and the second for reply, in such quantities and under such regulations as he may prescribe, provided that the same shall be sold at the post-offices of the country at the rate of 2 cents for each such return card.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I hope the gentleman will waive that until I make an explanation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not do it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I do not desire to argue this amendment at all. It speaks for itself. It conforms to the custom of almost every other great country. When you write a postal card you can not inclose a stamp for reply. This simply folds another one with it, on which the correspondent can write his answer.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the point of order will not be made against it.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the gentleman had better accept that. It increases no expense, and is simply a matter of personal convenience. It will not increase your bill one penny.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Government will lose nothing.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will increase revenue.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It will increase the revenue instead of decreasing it.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will not incommode the Department, while it will add largely to the convenience of the people.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not feel justified in accepting the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it liable to the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order. There is a point of order pending made by the gentleman from Illinois, and I hope we will have a ruling.

Mr. MONEY. The law already provides for returned postal cards.

Mr. BINGHAM. They are not furnished by the Department.

Mr. MONEY. I think there is a law which provides for all these things. It also provides the Government shall not pay royalty for any of these patents.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I would like simply to say this in reference to the point of order on this amendment, that I believe it is in the interest of economy, because economy is traced to an increase of business of the Government upon which there is a profit. That is all I have to say, except that I urge this amendment in the interest of the convenience of the public.

Mr. HORR. It is evident, Mr. Chairman, that it will increase the receipts of the Government by increasing the sale of postal cards. A larger number of cards will be sent in order to receive a return reply than are at present used, which will necessarily increase the revenue of of the Government in this direction. There is no additional expense involved and I believe it will result in economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to be heard for a moment upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ANDERSON. As I understand this amendment it will reduce expenditures of the Government, and while it may change existing law, yet by reducing the expenditures of the Government it will be in order under the rule. That I affirm to be the fact for the reason that it is cheaper to print two postal cards on one sheet than it is to cut the sheet in two and print on each of the two separately. This will enable the Government to obtain 2 cents' worth of postal cards at a less cost on a double card than if it was required to have the double card split and printed on both its faces, as is done at present. That is the first point.

Now I wish to suggest also to the Chair that in addition to the saving to the Government in reference to the cost of printing the cards, it will reduce the expenses of the Government by increasing the number of postal cards used. It will have precisely the same effect which has always followed a reduction of postage; that is, by giving to the correspondent additional facilities you will derive a larger revenue from the double than you now have from the single card. For these two reasons I suggest that the amendment is in order because, as I have said, though it may change existing law yet it does upon its face, and will in fact, reduce the expenses of the Government.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Appropriations has been very liberal in making changes in existing law. It strikes me that we have gone as far in that direction as we can safely go without more mature consideration. This proposition has not been before the committee; they have not considered such a proposition, and to spring it upon the House now I think ought not to be tolerated.

It seems clear to me that it is obnoxious to the point of order. There are three things requisite to bring an amendment which changes existing law within the rule: that it shall reduce the amount of the appropriation, or that it shall reduce salaries, or else reduce the number of persons paid out of the Government Treasury. This proposition does neither. It does not retrench expenditures in any one of the three manners which I have suggested. It is, therefore, obnoxious to the point of order, and I insist upon a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, this proposition does not change any existing law.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then why do you want to adopt it, if the law is in force?

Mr. MONEY. I am not speaking upon the merits of the proposition, but simply as to the point of order. I say that the law already provides for this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the law provide for return postal cards?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir; it provides for return postal cards and return envelopes and letter sheets, and the only reason that it is not in use to-day by the Government is because of the provisions——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, turn to the law.

Mr. MONEY. Please do not interrupt me now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Just point to the statute upon that point.

Mr. MONEY. I have requested to be permitted to proceed without interruption. Then—

> Pray thee, take pain
> To allay with some cold drops of modesty
> Thy skipping spirit.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the gentleman should take his own drugs.

Mr. MONEY. And the only reason why this has not been in general use by the Government is because of the provision in the statute which says the Department shall pay no royalty for the use of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will not address himself to me.

Mr. MONEY. As you seem to need more information than any other person in the House, I was addressing you in particular.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for a ruling by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to hold that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GREENLEAF. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in immediately after the last amendment adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

And upon all seeds and bulbs embraced in the fourth class by the said act, and by that act subject to postage at the rate of 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof, shall be charged, on and after the 1st day of July, 1885, a half cent on each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve the point of order until the gentleman can be heard upon this amendment.

Mr. GREENLEAF. I offer this amendment not only in the interest of the seedsmen, florists, and agriculturists all over this country, but also in the interests of the Government itself. Under the operation of existing law seeds are now charged at the rate of 1 cent per ounce for all kinds.

The result of this is, as I am credibly informed, that express companies have the cream of the business and do the principal part of carrying short distances—that is, to the cities this side of Omaha—and the Government gets only what is left and carries these seeds only the long distances.

I hold in my hand a letter of one of the principal seedsmen in the country, known, I presume, by name to every member of the House, which gives some facts in explanation of this subject. I ask that it may be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., November 30, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our recent conversation, I desire now to hand you a few facts concerning express charges from Rochester. I may state that we receive the largest number of orders from those States named first in order on the list sent herewith.

Last winter Postmaster-General Howe sent a letter to Congress (which letter was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD) recommending that the rate of postage on fourth-class matter be reduced, as, after a careful examination of all fourth-class matter leaving New York city post-office, he had found that about 65 per cent. was delivered east of Buffalo, about 75 per cent. east of Cleveland, about 90 per cent. east of Chicago, and about 97 per cent. east of Omaha.

It may be possible that these figures are not exactly those quoted by the Postmaster-General, as, having lost my copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am compelled to rely upon my memory. But, in the main, I feel confident of their correctness.

From these facts I think it is clearly demonstrated that by continuing the high rate of 16 cents per pound the Government is driving the cream of the package traffic into the hands of the express companies, and the Post-Office obtains only that share of the mail intended for the far West or to points on long runs where the express companies have no offices, or where the postage is lower than the express charges.

Yours, truly,

JAMAS VICK.

Hon. H. S. GREENLEAF,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. GREENLEAF. Now, Mr. Chairman, a word with regard to the express rates on seeds from Rochester, N. Y.—known as the "Flower City"—to several of the principal cities of the country east of Omaha (which rates I think correspond with the rates to other Eastern cities), and it will be clear, as I understand the subject, that it will be for the interest of the Government, as well as for the interest of the agriculturist and horticulturist, that this amendment be adopted. I hold in my hand a list of express rates which will explain itself, and which I ask to have entered in the RECORD.

This list I have obtained at considerable trouble, and is as follows:

Express rates on packages.

From Rochester to—	3-pound package.	4-pound package.
New York	$0 25	$0 25
Philadelphia	40	40
Chicago	35	35
Cincinnati	35	35
Omaha	60	60
The postage at 16 cents per pound	48	64

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] reserved the point of order subject to an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If the Government admits seeds at all to get through the mails, I think the rate of 8 cents a pound is enough; and I believe the reduction of rate would increase the revenue rather than diminish it. If the Government can afford to transmit papers for 1 cent a pound, it can, I think, afford to carry seeds at 8 cents. I am in favor of the amendment, and hope the point of order will not be made if it lie. I hardly think it will lie against the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. If there is no point of order to be made against the amendment, I wish to say a word on it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it does not provoke debate I am willing the amendment should be voted on, and shall not make the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. The point of order is that it changes existing law. It changes the rate of postage on seeds and bulbs, and therefore is new legislation; and it does not retrench expenditures in either of the modes designated as legitimate in amendments to appropriation bills. It does not reduce the compensation paid to any person, nor does it reduce the number of employés, nor does it reduce the amount carried by the bill. And I may remark that I do not know it is strictly a matter of postal service to be sending bulbs and seeds through the mails.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion the point of order is well taken. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For transporting the mails of the United States in American steamships between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports of the Pacific touching at any foreign port, an amount not exceeding $600,000 of the net revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail-matter sent to foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the date of the contract for said service: Provided, That the contract for said service shall be entered into by the Postmaster-General only after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, for a term not exceeding four years, and at a rate not to exceed 50 cents per mile on the trip each way of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal ports for each trip actually made, which shall not be increased on account of expedition or increased number of trips: Provided further, That the general laws regulating the transportation of inland mails shall be applicable to such contracts, except as herein provided: And provided further, That vessels engaged in this service shall be of American registry, and shall, in time of war, be liable to charter or purchase by the United States at reasonable rates; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect from and after July 1, 1885.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make the point of order on this paragraph. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the state of the law. I ask that the Chair direct to be read sections 4007, 4008, and 4009 of the Revised Statutes, as bearing on this question and showing the present state of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the sections of the Revised Statutes which the gentleman has indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4007. The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contracts for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interests will thereby be promoted.

SEC. 4008. The mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, shall be transported in steamships; but the Postmaster-General may have such transportation performed by sailing vessels when the service can be facilitated thereby.

SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to suggest that he should also have read section 3976?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the section, I believe, which was repealed.

Mr. HAMMOND. It was repealed, the repeal to take effect next April; but it is the law now. I think the gentleman had better have it read.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But it would not be the law when this takes effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. It occurred to me that that section was repealed. I ask that section 3976 be read. It appears it is still the law, for the repeal has not yet taken effect under the statute of last session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3976. The master of any vessel of the United States bound from any port therein to any foreign port, or from any foreign port to any port of the United States, shall, before clearance, receive on board and securely convey all such mails as the Post-Office Department, or any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad shall offer; and he shall promptly deliver the same, on arriving at the port of destination, to the proper officer, for which he shall receive 2 cents for every letter so delivered; and upon the entry of every such vessel returning from any foreign port, the master thereof shall make oath that he has promptly delivered all the mail placed on board said vessel before clearance from the United States; and if he shall fail to make such oath the vessel shall not be entitled to the privileges of a vessel of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order I desire to present I think is substantially, so far as the present state of the law is concerned, based on section 4009. The Chair will perceive that the substance of that section is that the Postmaster-General may enter into contract with American vessels for the transportation of foreign mails at a compensation including both the inland and the ocean postage, which would be 5 cents a letter, being the entire postage on the mail which the vessels shall carry. Where the contract is made with a foreign vessel or with a sailing vessel, then the Postmaster-General shall only pay to the vessel transporting the mail, the foreign vessel or the sailing vessel, the ocean postage. That is the present state of the law. To that extent contracts are authorized to be made.

The pending proposition changes that law entirely, and repeals it. It provides as follows:

For transporting the mails of the United States in American steamships between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports of the Pacific touching at any foreign port, an amount not exceeding $600,000 of the net revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail matter sent to foreign countries—

All mail matter, as the Chair will perceive; not the mail matter sent by a particular ship, but all the mail matter sent to foreign countries—

during the fiscal year next preceding the date of the contract for said service: Provided, That the contract for said service shall be entered into by the Postmaster-General only after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, for a term not exceeding four years—and at a rate not to exceed 50 cents per mile on the trip each way of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal ports for each trip actually made, which shall not be increased on account of expedition or increased number of trips.

A new feature—

The change in the law, Mr. Chairman, is very manifest. The present law would pay those vessels the inland postage as well as the ocean postage on the mail carried. If the inland postage and the ocean postage on that mail would amount to $20,000 the vessel would receive it all, or at least such a contract is now authorized to be made under section 4009 of the Revised Statutes.

As affecting the subject of appropriations I desire to read the terms in which the law of the present year appropriates the sum of $425,000. I have not that law at hand, but have sent for it. It is quite important the Chair should have before it the exact terms of the law for the present year, being the same except in the amount of appropriation as for many years past. When the Chair shall come to examine this provision it will find that there has been appropriated for the present year $425,000 for foreign mail service. Under this appropriation, as the Chair will perceive, the Postmaster-General could contract with foreign vessels for the transportation of the mails for the ocean postage only, and could contract with American steam vessels for the transportation of the mails, paying them under the provision of the law the entire amount of postage, inland as well as ocean, to the extent of the $425,000.

Now, the amount paid during the last fiscal year to American vessels was about $55,000. This bill, instead of appropriating $425,000, appropriates $370,000 (being $55,000 less than the amount appropriated for the current year) for the transportation of mails on foreign ships. The language of this bill is:

For transportation of mails on foreign steamships, and for foreign administration, for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of foreign mails, $370,000.

Now, the corresponding appropriation for the present fiscal year is in the following language:

For transportation of foreign mails, $425,000.

Of course the whole of this could be applied by the Postmaster-General under section 4009 of the Revised Statutes, paying one class of vessels the sea postage, the other class of vessels—American vessels—sea as well as inland postage.

This bill, in the paragraph upon which the point of order is now made, proposes to change the entire law, not by a decrease in the amount appropriated, but by an increase to the amount of $545,000; and it provides that instead of payment being made on the basis of the inland and sea postage, these vessels shall be paid at a rate not exceeding 50 cents per mile both ways. There is the point of difference. Then it repeals all conflicting provisions of law now in force, including, of course, section 4009. The concluding proviso of the paragraph is in these words:

That vessels engaged in this service shall be of American registry, and shall, in time of war, be liable to charter or purchase by the United States at reasonable rates; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect from and after July 1, 1885.

Mr. MILLS. Is that the provision of the existing law also?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. None of these provisions are in the existing law. This is entirely new legislation, as the gentleman will perceive. It repeals section 4009; adopts an entirely new basis of compensation—not the simple ocean and inland postage, but a compensation not exceeding 50 cents per mile.

My attention is called to the further fact that the paragraph embraces new legislation in this provision:

That the general law regulating the transportation of inland mails—

Not sections 4007, 4008, 4009 of the Revised Statutes, shall be applicable to such contracts, except as herein provided.

There is a provision also for contracts for a term not exceeding four years, while the present law contains no such provision.

I call attention also to that portion of the paragraph reserving to the Government the right to purchase these vessels. This, of course, is new legislation. But the main feature of the paragraph is the repeal of section 4009 and the substitution of a new basis of compensation.

I trust the Chair will indulge me a single moment further. The first portion of clause 3 of Rule XXI is simply an old rule, which came down to us from former times, and has reference not to any change of law, but to appropriations in continuation of public works already in progress. It was designed to apply to such works of national importance as have been authorized and were in progress before the adoption of this rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects—

"Works" and "objects" being manifestly synonymous terms—

as are already in progress.

That provision has no reference to a change or repeal of existing law.

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The pending proposition increases the amount of the appropriation $545,000. It does so by the repeal of section 4009 of the Revised Statutes, by the incidental repeal of other provisions of the statutes, sections 4007 and 4008, and also by the enactment of new legislation not now in force. These are the grounds on which I predicate the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I take the time of the committee on a point of order. I have been a member of this House for a good many years, and I have usually been in pursuit of information as to what was in order and what was not in order, but this particular measure is of such far-reaching importance that I have been induced to give some attention to the question of order which it involves. I take it that any objection made upon the ground that the amount of money to be taken from the Treasury under the operation of this provision will exceed the amount which has heretofore been paid to foreign mail service will have no weight with the Chair if it can be shown that existing law makes provision for payment for foreign mail service. It is the function of the law to say what shall be done; it is the function of Congress to provide the means; and the necessity for annual appropriation bills consists in this, that the exigencies of the nation change with the rolling years, and that the appropriation bill is to accommodate itself to the carrying condition; sometimes granting more money, sometimes granting less money than has been found necessary during previous years. I shall not spend any time, therefore, in enlarging upon this very obvious point. But if the proposed legislation should be found to change existing law, and then the amount appropriated should exceed the amount heretofore applied to this purpose, I acknowledge that the provision would be open to the point of order.

The first question, then, to be settled is whether this provision in the bill which we have under consideration changes existing law. Prior to the passage of the act commonly known as the Dingley bill unquestionably this provision of the bill would have changed existing law. But by that bill, in section 23, it is provided that—

Sections 3976 and 4203 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and all other compulsory laws and parts of laws that oblige American vessels to carry the mails to and from the United States arbitrarily, or that prevent the clearance of vessels until they shall have taken mail matter on board, be, and they are hereby, repealed; but such repeal shall not take effect until the 1st day of April, 1885.

Now, section 3976 of the Revised Statutes required American vessels bound from any port in the United States to any foreign port to take on board the mails and convey them for a compensation of 2 cents per letter; under which provision, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has properly stated, a very small amount of money has annually been paid—I think he said $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Fifty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. To increase that amount by the sum of $600,000, unless that section had been repealed, would have made this provision subject to the point of order. But the section is repealed, and there is no provision left upon the statute-book which requires American vessels to carry the mails for a compensation which in the aggregate amounted, as the gentleman [Mr. HOLMAN] says, to $55,000. But we are told that that repeal only takes effect on the 1st of April next, and that therefore this provision of the statute is not yet repealed, that it is existing law, and that therefore this provision of this bill contravenes existing law. Mr. Chairman, the Dingley bill is existing law. That is the law of the land to-day. In that law the provision is that after the 1st day of April next these American vessels shall not be bound to carry the mails.

This provision in the bill reported by the committee comes before the House for the reason that the obligation to carry the mails will cease on the 1st day of April next. This bill is to take effect on the 1st day of July next, and thus does not go into effect until after the repealing clause of the Dingley bill shall have become a fixed fact and the obligation to carry the mail under section 3976 shall have ceased. It seems to me, not being much of a lawyer, but only a plain man of business, that if I had to deal with the question as the Chair will deal with it, from a common-sense point of view, I should take knowledge of the fact that on the 1st day of April next I should be left without any provision for carrying the mails, and I would proceed, as a good business man, to prepare for this contingency in time; and that is what this House is asked to do.

Mr. RANDALL rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. RANDALL. I want to reply. I thought you had finished.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Oh, no; I have not begun on the point of order. I am only approaching it by slow degrees.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought you were touching on the merits of the question?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have strictly avoided the merits of the question. I have not touched upon them, and I do not propose to touch upon them, and I may as well say now that nothing will fall from my lips in the discussion of this point of order which will indicate whether I am in favor of this provision of the bill or not. I am only discussing the point of order, and I shall not go outside of it.

Now, if I am right in saying that this bill makes provision for the cessation of mail facilities which will occur on the 1st day of April next, then we are brought to the question as to what the existing law does provide. The existing law in section 4007, which is not repealed, is this:

The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contract for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interests will thereby be promoted.

There is the broad authority for the Postmaster-General to advertise and enter into contract for the carriage of the mails between the United States and any foreign country. Is there any limitation upon that power? Do the statutes anywhere provide any limitation? Yes. In section 4009 there is this provision:

For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage, and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

Now, by the first clause section of 4009 the Postmaster-General, if he sends the mail by a United States steamship, may allow as compensation the sea and the United States inland postage. He may take the whole of the sea postage and the whole of the United States inland postage—all that he has got.

He may advertise and make a contract, paying all the sea and inland postage he receives. I know that is a startling proposition.

Mr. HORR. And that amounts to $1,800,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not care anything about the amount now. I am dealing with the law as I find it. I did not make this law, but I find that as the law now stands the Postmaster-General may make this contract by which the steamships carrying the mails shall receive the whole of the sea and inland postage. Gentlemen may say that is an absurd construction. Let us see what the second clause of section 4009 says:

And if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

On a foreign ship he is limited to sea postage "on the mail transported." But that limitation is not applied to a United States steamship. And by the very fact that it is applied to the one and not to the other it becomes a negative pregnant, and therefore gives to the Postmaster-General, as I said before, power to enter into contracts which shall absorb the whole of the sea and inland United States postage money on foreign letters, whatever the amount may be, and he is limited only by this amount.

I confess I should be very reluctant as Postmaster-General to take the responsibility of giving that construction to the statute, but such it seems to be.

Mr. HISCOCK. What other construction could you give it?

Mr. HOLMAN. How could you give it any such construction?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I once was on the committee which framed the Electoral Commission. There were thirteen lawyers, and I was the only layman. They told me that bill was constitutional, and I took their word for it, and I was abused afterward for having done so. I now leave my colleague from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], both eminent lawyers, to fight out the legal question.

I simply take this statute as I find it, with the ordinary common sense with which I try to carry on not only my own business, but my share of the business of this House, and I say the particular proposition seems to be true that the Postmaster-General by existing law may enter into contracts for carrying the mail, and that the only limitation upon his power to contract with United States vessels is the amount of the sea and the inland postage he has in his possession to deal with.

Now, then, if this position be true the provision of this bill is a limitation upon that power, for the amount he has to deal with is about $1,800,000 and the amount limited by this bill is $600,000. This, therefore, does not change existing law and does retrench expenditure in that it limits the expenditure from the sum of $1,800,000 and brings it down to the sum of $600,000. Therefore, as the provision stands I think it is entirely within the rule of the House from the fact it does not make new legislation and does retrench the expenditure allowed by the existing law, although retrenchment is not necessary to bring it within the rule since the repeal of section 3976.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, suppose the Dingley bill had declared that it should not go into force until 1895, would it not be the law now? The gentleman from New York admits it is not repealed—that the Dingley bill does not go into effect until April, 1885. We have not arrived at that date, and therefore 3976 and the other section, forty-two hundred and something, are existing law. Whether the 1st day of April will ever come, and with it the continued life of the Dingley bill, are things in the future. And the rule is applicable to existing law; that is the language of it, and we may before this committee rises to-night repeal the Dingley bill so that it shall never go into effect. But it is not the law now. Therefore, the first point taken by the gentleman from New York is not well taken, even if it related only to the two sections affected by the Dingley bill.

But sections 4007, 4008, and 4009, which have been cited by the gentleman from Indiana, are certainly existing laws, and this provision in the bill is inconsistent with every one of them.

The gentleman from New York, assuming he had gotten rid of the existing law, undertook by a specious argument to say on the face of this bill, by a certain knowledge of business he had, he could demonstrate it was a reduction of expense. The language of the rule is, shall reduce the amounts in the bill. So far from this reducing the amount in the bill, it appropriates a certain sum of money.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is not the amendment—it is in the bill itself.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is useless for me to read the rule. The language is, no amendment nor any provision of the bill. The committee can no more put in a section changing existing law, unless it changes it in one of three ways provided in Rule XXI, than I can do it. Otherwise the committee can do what it pleases. It would be a chartered libertine, and could do what it would take unanimous consent of the House to do without the sovereign permission of the committee.

If it does not change any existing law, why does any one want it here? Is there any law now declaring what sum of money the Postmaster-General shall contract for and with what vessels he shall contract for the carrying of the mails?

The gentleman from New York has said that if he chooses to bind himself by contract to ship only by American vessels, and pay to the limit prescribed in 4009, it would be more expensive than the amount laid down in this bill. But this very same section declares that he may allow that to an American vessel or he may employ a foreign vessel at so much per letter. May he not contract for the lower amount as well as for the higher amount; and if he may, does this decrease expenditures? The existing law allows him to contract up to a certain figure on an American vessel; this changes that law and it may increase the expenditure—I do not know; the gentleman from New York says it does not, that it decreases it; but you do not know. That is a matter dependent upon outside figures, but not appearing in this bill.

Is there any law now giving a subsidy to American ships other than that, limited, which he has read, with responsibility attaching to the Postmaster-General of making such a contract as would be ruinous perhaps when other ships would for less sums do the same service and equally well? This law now before us declares a new rule between any port of the United States or any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports of the Pacific touching at any foreign port. It makes a new rule as to the limitation of contracts—four years; it makes a new rule as to the rate per mile on each trip each way; it makes a new rule as to applying all the general law of inland transportation to sea transportation; it makes a new rule in declaring that in time of war the vessels employed to carry this mail may be chartered or purchased by the United States at reasonable rates, and also in repealing all laws in conflict with this act. This law itself put in here is not at all necessary to running the mail service of the United States. It is foreign to the whole business. It is simply a declaration that in order to encourage American vessels you will change the postal law as to carrying the mail on American vessels.

Would it be within the competency of this committee to report a provision allowing greater compensation for carrying the mails on a car made in Massachusetts than on one made in Oceanica? Would it not be utterly foreign to the business of appropriating money to carry the mails?

I am not arguing the question whether such laws would be good laws or bad laws. I am only saying they would be new laws, and laws that do not upon their face decrease expenditures by diminishing the number of officers, by a reduction in their salaries, or the amount reported in the bill under discussion. I have made myself understood by the Chair and ought not to consume any further time. It is to me a marvel that any gentleman can suppose this measure not obnoxious to the point of order under the provisions of Rule XXI.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to speak to one branch of the point of order, in which I think the distinguished gentleman from Georgia is in error. His position assumes necessarily for its maintenance that the Chair must be blind to everything on the statute-books except those which are presented here in argument. He assumes that this amendment necessarily changes existing law. If the Chair puts out of sight the act known as the Dingley bill, that is true; but this I assume the Chair will not do.

What operation then, or effect, does the Dingley bill have or propose to have at a future period upon the statute read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]? It repeals it, but not until April next. Now, because that repeal is postponed until that date, the gentleman from Georgia assumes that it is existing law and that this amendment would work a change in the existing law.

Why, sir, the very bill upon which this amendment is proposed can not have any force or effect as a law until the 30th day of June, a period after the other, the Dingley bill, goes into operation. Now, inasmuch as the Dingley bill can not repeal this section or these sections to which he refers until the time named in that bill, then, by parity of reasoning, the present act proposed to be amended can not operate or have effect or become a law until the time named in which it is to become operative. Then, applying the language of the rule wherein he maintains that it changes existing law, the Chair, to maintain that position, must assume that this law will continue to exist up to and after the period when the law proposed to be amended is to go into operation. This, Mr. Chairman, is an unsound position.

The rule invoked against this amendment must have a sensible interpretation. The repeal of existing law is immediate, if the bill to which the amendment is offered is at once to go into operation; but if it is to go into operation at a time fixed in the future, the Chair will look and see whether that law which is interposed and which it is contended is an existing law that it will operate to repeal will also have no existence when the present act goes into operation. As the Chair sees and knows that by the terms of the Dingley act this existing law which will be changed will not be law at that time, that part of the gentleman's argument necessarily falls to the ground.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for confusing the point of order, as made under the rule of the House, with other matters. The question simply is this, Is there existing law which authorizes the appropriation contained in this paragraph?

The prior law, subsequently repealed by the Dingley act, prescribed the amount to be paid for ocean postage; and the sum provided for in this act is in excess of the provisions of that law. The next question is, Did the repealing clause in the Dingley act create any new law which authorizes such an expenditure as is provided in this paragraph? I submit that there can not be cited any law, and that no construction can be placed upon any existing statute growing out of the repeal as contained in the Dingley act, which authorizes under the rule the making of this law unless it is in the direction of economy. And so far as I know there is but one gentleman on this floor who has maintained that the paragraph here will reduce the expenditures. When we appeal to common sense we might as well at the same time appeal to truth, and we know perfectly well no man can stand up here and truthfully say that this provision of $600,000 does not greatly increase the expenditures of the public money.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a question?

Mr. RANDALL. In a moment. Now I maintain first that this provision does change the law as it existed prior to the enactment of the law known as the Dingley act; and it is not material when that goes into effect, because the Dingley act itself provided no law in substitution, conceding that it changed the other law which authorized this expenditure.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been a misapprehension on this point. The assumption has been in all this discussion that the twenty-third section of the shipping act, approved on the 26th day of June last, repealed all the legislation providing for compensation to American steamships carrying United States mails. This is not true. There were two provisions of statutes that existed at the time that bill went into effect. First, one which authorized the Postmaster-General without contract to require any American vessel to take the mails of the United States and deliver them, for which it was to receive 2 cents per letter. This was the compulsory statute. But alongside of this, and still remaining the statute to-day, there was another provision of law contained in sections 4007 and 4009 of the Revised Statutes, which also authorized the Postmaster-General to enter into contract with the owners of American steamships for the purpose of carrying the mails of the United States, for which the Postmaster-General might pay to American vessels the sea and inland postage.

Now, it makes no difference, Mr. Chairman, whether the twenty-third section of the shipping act repealing the compulsory provision is in force to-day or not, the Postmaster-General under the law as it exists to-day is authorized to contract with the owners of American steam-vessels to carry the mails of the United States, with the only limitation that the sum paid shall not exceed the sea and inland postage. But the revenue from sea and inland postage during the past year, as appears officially by the report of the Postmaster-General, was $2,172,000, and the Postmaster-General to-day by the law as it exists, and by the law as it existed last June before the twenty-third section of the shipping act was enacted, is authorized if he chooses to contract with American ships to carry the mails and expend $2,172,000.

The provision introduced into this bill limits this expenditure to $600,000. It is in effect as if the language of the provision was that the Postmaster-General should expend only one-third of the sea and inland postage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in this view, taking the law as it stands, this provision reported by the Committee on Appropriations does limit the expenditure which the Postmaster-General may make to about one-third of the sum which he may expend to-day under the law. But the inquiry is made, Why, then, this legislation? Because, in the first place, the appropriation which has been made has not been sufficient for the purpose of carrying out the limitations of law; and in the second place, because the practice has been to use the compulsory provisions of law enforced upon American vessels and not enforced upon foreign vessels; and to-day with these compulsory provisions unrepealed American steamships have simply the same chance that foreign steamships have, the right to accept or reject an offer of the Government. And now with the law as it exists and as it may be enacted in this provision, limiting the amount to one-third of the sea and inland postage, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this provision is clearly in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand the argument which is advanced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], it is that the repealing clause in the Dingley act does not operate upon the two compulsory clauses until the 1st of April, and therefore they are existing law within the meaning of the rule. Now suppose the Dingley act had repealed those two compulsory clauses, to take effect the 1st day of April next and had enacted every provision in the pending bill excepting that appropriating money to take effect upon the 1st day of April next—I hope I am understood—suppose the repealing clause took effect as a compulsory clause on the 1st day of April, and they had put into their statute the provisions in this pending bill excepting the one appropriating the money—I mean the provisions regulating what shall be paid and so on—I ask gentlemen under what provisions of the statute would you have made your appropriation? Would you have said that the clauses of the statute that are to be repealed and wiped out on the 1st day of April next—would you have said that they were the existing law for the purposes of this appropriation? Would that have been your position? Yet you are forced to that position if you are right on this point. You are forced to say that under this rule you would be compelled to make appropriations to be expended under laws which are repealed as of the 1st day of April next, before the time when the money is to be disbursed, and that you could not make your appropriation with reference to the provisions of law which will be in force at the same time with the law under which the money is to be expended.

I have said this much for the purpose of illustrating the fallacy of the position taken by gentlemen here. The law under which you must make your appropriation, the law referred to by the rule, is the law under which the money is to be expended, and none other.

One word further now—and I am aware that I shall be traveling over the ground which has been so well occupied by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]—I ask these gentlemen if these sections that are repealed as of the 1st day of April next are in force—if they are actually in force to-day? Can you compel the Postmaster-General to have the mails carried under those sections? It is true that the Postmaster-General can compel these vessels to take the mails under that law, but there is nothing in the statute which compels him to enforce the law.

But, on the other hand, you have the sections that are referred to here under which the Postmaster-General has a right to make contracts. I have not examined those sections very critically, but my understanding of them is that they are provisions of law designed to meet a present necessity. A ship is in port; it is desirable to have the mail carried upon that ship; possibly there is no contract with her, and in a case of emergency the Postmaster-General under this statute can call upon that vessel to carry the mail. They are 'emergency statutes; nothing more nor less. It was not contemplated that contracts for the carrying of the mails permanently should be made under those statutes.

One point further, and I have done. There is a class of cases in which you are compelled to go outside of the statute to find out whether expenditures are reduced or not. In the rule we have this provision:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, sir, whenever the amount which is to be paid to a person or to a corporation out of the Treasury is not fixed by statute you are compelled to go outside of the law to find out whether by the proposed measure expenditures are reduced or not. Take a case in which the compensation is to depend upon the amount of service rendered; in such a case you are compelled to go outside of the law and to look up the facts in order to find out whether expenditures will be reduced under the bill which you are considering. If it is a salary or if the statute declares the amount of money, the specific sum, which can be paid, then you look to the bill; but where the amount is dependent somewhat upon the amount of service rendered and you have got to ascertain the amount of service which is rendered before you know how much money you will pay for the service, in all such cases as that you are compelled of necessity to go outside of the act to find whether you are reducing expenditures or not. In this case, as I understand it, there will be a large reduction of expenditure. Under the law as it stands a million and a half or two millions of dollars may be paid out, but by this provision the expenditure is limited to a much less sum than that, and in deciding upon this question you are compelled to look up the facts to find out whether there will be a reduction of expenditure under the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this provision is very clearly subject to the point of order made against it. It is subject to the point of order because it changes existing law and does not reduce expenditure, but, on the contrary, very largely increases expenditure. In the first place, there is no existing law now authorizing the Postmaster-General to make a contract for five years for carrying the mails either in American or in foreign ships, or on any of the railroads of the country, or by any other method whatever. Yet this proposition is to enable the Postmaster-General to make a contract for carrying the mail for five years.

Mr. DINGLEY. Four years.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, for four years. Now, there is no such provision as that in the Revised Statutes, nor can it be found anywhere in existing law. Therefore I say this does change existing law in that respect. Moreover, it makes a preliminary appropriation of $600,000, and if this contract may be made for one year at $600,000, four times $600,- 000 is $2,400,000. The argument strangely announced by my friend from Maine, that because the inland postage cost $1,200,000, or $2,000,000, and this provision appropriates only $600,000, therefore this is a retrenchment of expenditures, is an argument for which I can see no foundation at all. It appears to me to have no logical force or application.

Moreover, the existing law requires the inland postage to be paid on the mails transported. The amount of mail matter is the measure of compensation. There is nothing in the law to-day that does not regulate the compensation by the amount of service rendered to the Government. But this provision proposes to pay 50 cents a mile though the ship may carry but one letter. Yet gentlemen say that this provision does not change existing law!

A ship may start from New York to Brazil having, as was the case a few years ago, only one bag of mail-matter. In such a case under this provision that vessel would be entitled to 50 cents a mile from New York to Brazil and 50 cents a mile for another bag of mail-matter from Brazil to New York, although the cost of that transportation, according to the rates fixed by section 4009, would probably be only 50 cents for the round trip. Yet it is said this does not change existing law! It manifestly changes existing law in several respects. It is a departure from the policy of this Government, which is to pay for services rendered a fair compensation and no more; and just so far as it is a departure from that policy the idea of subsidy enters into it. The provision not only changes exisiting law, but changes the whole policy of this Government. I, for one, will never consent to any proposition that looks to taking taxation from the people and paying it to particular ship-owners in order to build up a fictitious system of marine service, when such things should come according to natural causes, and will come in due time if our people will be a little patient.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to occupy the attention of the House at this late hour in discussing a point of order; but being a member of the Shipping Committee, which has had this matter under consideration, I feel some interest in it, and was very much gratified when the Appropriations Committee reported their bill embracing this provision.

The question before the Committee of the Whole is whether or not this provision changes existing law; for I take it if it does not, the question whether it retrenches or increases expenditures becomes immaterial. The language of Rule XXI is:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures—

In one of several specified methods. So that the vital, the fundamental question to be determined in this case is whether the provision changes existing law. If it does not, all that has been said on the question of retrenching or reducing expenditures falls to the ground.

I maintain that it does not change existing law. The bill itself recites that "this act shall take effect from and after July 1, 1885." What law will be changed by the paragraph now under consideration? Not the section which has been repealed by the "Dingley bill," which goes into effect on the 1st of April, 1885; for on the 1st of July, 1885, that will be gone and out of the question.

An intimation was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] that it is not to be assumed but that that provision of law may be re-enacted, if you please, before the 1st of April. That is not a fair presumption upon which to argue this question. The presumption is that it will not be re-enacted, because it has been repealed.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Maryland will permit me to say that I made no such presumption.

Mr. FINDLAY. I understood the gentleman to say so.

Mr. HAMMOND. No, sir.

Mr. FINDLAY. Very well; if the gentleman makes the correction let it stand. I simply misunderstood him. There are others who understood him the same way.

Mr. HAMMOND. I corrected the gentleman from Maryland, not myself, as to what he understood.

Mr. FINDLAY. I am simply saying I misunderstood you.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought you said I corrected myself.

Mr. FINDLAY. I simply said I misunderstood you; and there are others who understood you in the same way.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am very glad you made the mistake, as it gives me this opportunity of making them understand me correctly.

Mr. FINDLAY. I think we understand each other now; and as this is not very germane to the discussion I shall proceed with what I have been saying. Having made my apology to the gentleman, I do not think it necessary to go further.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the state of the case? On the 1st of April, 1885, the existing law now on the statute-book passes out of existence. Then there come April, May, and June, three months during which there is no law upon this subject. Then on the 1st of July, 1885, this provision, if enacted, comes into existence. It can not come into operation by its own terms until that date. If the law with which this provision is in conflict should be in force on the 1st of July, 1885, when this bill proposes to go into effect, there would be a change of the law existing at that date; but as the law will not then be in existence, the law having been repealed three months before, there will be at that date nothing to change.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Assuming to be true what the gentleman has already said, will not this provision of the section be a change of existing law:

That vessels engaged in this service shall be of American registry, and shall, in time of war, be liable to charter or purchase by the United States at reasonable rates; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. FINDLAY. I understood the gentleman to rest the weight of his argument upon the first point I was discussing. If he abandons the first point, if he thinks that point answered, and now feels compelled to fall back on his second point, I will meet him there.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not abandon my first point, although the gentleman assumes that I do.

Mr. FINDLAY. I said "if the gentleman abandons it." I did not make the assumption; but it seemed to me the gentleman did abandon it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has asked whether or not the last proviso which he has just read does not change existing law. I say no; it does not change existing law; it simply adds to the law something not now in existence. It makes new law and does not change the old. If we are to go outside of the statute and into the principles of the law I do not admit it makes any change of principle, because in the exercise of the right of eminent domain the Government of the United States can take these vessels now and use them in time of war. This simply says that the vessels engaged in this service shall be of American registry and shall in time of war be liable to charter or purchase by the United States at reasonable rates. It simply gives it a power—embodies it here in the statute—which it has without the embodiment of that power in the statute. Therefore it does not change the law in that sense. But in another sense it is not a change of existing law. It only adds something to law where it is now defective. And so I say to the gentleman from Georgia his second line is no better than his first.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the committee will rise.

Mr. MONEY. I hope not, as I wish to be heard on this question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to submit an additional point.

Mr. MONEY. Had we not better dispose of one at a time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair prefers to hear all the points raised.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will state the additional point. It seems to be conceded, Mr. Chairman, by all that the provision ingrafted on the bill by the Committee on Appropriations is an entirety. I submit to the Chair this paragraph is an entire proposition. It seems to be admitted on all hands that each of the provisos is of itself a change of existing law. For instance, the last gentleman who addressed the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], admits the provision here that vessels engaged in this service shall be of American registry, and shall in time of war be liable to charter or purchase by the United States, is a change of existing law. It is further admitted that proviso does not retrench expenditure either in the reduction of the number of men employed by the Government or in the amount of pay given out of the public Treasury. And that last clause is clearly within the provision of clause 3 of Rule XXI. So it is admitted by all the gentlemen who have argued the point of order that each one of the other provisos comes within the range of the rule.

The point I submit to the Chair is this: That where any portion of an amendment, which is an entirety, is subject to the point of order the whole provision must be stricken from the bill. It has been so ruled constantly by various Speakers of the House. I will only cite the Chair to the decision made by Mr. Speaker KEIFER in the Forty-seventh Congress (Journal Forty-seventh Congress, page 1704), that whenever any portion of a proposed amendment submitted is out of order in any part it is sufficient ground for rejection of the entire proposition. I ask the Clerk to read that decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BELMONT, also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, namely:

"Resolved, That a special committee of seven members of this House be appointed with authority to report upon the causes of the decline of the American merchant marine, and to recommend to the House at its next session what changes in existing laws are needed to secure a revival of this interest."

Ordered, That said petition and resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

And then,

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. 859) regulating rates of postage on second-class mail matter at letter-carrier offices.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to amend by adding thereto the following as additional sections, namely:

"SEC. 6. Strike out the word 'three' and insert 'two,' on the eighth line of section 3903 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 7. Strike out sections 3905 and 3906 and insert 'that the postage on second class mailable matter be, and the same is hereby, abolished, and that such mail matter shall be conveyed in the mails of the United States free from postal charges.'"

Mr. PEELLE made the point of order that the said amendment was not in order, not being germane to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. MONEY made the further point of order that the said amendment, being the substance of a bill referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, was not in order under clause 4 of Rule XXI.

After debate on said points of order,

The Speaker sustained the same, and held that where any portion of a proposition submitted was out of order it was sufficient ground for the rejection of the entire proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold that this proposition is an entirety, and that the Committee on Appropriations have no more power to ingraft upon an appropriation bill a proposition of this kind than we have by an amendment offered in the House. I hold that they stand exactly in the same relation to the House, and under Rule XXI have the same power as we have, and no more. I hold further that the proposition brought in here, being an entire proposition, parts of which are admitted on all hands to be subject to the point of order, that necessarily the entire proposition is subject to the point of order if insisted upon, and I do insist upon it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GOFF, until February 16, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the House may now take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow, as provided for by a previous order, without waiting until the hour of 10 o'clock to-night.

There was no objection; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. Friday.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, February 13, 1885) resumed its session.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent the unlawful occupancy of the public lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate amendments will be read.

The several amendments of the Senate were reported.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question: whether this has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir; and unanimously reported by the committee with that recommendation.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, unless a separate vote be desired on some of these amendments, that the vote be taken in gross upon concurring in the Senate amendments.

There being no separate vote demanded, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, announcing that my object is, if possible, to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be limited to one hour and a half, with the understanding that the opponents of the bill shall have one hour, and the friends one-half hour of this time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I make the point of order that under the rules of the House debate can not now be limited on the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the clause of the rule applying to this subject.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the Chair desires, I should like to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the rule shall have been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

6. The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. As I understood the proposition of the gentleman, it is to close debate not only upon the particular paragraph under discussion at the time the committee rose, but also to close it on the rest of the section which has not yet been read.

In order that the importance of the decision upon this point may be fully appreciated, I desire, first, to say that debate would be closed upon that portion of the bill which especially needs exemplification and discussion. It will be remembered that at the beginning of the debate on this bill the time was absorbed by the committee who have it in charge under the direction and action of the House, and the committee, with the exception of the very luminous remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], gave us very little satisfaction on the subject of the Mississippi River improvements, which are involved, or liable to be involved, in the matter now in hand.

The Chair will also recollect that we had this question raised for the only time, at least during my membership of the House, in the discussion on the tariff bill in 1883. One side of this House was exceedingly anxious to pass the House tariff bill, the other side was exceedingly anxious that it should not be passed, and hence every provision was discussed at length—was discussed in the light of amendment and in every way—and it became apparent that if that discussion was to go on the majority of the House would have grave difficulty in passing the bill prior to the close of the session. Thereupon the motion was made to close debate on the section, which substantially included the whole bill, and I have no doubt the Chair will recollect the remarks which he as an individual made at that time, and I trust that his view in the chair may be the same as the view he took upon the floor and as the view which was taken by the permanent occupant of the chair.

I think it will be found that I did not participate in that debate upon the point of order. If my recollection serves me I did not; probably because I did not agree with my party friends as to the question. But in any event the proposition was then very strenuously opposed.

Now let me suggest to the Chair that in a parliamentary body all the presumptions are in favor of full and complete debate, and that it requires an absolute, positive rule of the House to justify the closing of debate. I say it is absolutely necessary to start with the idea that a closing of debate on the part of the House is a measure against which all the presumptions lie. In other words, there must be a positive rule of the House to justify the action in closing debate, because the normal condition of a deliberative assembly is that of debate; a proposition needs to be fully discussed. There never has been a case where, upon objection being made, so far as I know, this proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has been sustained. On the contrary, it has been the experience of every man in this House that a bill like this is discussed point by point and paragraph by paragraph; and this arises from the very nature of the bill, because each item is a separate expenditure, governed by separate and different reasons, and it is impossible to close discussion upon a whole section without closing it upon a multitude of subjects at once. So that the practical effect of such closure is to oblige discussion to range over a great number of subjects, whereas the rule and the principle of the rule has always been, and the practice under it the same, to have each item involving a separate appropriation discussed thoroughly or discussed at any rate by members of the House. And the rule provides, in order that there may certainly be discussion, that not until after discussion has been commenced can it be closed, thus insuring at least five minutes of discussion on either side of each proposition.

Now I know the language of the rule is that debate may be closed on the section or paragraph, and the question is whether that refers to different kinds of bills or whether it refers to the same kind of bills. I admit also that it will be found when you go back to 1860, when the rule started, that the debate would indicate that in the minds of those who participated in that debate, or, more exactly, in the mind of the proposer, the House was to have the alternative power. But I call the attention of the Chair especially to this principle enunciated by the permanent occupant of the chair.

I made a point of order the other day that resolutions of inquiry which were reported back under the rule from committees were not under the rules privileged, so as to be discussed and decided at once, and the permanent occupant of the chair informed the House that if it were a new question he might decide otherwise; but that a custom had grown up, a custom which has certainly not existed any more than two Congresses, by which he should feel constrained to be governed. Now that custom has grown up, but without a single point of order within my recollection having been made on the subject. If, then, the custom is controlling in that, it certainly must be controlling in this; for for twenty-five years, so far as I know, this custom has obtained. I say so far as I know, for nobody can tell without having made a thorough search what there may possibly be in twenty-five years of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and Globe. But I am very certain that during the eight years that I have been here the custom has been universal, and that no decision can be found by any presiding officer to the effect that debate can be closed on a provision of the bill which has not yet been read.

My argument then is this: that the normal condition of a deliberative assembly is one of free and untrammeled debate; consequently that it should be clear that the rules of the House permit the majority to limit the rights of individual members; and that the universal custom of the House, the reason and sense of the situation, all show that this motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky is out of order, and I trust the Chair will so rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, and the argument submitted by him would in the opinion of the Chair be very well directed to a general appropriation or revenue bill. The river and harbor bill has been held more than once to be neither a general appropriation bill nor a revenue bill. The debate to which the gentleman alludes affecting the tariff bill, in the judgment of the Chair, does not apply in this case. If this were a general appropriation or a revenue bill the Chair would have no doubt as to the correctness of the views of the gentleman from Maine; but as a river and harbor bill has never been held to be either one or the other, the Chair does not think the point of order is well taken. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read the sixth clause of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not disposed to bar the House of its right to debate. The Chair——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is now endeavoring to state its ruling, and will hear the gentleman later. The Chair has no disposition to bar the House of its right of debate. It is within the power of the House to continue debate upon this section, or the paragraph, as long as it pleases; but under the clause of the rule read by the Clerk, this being neither a general appropriation nor a revenue bill, it is clear to the mind of the present occupant of the Chair that it is competent for a majority of the members here present to limit debate upon the pending section. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to take an appeal; but would it be too much to ask the Chair to state the difference between this bill and a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated its opinion and made its ruling, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] appeals.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not mean to yield the floor unless I have to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not require the gentleman to do that, because it has not the power.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have now made an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I have had too much experience in this assembly not to know how it is liable to act, but I propose, for my part, so far as I am able, to do my duty in regard to this matter. I desire to say to the House that this is establishing a precedent of a most astonishing character—a precedent which must necessarily recoil on both sides of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether, in discussing this question, the House can be lectured?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to confine himself to the proper discussion of the question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the Chair be kind enough to point out wherein I have deviated from parliamentary rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks that the gentleman is addressing himself to the appeal which he has made from the ruling of the Chair on the point of order that he submitted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Surely I may be allowed to speak of the importance of this matter. Surely that is legitimate discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that all discussion upon a point of order is in the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Not upon an appeal, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair admits that upon an appeal the gentleman has a right to discuss the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order he has submitted——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair hopes that the gentleman will do that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I shall certainly do so. I call the House to witness that the language I have used is legitimate and proper argument, and that it is not lecturing the House, because, among other reasons, the House has not yet passed upon this question.

Here is a question which involves the freedom of debate, and I beg that this House will not, on account of affection for any particular bill, deliberately establish a precedent which in its results, as I have said before, is sure to recoil upon both sides of the House; is sure to deprive the House on some important occasion of the right to debate. I have endeavored to obtain from the Speaker now occupying the chair the grounds on which he makes a difference between the bill now before the House and general appropriation and revenue bills, and I venture to say that it will not be possible for any member on the floor, or anywhere else, to state any real ground of difference between the bills under the rule, the interpretation of which is in question, because the rule which was read by the Chair in its decision expressly includes every bill; and if it be true that this House can deprive a minority of the right of discussion upon this bill, then it can do so upon every bill that comes before the House.

Let me explain what I deem to be the great fallacy—I say it with perfect respect toward the present occupant of the chair and toward the Chair—the very great fallacy which seems to me to lurk under one suggestion which has been made by the Chair, the proposition that this House need not close debate on the section unless it chooses. Just there is the mistake. I am not now struggling for the rights of the majority; I am struggling for the rights of the minority; and I say that, under the rules of this House, the majority of the House have not the right to close debate except under the rules, and that consequently the ruling of the Chair, if sustained, does cut off the minority, provided the majority choose to exercise that power if the House gives it to them. What is the rule? Let me read it again for the information of the House:

The House may by vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill.

Now, certainly the word "bill" there includes general appropriation bills, includes revenue bills, includes river and harbor bills, and all other bills that can be brought before the House or the Committee of the Whole. Consequently, if this ruling be sustained, the distinction made by the Chair can not be sustained. You will find yourselves, and we shall find ourselves, cut off from the discussion of tariff bills, cut off from the discussion of general appropriation bills, and I would like to ask what condition the House will be in then? It has no power to do general legislation now; under this ruling it can not discuss the river and harbor bill; it will not be able to discuss an appropriation or a tariff bill; and, if that is to be our condition, I should like to know why we meet at all. What would be the object of our coming together except to record without word or murmur the opinions of the temporary majority of the House? That is not the object of a deliberative assembly. That strikes at the very foundation of a parliamentary body.

I had at my desk (but some one has taken it) the debate which occurred on this question in the year 1883, and I commend the reading of that to the majority of this House. That debate was participated in by the present occupant of the chair and by the permanent Speaker of this House. There is not one word in any of the remarks made by those gentlemen which is not applicable to the present question. They were both of them very strenuously of the opinion that the majority of this House had not the right to deprive the minority of the power of discussion upon portions of a section which had never been read.

Let the House consider for a moment the existing condition of things. One-half of a section has been read; it has been commented on, paragraph by paragraph; and now it is deliberately proposed that all debate, except such as the majority choose to allow, shall be cut off upon the rest of the section, which has not even been read to the House. For my part I can not conceive of a more singular and astonishing proposition.

Let me further say to the House that this question becomes especially important on this very bill. We are coming to sections which involve the expenditure of millions of money. There are three hundred and twenty-five men who have the right of discussion of those measures. The Mississippi scheme, the Hennepin Canal, and the Galveston Harbor appropriation are involved in this. Yet it is proposed under this ruling to limit three hundred and twenty-five men to an hour and thirty minutes in the discussion of these questions, when the rules of this House give a right of five minutes' discussion pro and con on every item; and the custom of the House gives a much less limited right of discussion.

I am aware that what I have said would have been very much illuminated by the remarks made on the occasion to which I have referred by the gentleman who is now our permanent Speaker and by the present occupant of the chair; and I am sorry that I am not able to present them. Perhaps some gentleman can favor me with the volume? Has the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] the debate at hand?

Mr. WILLIS. No; I have not. I have the Journal here.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Has the Speaker that debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not the volume.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If he has I shall be very much obliged——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not that debate at hand; he has the ruling made on this question by the permanent Speaker of this House, which after a while the Chair will ask to have read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. By the present Speaker of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the present permanent Speaker of this House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I shall make but a single suggestion on this question. We have in this House a custom, which I suppose has its authority in the construction of the rules—a custom under which we read a section or a paragraph, as the case may be, to which amendments and discussion are to be directed. We read the section or paragraph before either amendment to it or discussion upon it is in order. If it had been the policy in the consideration of this bill to read this entire section before receiving amendments or entertaining discussion upon it, I could very well understand how the ruling of the Chair might be proper and right under the rules.

My understanding is that all the matter upon which you would limit debate must be read in the committee before a motion to limit debate upon it is in order. If in the consideration of this bill we had read the entire section before receiving amendments or allowing discussion, there would be, I concede, ground for the ruling made by the Chair. But we have adopted an entirely different policy—a policy and practice which have always obtained in this House, reading first a part of the section, the paragraph, and then receiving amendments to the paragraph and discussing those amendments.

It is entirely competent to limit the debate upon a part of the section which has been read and considered in that way, and upon all amendments which have been made to that paragraph. But when we go further than that, and attempt to limit discussion upon a part of a section which has never been read and which has not been before the committee, it seems to me, with all deference to the judgment of the distinguished occupant of the chair, we are violating every usage of the House and violating the spirit of the rule.

I submit is it competent, is it orderly, that we should go into Committee of the Whole and debate under the five-minute rule a section before that section has ever been read?

I ask if the Chair were presiding in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union whether he would allow discussion under the five-minute rule until the subject-matter upon which general debate had been closed by order of the House had been read and the section, paragraph, or proposition was thus before the committee under the five-minute rule?

Under the ruling appealed from, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why it is not entirely competent and proper to go into Committee of the Whole and have the gentleman who has charge of the bill, after general debate has closed, apply the five-minute rule on the section before it has been read at all, and amendments be received to it before it has been read, go then back into the House and cut off, if the House is of that mind, discussion entirely on the section which has never been read at all, and has not been before the House by the reading provided for in the rules. And in this way you may cut off the whole consideration of the bill. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I have desired to enter my protest against the ruling which has been made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, my interest in this point is not connected with the bill under consideration; but it seems to me we are settling here a very important principle. As was suggested to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH], if the construction now urged is to be carried out, the arrangement of a bill into sections being a mere matter of convenience, it will be in the power of any person or committee reporting a bill to put that whole bill in one section and then immediately cut off the debate upon it.

The rule reads as follows:

6. The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this rule is two rules, not one; two rules are embraced in one formula. Those two rules are these: First, the House may, by the vote of a majority, &c., close all debate upon any section; second, the House may, by the vote of a majority, &c., close all debate on any paragraph. The language of the rule is "section or paragraph;" in other words it is disjunctive, making two rules, the second of which, that as to a paragraph, giving the same limitations and rights of debate on a paragraph which otherwise, under the first, would be given only to a section. After the five minutes' debate has begun on a paragraph, that is, after it has been read and debate has begun upon it, the House by a majority of its members may close debate on that paragraph. So, too, after a section has been read and the five minutes' debate has begun on that section, then you may close debate on that section. Therefore it follows that whenever any paragraph has been read and the five minutes' debate has begun, then and only then debate thereon may be closed. So, too, under the other part of the same rule, a section must first be read in regular order—the whole section; debate must begin on that section, and then and then only a motion is in order to close debate thereon. Until the whole section has been read, until the five minutes' debate has begun on that whole section, a motion is not in order to close debate; otherwise the rights of debate are cut off; otherwise, as the gentleman from New York has said, any committee may report a bill in one section and deprive this House of debate. This principle is too important to be sacrificed.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts find any rule anywhere which would prevent the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House putting the bill making appropriations for the rivers and harbors of the country into one paragraph?

Mr. LONG. I know of none; that is the very argument I make.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have the floor. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has thirty-five minutes remaining of his hour.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to enter into any discussion on the point of order now before the House. My only desire at the present time is to say a word in the interest of the bill and suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] who has it in charge that in all probability it might reach consideration in the House at a much earlier hour if this question as to limiting debate should be held in abeyance for a little time. The vote taken by the House yesterday evening on the proposition to enter upon the consideration of the bill at this hour indicated very clearly the friendly feeling of the House toward it. I believe if a fair discussion can be had, if a reasonable time be allowed for that purpose, and if the gentlemen who are opposed to certain provisions of the bill are permitted to offer such amendments as they deem necessary, that there will be little or no opposition manifested to its passage; and I submit that it is due to those who have had no opportunity of being heard that they have some consideration shown them in this regard.

There are many important provisions in this bill which have not yet been discussed. Many members of this House think they have a right to be heard in the expression of their views against these provisions. It is just to them and just to the constituency they represent that they should have a reasonable opportunity at least to present their views to the House. None of them I am sure will urge any factious opposition but merely endeavor to protect the interests of their constituents, which they believe are now left without the protection which should be afforded under the provisions of this bill.

And up to this time it can not be denied, whether done purposely or not I will not undertake to say, that the committee having this bill in charge have occupied a very large portion of the time during which it has been under discussion, and now to limit all further debate upon the remainder of the bill to one hour and a half would be to deny to many members a right to which they are entitled.

During the whole time the bill was under consideration in the committee-room no member of the House, I believe, was permitted to lay his views before the committee. Since it has been before the House only a very small number of gentlemen who desired to speak have had an opportunity of discussing it, or of offering any amendment to it. This was unjust to them and may result in leaving important interests wholly unprotected.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman to state that if he will remember, although the committee occupied the greater portion of the time, yet there were several members of the committee who addressed the House in opposition to the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. That may be. I do not know how that was, nor am I complaining of the distribution of the time, but was only going to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that it might be better to let the discussion proceed this morning, ascertain the feeling and temper of the House in respect of further discussion, and how many gentlemen yet desire to speak. By pursuing this course, in all probability by to-morrow or the next day he will be enabled to have the bill in such condition as to submit it to the House for final action. I have no doubt that the House will cheerfully grant him for to-morrow and for the next day the same favor that has been accorded him to-day, in order that the bill may be fairly considered and that no gentleman may have any just cause of complaint. If this suggestion is adopted and an opportunity given to the few gentlemen who entertain decided views and convictions upon this subject to express them, I have no doubt that in a very few days the bill may be finally acted upon by the House and go to the Senate for its concurrence.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to submit to the Chair, in the first instance, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the House, and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] should prevail, and the debate be limited thereunder, would it be in order to submit either an amendment or remarks upon paragraphs of the bill which had not been reached and read under this order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Amendments to the bill would be in order, but debate would be closed by order of the House should the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevail.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not understand the Chair to answer my question fully.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Possibly the Chair does not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would it be in order to submit amendment or debate upon a portion of this section of the bill until it had been reached in its regular order and read under this ruling of the Chair should the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevail?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in response to the gentleman that amendments may be submitted and would be pending should the motion prevail. But the gentleman from Michigan will perceive, under the ruling of the Chair, if on the appeal that ruling shall be sustained and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevail, that debate would be limited upon this section and such amendments as may be offered to the time indicated by him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Chair has not answered the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has answered the gentleman as distinctly as he can.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I beg pardon of the Chair, but the point of my inquiry is simply this: We have before us a bill of some fifty pages. But ten of these pages have been read. Under this decision of the Chair, if it should be sustained and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky shall prevail, the entire debate will be limited to the portion which has been read. Now, if the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky shall prevail, I submit that it is manifest to every gentleman upon the floor that the entire hour and a half would be consumed in debating probably a single proposition in that bill, and no gentleman interested in any other portion of the bill beyond page 13 would have any opportunity of debate whatever. Therefore I put the question to the Chair, whether we could debate a proposition before it has been read in the bill if this motion prevails?

Mr. WILLIS. The whole section remaining will be read and be open to debate and amendment. The only point is that the debate will be limited to one and a half hours, one hour of which time will be devoted to the opponents of the measure and one-half to its friends.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I make this inquiry more as a friend of the bill than as an opponent. I desire to see the bill in some proper form pass the House at this session and become a law, and I desire to see it put in a form in which it can pass and become law before the close of this session.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the ruling of the Chair as closely as I could, and I do not understand the Chair to hold, nor have I been able to find in the rules, any different provision as to general appropriation or revenue bills from those that apply to all bills, so far as the point of order is concerned. I do not believe that there exists any substantial difference, or that there should exist any; and I desire to read to the House very briefly from the remarks of the present Speaker of the House, Mr. CARLISLE, made upon the discussion of a similar question in the Forty-sixth Congress.

After reading clauses 5 and 6 of Rule XXIII, he says:

Now, we have invariably treated each separate and distinct clause of an appropriation or revenue bill as a paragraph; we have proceeded upon that rule throughout the whole of the consideration of this bill, even up to the very moment when the gentleman from Kansas submitted his motion that the committee rise.

Now I ask the particular attention of the House:

His proposition now is to do what has never yet been done or attempted to be done in this House since the organization of this Government so far as I know; that is, to go forward from the stage to which the House has arrived and close debate upon paragraphs and clauses and subjects not yet reached, not yet read, or considered in any manner by the House and to which no amendments have as yet been offered. And if the gentleman from Kansas can cite a single instance in the history of this body where such a motion as that has ever been entertained I shall have nothing more to say. The gentleman knows that no such proposition can be entertained by the Chair under the rules of the House.

Now observe this:

He knows that when we had under consideration in the last Congress the river and harbor appropriation bill which consumed a great deal of time, a bill which everybody was anxious to reach, where all of the various expedients which are admissible under the rules were resorted to with a view of taking it from the committee and bringing it into the House, he must remember that with all of the anxiety that prevailed to get that bill passed no gentleman upon this floor ever ventured to offer such a proposition as he now submits.

So spoke the present Speaker of the House of Representatives when he stood with the minority, not only touching revenue bills and general appropriation bills, but touching river and harbor bills and all other bills. It occurred to me then and it occurs to me now that he spoke well. And I hope this House will pause long before they will make a rule that does not now exist or make a distinction that does not stand in sound reason.

It is much better that this river and harbor bill should be a few days longer delayed in its passage than that a precedent should be made here which will return to plague the House not only perhaps in this Congress but in future Congresses. And I want to urge upon this side of the House, as we are now in the minority and to continue in the minority next Congress, that we owe it to ourselves to see that these rules do not receive such interpretation as will cut off fair debate.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask the gentleman from Illinois how did he vote at the time the matter was discussed?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect how I voted or whether any vote was taken.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There was no vote.

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect that there was a vote upon it. But however I may have voted or not voted under these rules, and in the light of this discussion I feel assured that the ruling of the Chair ought not to stand. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has marked a passage, which I will also read, from the remarks of the present occupant of the chair, the Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will read the passage to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred.

I desire to refer the House to the particular date of the debate which has been alluded to so that they may consult it. The debate in question occurred on the 17th day of February, 1883, and will be found in volume 61 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the year 1883.

The proposition was precisely the same as is made to-day, and it excited indignation on the part of members on both sides. The part which was taken in it by the permanent Speaker of the House has been read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and it is full and conclusive on the subject.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] also participated in the debate, and gave utterance to one very fruitful sentence:

I answer him and the gentleman from Pennsylvania that these rules were intended for the minority, as a shelter against the majority, against the mere whims and caprices of both the Speaker or the majority, that being the object of all rules and all must abide by them.

I desire to add that that same gentleman protested against this identical doctrine. Mr. Robinson, of Massachusetts, now the governor of that State, then, as now, a Republican and in favor of the bill which this proposed action of February 17, 1883, would have aided, makes very strenuous declaration against it on common-sense grounds. He says:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something before the point of order is decided. I do not believe this motion to be in order, and I do not think it would be a safe practice for the House of Representatives to entertain any such motion in the present stage of the business, and feeling that conviction sure, I can not allow myself to sit still and not express my view of the matter.

Then he says further:

If it is only printed in one section it may be forced down the throats of members without an opportunity to debate or amend it. [Applause.]

And the applause came from both sides of the House apparently.

I want to speak here for myself and protest against such a position.

It will be found that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], an ex-Speaker of this House, and a distinguished parliamentarian, in that debate expressed precisely the same views. And lest I may seem to do injustice to the present occupant of the chair, I will read some observations which he made:

The gentleman from Kansas need not apologize for failure to cite precedents. Neither he nor any other man here or elsewhere can sue out a search warrant and find a precedent for the motion he makes. There never was a revenue bill or an appropriation bill considered in this House where it was ever attempted to close debate except upon the subject-matter which had already been considered in the Committee of the Whole.

And it will be observed that there is no limitation there to general appropriation bills; it is no revenue bill and no appropriation bill of any kind.

Then the gentleman says again:

You may succeed in thus gagging the House, but you can not gag the American people, and you shall not gag their Representatives without a protest being made before you do this thing after a fashion which is more adroit than it is either honorable or manly. I will now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

And the gentleman from Georgia expressed himself at length in opposition to the doctrine contained in the ruling of the present occupant of the chair. So, then, in the only case which has been found of record by the distinguished gentlemen who have brought it to the attention of the House it appears that members upon both sides of the House, with great forcibleness of language, repudiated the proposition, and it was abandoned by its author. The matter never came up again in the House and was never passed upon. That abandonment is practically equal to a decision, and a decision of the most determining character, on the part of the House.

I beg leave now to reaffirm that there is no possible distinction between "bills" under the clause of the rule which has been read here more than once this morning, and that if this decision covers anything, it has got to cover revenue and appropriation bills; but if the House has determined to face this question and to cut off debate—in the language of the present occupant of the chair—to "gag the Representatives of the American people," I do not suppose that anything I can say can prevent it. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I only desire a moment to impress upon this House the practice that we have always followed and to confront the House with this startling proposition: that under this ruling you may bring in here at any time a bill covering a hundred or a thousand paragraphs and millions of money, and, before one sentence of it has been read, after general debate has been closed, you can take the floor under the five-minute rule and limit debate upon all those paragraphs.

I appeal to the present occupant of the chair: If he was presiding in Committee of the Whole, would he entertain either an amendment to a section or an amendment to a paragraph, or debate upon a section or debate upon a paragraph, until it had been read in committee? And yet this decision deprives us of the power of debate upon propositions which have not been read before the House. I do not know that there is any affirmative rule of the House to sustain the decision; but many and many a time I have seen gentlemen rise here to debate a proposition or to offer an amendment to a section or paragraph before it has been read, and they have been called to order and required to take their seats. I do not know that the present occupant of the chair has so ruled, but repeatedly we have seen it. It is within the experience of every gentleman present. No amendment, no debate, is in order until the proposition has been read to the committee which you desire to debate or to which you desire to offer an amendment, and you can not limit debate under the five-minute rule until such debate is in order, and it is not in order except as the bill is read for amendments.

I remember the discussion that took place here, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I know the views that I entertained on this question when it was then submitted to the House. It does seem to me that this House owes it to itself—both sides of the House—to continue to occupy the position it occupied when this question was then presented, and to reverse this decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that upon a proper consideration of the rule now under discussion it will be seen that to construe the rule in such a way as to authorize debate to be cut off upon a section which involves the substance of the bill, would be a gross abuse and perversion of the rule itself. I desire to ask the attention of the House for a moment to the question: What is the object of going into Committee of the Whole? Why do you, by your rules, provide in respect to certain bills which involve expenditures of money that they shall be discussed in the first instance in Committee of the Whole? Why do you do that? Simply, because in Committee of the Whole you can have a latitude of debate that is not to be had in the House; because in Committee of the Whole it is competent to discuss the matter at large; because in Committee of the Whole the right to call the previous question, the right to lay on the table, the right to reconsider—all those motions which affect and limit debate—are excluded.

Now, then, by the course indicated by the decision of the Chair you propose to practically escape the effect of going into Committee of the Whole by making a construction of the sixth clause of Rule XXIII which will allow the House, before the matter goes into Committee of the Whole, to cut off debate by a vote to the effect that debate shall be limited to five, ten, or fifteen minutes, as the case may be, upon the section or paragraph under consideration. What is the proper construction of that phrase in the rule "section or paragraph?" I submit that to adopt the construction which is contended for here is simply to avoid the effect of the other rule, which provides that all measures of this character which involve the expenditure of money shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole. If you attempt, as you now propose, to give this effect to the sixth clause of Rule XXIII, you practically control debate in Committee of the Whole by a previous vote on the part of the House, which is inconsistent with parliamentary rules and inconsistent with the very purpose for which your Committee of the Whole is instituted. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit—and I have given some thought to this question—that this proposition is a gross perversion of the rule, and is an attempt, by means of a forced and unfair construction, to avoid the effect of going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I presume the reason of the rule which most of the gentlemen on this side in the Forty-sixth Congress vindicated is even stronger than the precedent then created. Precedents are sometimes determined more or less by the condition of parties, by the relations of majority and minority. I do not know how gentlemen on the other side stood then. I know that many of us on this side, notably my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] as well as the present Speaker of the House and others, believed that appropriation bills of all kinds, all bills taking money out of the Treasury, should have that full, free, and fair discussion and amendment which can only be had in Committee of the Whole.

Hence the reason of the rule, which I think was well expressed at that time in the language of our present Speaker, Mr. CARLISLE, not to mention what was said by other members. I will ask the Clerk to read as a very succinct statement of the rule to be applied to all appropriation bills a portion of the remarks made at that time by the gentleman who is now the permanent Speaker of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of this House, which have prevailed ever since this House was organized so far as I know, the Representatives of the people have a right to have all bills proposing to impose a tax or to make appropriations of money read by clauses and each clause considered on its own merits. By the practice of the House the gentleman in charge of the bill has a right to move the committee rise and close debate on a pending paragraph and amendments thereto, but there is no rule or practice of this House by which the House can close debate or cut off amendments to clauses not yet read or considered by the committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. I understand that a distinction has been drawn by the Chair between this bill and revenue and appropriation bills. The portion of our rules upon which the decision of the Chair is based is the sixth clause of Rule XXIII. Taking the whole rule together, let us see what kind of bills come under that rule as entitled to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and therefore under this bill. The third clause of Rule XXIII provides:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LONG. The fourth paragraph of Rule XXIII provides:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence.

These paragraphs of the rule clearly include all sorts of bills taking money out of the Treasury, and specially name "bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors." How, then, can the Chair hold that under clause 6 of the rule any distinction is made in behalf of revenue and general appropriation bills as against all others?

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the river and harbor bill now pending in Committee of the Whole can undergo the discussion that it should receive by the rules, and can be fully considered in a very short time. Most of the subjects which have excited discussion have been eliminated from the bill; and I believe it can now go through with little difficulty or delay under the ordinary rules. As a friend of the bill I am in favor of that sort of consideration and discussion.

Moreover, I believe it would be a bad precedent to shut off in this case the customary debate, item by item, on an appropriation bill. I do not care whether this bill falls within the category of appropriation bills by name; it is an appropriation in fact; and the thing is always far greater than the name.

I can not agree to the establishment of a precedent which would cut off discussion upon this or any other bill involving appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States. Bills of this character should be considered item by item. Each appropriation should on separate consideration be made, if justified by policy and law, or if not should be refused. I do not see how the Committee of the Whole can be enabled to reach any just conclusion unless the separate propositions are discussed seriatim. The method of consideration proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will not permit, I think, the fair and candid discussion which there should be on this bill.

I regret exceedingly that the question has assumed this phase, because I believe that in the time already consumed upon this question we could have gone through a large portion of the bill. The only two propositions remaining in the bill which in my opinion are likely to excite anything like discussion are the appropriation for the Mississippi River and the creation of a new board. The grounds of contest in regard to Galveston Harbor have, I believe, been removed; the proposition to eliminate Captain Eads has been agreed to. If we now go on and consider the bill in the ordinary way I think we can get through it without any considerable debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] states that this is a question of the liberty of debate. I say, with the facts of the last five or six days before me, that it is a question of the license of debate and a limitation of that license.

What is the practical proposition here? What are these rules? Are they intended to advance legislation or to defeat it? Are they a fraud and a farce, or are they an intelligent system by which we can expedite legislation, hear fair, honorable argument, close discussion, and come to a vote? Let these questions be answered in the light of the last week.

Who has been discussing this bill? Has there been any desire on the part of the gentleman from Maine to bring this bill to a vote? Will he avow before this House that such is his object? I challenge him to do it. No; but he proposes under techical rules to fritter away the time of this House. He may not, in his wise statesmanship, be willing to make the amendment which is so full of suggestion and eloquence to strike out the last word, but there are others who do it, and do it with his approval.

Now, then, is there no remedy against this method of kicking a bill to death? Are three hundred and twenty-five men to be bound up under technical rules? Was that common sense? A priori would any man of common sense pretend these rules are to be so interpreted as to bring about such result as that? There is no bill on this Calendar with paragraphs in it that could not under this system be extended through four or five sessions of Congress. Will this House stultify itself by acknowledging it has bound itself hand and foot and thrown itself into the sea of legislation?

Gentlemen speak about abridging debate. Have we no previous question? Do we not day after day limit debate to one minute or even one second when we desire it? What is this rule? What is the proposition? That, in the plain language of the rules as they stand, this House shall instruct the Committee of the Whole to limit debate not on the paragraph, but upon the whole section.

What is the history of this rule? Up to 1860 the House had no rule limiting debate on either sections or paragraphs. It was the custom to go into the Committee of the Whole, as you, sir, know well, move to strike out the enacting clause and thus bring the bill back into the House, move the previous question, and cut off all debate. In order to prevent that the Committee on Rules brought in an amendment which read as follows:

That the House may at any time, after five minutes' debate has taken place on proposed amendments to any section of a bill, close all debate on such section.

What followed? The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Millson, said:

I propose to amend the amendment by adding after the word "section" the words "or paragraph;" so it will read:

"At any time after five minutes' debate has taken place upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of the bill," &c.

That amendment was accepted by Mr. Washburn, of Maine, who was in charge of the rules. He said he was surprised the committee had not thought of it before.

Now, what did Mr. Millson say?

I will ask the Clerk to read it. It will be seen from the reading of that the House did not do the absurd thing the gentleman suggests, preventing itself from controlling its own action, but left itself free under existing condition of things to determine how much debate should be had.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think there will be any inconvenience, practically, from retaining what I have suggested. I do not propose to interfere with the right of the House to close debate upon the whole section, if they shall please to do so; but the committee will observe that, when we are in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with an appropriation bill under consideration, we have a number of independent paragraphs in one section; indeed, it very often happens that there is but one section of an appropriation bill, and a great many independent paragraphs. Now, sir, the case may occur that the committee are desirous of closing debate upon a whole section; but in other cases they may desire to close debate only upon a paragraph. I wish, then, to leave it optional with them to close debate either upon the section or the paragraph, as may seem right at the time.

Mr. BOCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that I am authorized by at least two members of the committee to say that they are in favor of the amendment which he proposes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. You are so authorized by a majority of the committee.

Mr. BOCOCK. Then, as a majority of the committee authorized it, the amendment of my colleague will be adopted as a part of the report of the committee.

Mr. MILLSON. The amendment having been accepted by the committee, it necessarily includes the following addition:

"That the House may, at any time, after five minutes' debate has taken place upon a proposed amendment, or any section or paragraph of the bill, close the debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at their election, upon the pending amendments only."

Now, it will be observed that the committee may sometimes desire to close debate upon a pending amendment or amendments without closing it upon the section, for the section may be a very long one, important in its provisions and needing amendment. The committee, however, may not be able to get on beyond a pending amendment, so as to enable them to perfect the subsequent part of the section or paragraph.

Mr. WILLIS. It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, from what has been read that at the very inception of this rule a sensible construction, not an arbitrary or absurd one, was given to its meaning. Under that construction the House by its vote can either limit debate to the whole section with all of its paragraphs, or it can limit debate to any one of a number of paragraphs at its option. Now, wherein under such a construction and practice is there any injustice to result? We know that there were only three or four provisions incorporated in this bill, when reported to the House, to which serious objection was made. One of these was with reference to the improvement at Sandy Bay Harbor, and that has been stricken from the bill. Another was with reference to having Captain Eads in charge of the Mississippi River improvements as supervising engineer. That also has been eliminated from the bill. Another point of controversy was with reference to the improvements at Galveston Harbor. This House knows, because an amendment is pending, that the committee had adopted an amendment satisfactory to every member of the committee and satisfactory to the members of the House, which has eliminated Captain Eads from the control at Galveston, and given to that improvement its proper proportion of the appropriations. Then there is nothing left but the Mississippi River, and the discussion as to whether this present system of improvements shall continue. Upon that and other matters of different minor questions in the bill we propose to give one hour to the opponents and thirty minutes to the friends of the measure.

Gentlemen claim that the bill has not been read. If this order shall be made, while it is a purely technical objection, the Clerk will immediately proceed to read the entire section to the close of the bill, and then amendment and debate will follow in order. Where is the hardship of that? Where is any wrong to be done to any member of the House who desires to be heard? I regret, sir, that time does not permit of a more extended consideration, but in view of what has been said I think the time now proposed is ample, especially when we consider the lateness of the session; and I will yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] for ten minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor.

Also that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which amendments the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is that a motion is not in order to limit debate upon a section of a bill which is divided into paragraphs. I know how difficult it is in the limited time allotted to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to undertake to answer the many specious arguments which are made against the ruling of the Chair upon the point of order now pending. I will content myself, however, by stating two or three general propositions in that time.

The main point made against the power of the House to limit debate in Committee of the Whole upon an entire section is that it is taking away from the members of the House the right of free and full discussion. I wish to call attention to the fact that prior to the adoption of the present rule in its present form, the power was held and exercised by the House to limit debate upon an entire bill. That existed up to about the year 1860.

The right under a practice that had grown up in Committee of the Whole on a motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill brought the bill back into the House, where, under the operation of the previous question, the whole bill could be passed without debate. Then a practice grew up under which the House could limit debate upon a section, which existed before the rules were amended so as to give the right to go into the House to limit debate upon paragraphs also. And instead of the decision of the Chair in the present instance being something new, something that is a limitation upon the power of the House, it is simply carrying out that which was taking away power originally held and exercised a long time by the House.

It is claimed that the House only has power by a majority vote to limit debate upon each paragraph of a section of such bill after it is reached for consideration. Paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII is in the following words:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

It ought to be conceded that the literal reading of this part of Rule XXIII gives the right to the House, by a majority vote, after the five minutes' debate has begun on a section of a bill, to limit debate upon it as well as upon a paragraph of a section or bill, and the Speaker should not hesitate to so hold if there were not other matters to be considered in giving it construction.

The greater part of the debate upon the pending point of order has been directed against the effect of entertaining and agreeing to such a motion as this, rather than against the right to entertain the motion under the rules. It is a great mistake to suppose that to entertain such a motion as this would be to give the House an unusual power over its business in the matter of passing laws, or over the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

If we looked alone to general parliamentary principles and uniform practice on the subject of the power of this House over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, we should find that independent of restrictive rules the House could by a majority vote control any bill in committee or discharge that committee from its consideration altogether. The present rules of the House, intended to cover all imaginable cases which may arise, however, assume rather than direct that the House has the power to limit general debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union upon any bill, yet such practice is unquestioned. Paragraph 5 of Rule XXIII contains these words:

When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon, &c.

The rules nowhere authorize the limiting of general debate, but it is assumed in the paragraph just quoted, and nowhere else, that that power exists; and so far as I have been able to examine and learn this power has existed throughout the history of the Congress of the United States. The matter of the consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union under the five-minute rule is a wise parliamentary innovation, and comes in rather as a limitation on the power of the House to control the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole than in the nature of an extension of the power of the House over its committee.

The present rules of the House came into force on the 2d of March, 1880; but paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII, already quoted, is almost a literal copy of the provision added to Rule 60 of the old rules of the House. The addition was made March 19, 1860. Barclay, in his Digest, published in 1873, says of this proviso to Rule 60:

It was adopted so as to enable the majority to get a bill out of the Committee of the Whole after a reasonable time has been occupied in debating amendments, and was adopted at the same time as the amendment to the one hundred and twenty-third rule, the effect of which was to prevent a practice of doubtful propriety, by which the friends of a bill were in the habit of taking it out of the Committee of the Whole by adopting a recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The practice had grown up, prior to the amendment to the old rule, 123 (March 16, 1860), for the friends of a bill to move to strike out the enacting words, which being carried took the bill back into the House, where, under the then practice, the bill could be taken up and passed. The amendment to the old rule, 123, provided that when the recommendation of the committee, that the enacting words of a bill be stricken out, was disagreed to, the bill should stand recommitted to the committee for further action. This history of the rule upon which this point of order turns is important to determine the intention, or rather effect, which ought to be given to it. It seems clear that the central idea was to give to a majority of the House the right to limit debate in such way as to hasten an end to the consideration of a long bill, and especially where factious opposition was made to it. But prior to the adoption of the present rules of the House, at least from the year 1844, the House, by old Rule 104, was given the right by a vote of the majority of members present to "suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and also for providing for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending and that may be offered."

It will thus be seen that the power of the House by a majority vote to limit debate was greater prior to the adoption of the new rules than now, even though it should be held that it was in order by a majority vote in the House to limit debate on a section; for it had the right under the old rules to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of any bill referred to it and thus bring it back into the House, where, under the operation of the previous question, all debate on the entire bill and all amendments thereto might be cut off, except the thirty minutes allowed under paragraph 3 of Rule 28.

This reference to the past powers of the House is given as an answer to the claim that to entertain this motion would be to inaugurate something entirely novel and revolutionary in the history of the proceedings of the House. It appears that for above thirty years this House maintained the right by a majority vote to terminate all debate upon any bill in committee by simply discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from its further consideration, and under the operation of the previous question bring it to a final vote.

It is claimed that general appropriation, tariff, and tax bills are considered by clauses, while other bills are considered by sections. This may be true in fact, though it has grown up merely as a practice, and is not authorized or required by any existing rule. It is, undoubtedly, a good practice, but too much weight must not be given to it in giving construction to the plain language of the existing rule. If the right exists to limit debate on a section of any bill it exists as to all bills.

The most specious argument made in support of the point of order is, that before the House can limit debate upon proposed amendments, or a section or paragraph of a bill, debate must have begun upon such amendment, section, or paragraph; and it is claimed that while the House is considering paragraphs, and the paragraphs are not coextensive with the section of the bill until the entire section is read through by paragraphs and considered subject to amendment, the motion to limit debate can not be entertained. It is very hard to see how it is possible for a paragraph of a section of a bill to be under consideration and debate and the section not be under consideration.

It will be found that during the last ten days of this session a large number of amendments have been offered in effect to the section and not to paragraphs, as they were not propositions to amend paragraphs. There have been others in the form of motions to amend the section under consideration by striking out a whole paragraph or several paragraphs in one motion. There does not seem to be much difficulty in holding that debate has begun upon the pending section of the bill; and this is the only fact required by the rule to be ascertained before entertaining a motion to limit debate upon it. The claim so vigorously pressed, that to allow such a motion as this to be acted upon by a majority vote of the House would be to take away from the minority the right to debate at all certain important paragraphs of a bill, is worth considering; but it must be remembered that it is no more severe than the application of the previous question, which has existed almost from the beginning of the Government to the present time, which cuts off (with the exception already stated) debate upon any bill or proposition to which it may be applied, no matter about its importance.

The right of general debate upon a bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was undoubtedly intended to be exercised before commencing the consideration of a bill by sections, or paragraphs, or clauses; and yet power is given to the House to limit this to a single minute. It must be kept in view that this motion is not a motion to preclude further amendment to the section, though such amendments would have to be decided without debate if the motion should be entertained and agreed to by the House. It is a narrow view to take to say that paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII was only intended to give the right to the House to limit debate upon an entire section of the bill, where the section consisted only of one paragraph. The framers of the rules of the House, in debating them, could hardly be supposed to have overlooked the fact that it would have been sufficient in such case to have given the power to the House to limit debate by a majority vote upon a single paragraph. For, if debate was limited upon a paragraph and that paragraph was an entire section of a bill, then it would be unnecessary to authorize a motion to limit debate upon a section.

The doubt that arises grows out of the fact that after a section is considered through to the end by paragraphs it may yet be in order to add new paragraphs independent of those in the original bill. It might have been intended that the right to limit debate upon a section of a bill was only to be invoked when the section had been gone through by paragraphs, and it was proposed to offer further amendments to the section in the nature of new paragraphs, and on which debate would be asked for. But if the rule is to be overridden on the theory that every paragraph of a bill or a proposition should first be considered and debated before debate is limited upon it, it will readily be seen that the power to cut off all debate upon a section after the section has been read through by paragraphs and considered would be a power which would take away from the friends of the proposed new paragraphs absolutely the power of debate, and it would have as many objectionable features about it as could apply to paragraphs already in the section.

It is said that there are no precedents for such a motion as this. This is a mistake. Precedents can be found which cover the present case. On the contrary, there are no precedents, so far as I am advised, against the right of the House, under the plain terms of the rule, to limit debate upon an entire section of a bill; and as I look upon the rule as a mere limitation upon the power of the House, in the absence of which there could be no doubt about the right of the House to limit debate upon an entire bill, or any section of it, or, in other words, to control the committee in its consideration of any bill as it might order, I think it would be unwise to undertake to put restrictions by mere construction upon what seems to be the plain reading of the rule.

It is fair to say that until the last session of the Forty-seventh Congress no point of order was made against the right of the House to limit debate upon a whole section of a bill in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

On May 11, 1872, during the Forty-second Congress, Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, moved to limit debate on an entire section of a bill, which was entertained by Speaker Blaine. Other like precedents are cited. It may be conclusively assumed that for nearly a quarter of a century after the rule as it now exists was adopted no member even questioned the right of the House to limit debate on an entire section of any bill, as well as a paragraph of a section.

The history of the adoption of the rule which is embodied in the sixth paragraph of Rule XXIII will make it perfectly clear that the original intention was to give the right to the House to limit debate upon the whole of a section to a bill, although it contain many paragraphs, or in the discretion of the House to limit debate upon any one of the paragraphs.

There was a general revision of the old rules in March, 1860. Mr. Washburn, of Maine, then a member of the Committee on Rules, reported a large number of amendments to the rules in force at that time. Among other amendments he reported one in the nature of a proviso which read as follows:

That the House may, at any time after five minutes' debate has taken place upon any proposed amendments to any section of a bill, close all debate upon such section.

Pending the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, Mr. Millson, of Virginia, called the attention of Mr. Washburn to the fact that the proposition of the committee to amend the rules should go farther, and provide not only that the House should have the right to limit debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union upon a particular section, but also upon any paragraph of a section, so that the House might have the benefit of limiting debate upon a paragraph when it did not desire to do so upon the whole section. This amendment as proposed by Mr. Millson made the amendment of Mr. Washburn read as follows:

That the House may, at any time after five minutes' debate has taken place upon any proposed amendments to any section or paragraph, close the debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at their election, upon the pending amendments only.

It will be noted that this is the language almost to a letter of the rule that we are now trying to construe. The then Committee on Rules, or a majority of the committee present on the floor, agreed to accept the amendment of Mr. Millson, after he had stated the object of it, as follows:

I do not propose to interfere with the right of the House to close debate upon the whole section, if they shall please to do so; but the committee will observe that when we are in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with an appropriation bill under consideration, we have a number of independent paragraphs in one section. Indeed, it very often happens that there is but one section of an appropriation bill, and a great many independent paragraphs. Now, sir, the case may occur that the committee are desirous of closing debate upon a whole section, but in other cases they may desire to close debate only upon a paragraph of a section. I wish then to leave it optional with them to close debate, either upon the section or the paragraph, as may seem right at the time.

This will be found among the debates in the Congressional Globe, page 1188, volume 10, part 2, 1859–'60, and of date March 15, 1860.

This view of the rule as it was proposed was accepted, and on a subsequent day, to wit, March 19, 1860, the amendment was adopted without a division, and it has been from that time forward to the present a rule of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the specious things that are stated upon the floor here is that no debate can be had, no consideration of a paragraph or a section can be had, until it is read through. Why, Mr. Speaker, every bill is read clear through in the Committee of the Whole before you proceed to consider it by paragraphs, unless by unanimous consent the reading of the bill be dispensed with; so that it is all read. And it will not do for gentlemen to argue that when a paragraph has been read and debated, that is not the debating of some part of a section. The whole theory of the rule it seems to me is that the House by a majority vote shall have a right to limit debate, but not to limit amendments upon a section. I am surprised that some of my party friends who differ with me on this point of order do so in the face of their position hitherto in favor of allowing a majority of the House to control all its business.

Some gentlemen fall into the idea that if debate is limited on an entire section it cuts off the right to amend the section. It does not; for by the express terms of paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII amendments may be offered without debate as long as members in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union desire to offer them. I know it may be a hardship, a great hardship, to take away from members the right to debate a proposition that is important to them. But still, as I think, it is the rule. The plain reading of paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII gives the right to limit debate upon a section as well as a paragraph, and such was the view of its authors as has been shown.

And I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not see any distinction between bills in the application of this rule. Any bill that goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under our rules, I think, may have this rule applied to it.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. The House is gravely informed by the opponents of this measure that there are no precedents for such a ruling as that which has been made by the Chair, and it is argued therefrom that there are no reasons that the mind of man can suggest why there can be a good and sufficient reason for the ruling. I have no patience with that confined theory which binds us within precedents of other years. Because no one had ever had the misfortune of having an apple fall on his head was Sir Isaac Newton to be prevented from investigating the philosophy of the law of gravitation? Because no one had ever sailed over the western sea was Columbus not to search out this American continent? Because no one has heretofore had the courage to come forward and have these rules construed by the Chair until the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] this morning comes forward boldly in the defense of right and asks that the Chair shall mark upon the map the course which the ship of this House shall sail, shall it be said we shall not have this right asserted? I think not.

Although there has been no ruling, it is manifest under the rules; it is manifest, upon the reasons given at the time the rules were adopted, that this House has the right to limit debate as well upon the section as upon the paragraph, and the exception to the paragraph was made at the time of the adoption of the rules simply for the greater convenience of the House; not as taking away from it the power to close debate upon the whole section. Complaint is made that there is no opportunity for debate. The House will bear me witness that there has already been more debate upon this bill than upon four-fifths of all the river and harbor bills that have ever been passed by Congress. Almost every river and harbor bill heretofore has been passed without general debate; but there has been considerable general debate and also considerable debate upon the different paragraphs in this section.

Has any great hardship fallen upon the country by reason of the passage of these bills heretofore without extended general debate? I think not; and I think that with the light we have before us we shall have no reason to regret the early passage of this bill.

The bill has been in print, and has been read from beginning to end as well by every member of the House as by the Clerk from the desk, for by the unanimous consent given that the first reading of the bill should be dispensed with the legal effect of a full and complete reading was answered. We have been told many times, especially by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that these rules are most unhappily constructed; that they are so arranged as to prevent action by the House instead of enabling us to go forward with legitimate legislation.

I have always believed, and I entertain the opinion more strongly this morning than ever before, that the majority of the House ought to control its action. I believe that they ought not only to control its action, but that they ought to take the responsibility therefor, and I am sure that the good sober sense of this House will justify the ruling of the Chair in this instance, whereby he maintains that the majority should control the House as they have to bear its responsibilities.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, as I have promised that at five minutes to 12 I would move to adjourn, I am compelled now to move to lay the appeal of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] on the table without further discussion. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In order that the House may understand the question pending, after the elaborate discussion that has been had, the Chair will restate it. The point of order was raised by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]; it was overruled by the Chair upon the ground that this was neither revenue nor a general appropriation bill, supported by an elaborate opinion delivered by the present permanent Speaker of this House——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, if there is any new matter to be introduced——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not introduce new matter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If any is to be introduced I should like to have an opportunity to debate it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will engage in no debate, but claims the right to state the question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the Chair has no right to argue it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overruled the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] for the reasons stated. The gentleman from Maine appealed. That appeal has been debated. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] now moves to lay that appeal upon the table, and the question is on that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 69.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIS, and Mr. REED of Maine, were appointed.

Before the tellers took their places,

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the Chair please state the question that is to be voted upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to lay on the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And a vote in the negative is a vote against the decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated the question. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were yeas 121, nays 103, not voting 100, as follows:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. COBB with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. HITT.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. ROCKWELL.

The following pairs until Monday were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. STORM with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object; let the names be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine objects to dispensing with the reading of the names. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk began to read the names of members voting.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. If there be no further objection the reading of the names will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS (at 11 o'clock and 59 minutes a. m.). I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRENTS: Petition of the Board of Trade of Vancouver, Wash., for an appropriation to improve the Vancouver Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. A. J. PALMER, D. D., of New York city.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending that the prime meridian of Greenwich be adopted for all nautical and astronomical purposes, as recommended by the international conference held in Washington in October last. If there be no objection, the letter will be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The subject of a prime meridian has had the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was under the impression that, as the astronomy of the United States is confined to the Naval Observatory, the proper reference would be to the Naval Committee. The Chair will change the reference if there be no objection, and the letter will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation of the Supervising Architect to extend the limit of cost of the public building at Denver, Colo.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General relative to the importance of obtaining possession of certain records of the Post-Office Department of the late Confederate States pertaining to Southern mail contracts; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Ohio State Sanitary Association, praying for the passage of the bill introduced by Senator PALMER for the prevention of the introduction and diffusion of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. PENDLETON presented petitions of the Lancaster Gazette, of Lancaster, Ohio; the German Publishing House, of Cleveland, Ohio; the Greenville Journal, of Greenville, Ohio; the Clermont Sun, of Batavia, Ohio; the Ohio State Journal, of Columbus, Ohio; the publishers of The Drugs and Medicines of North America; the Gazette, of Ottawa, Ohio; the Ohio Waisenfreund, of Columbus, Ohio; and the publishers of the Ohio State Journal of Dental Science, of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the reduction of postage on second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by steamboat owners and managers at a meeting held in Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 4th of February, 1885, protesting against the repeal of section 4419 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the control of safety-valves and steam-registers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, praying for the purchase by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canals; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I present the petition of the Republican and Democratic county committees of Vallejo, California, praying that the workmen and other employés of the Mare Island navy-yard may receive compensation for time lost by them during January, 1885, pending the passage of the naval appropriation bill.

I also present a petition of workmen and other employés of the Mare Island navy-yard, California, not addressed to Congress, but evidently intended to be presented as a petition to the Senate, to the same effect. I ask that it may be received, and I move that both petitions be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the latter paper will be received as a petition to the Senate, and both petitions will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Mrs. Sarah E. Bowker, of Cambridge, Mass., praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2177) granting a pension to Henry Radford, to report it adversely, as a House bill in that case has been passed. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2520) granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley, to report it adversely, and to ask that it be placed upon the Calendar for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2057) granting a pension to Margaret Beymer, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4189) granting a pension to Caroline Van Norton;
A bill (H. R. 4837) granting a pension to Charles H. Phillips;
A bill (H. R. 6835) granting a pension to Bernard Donohue;
A bill (H. R. 7773) granting a pension to William E. Ayers;
A bill (H. R. 7386) granting a pension to Eliza M. Byers;
A bill (H. R. 732) granting a pension to William Weddingfield; and A bill (S. 2437) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gordon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1164) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Elenor Stough;
A bill (H. R. 3000) for the relief of William R. Miller, for pension;
A bill (H. R. 5082) granting a pension to Jane Hilton; and A bill (S. 2262) granting a pension to Sedate P. Martin.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1960) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2074) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 2136) granting an increase of pension to Merlin C. Harris, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1325) granting an increase of pension to Merlin C. Harris, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7997) to increase the pension of Mary E. Fillebrown, to report it adversely. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JACKSON. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 498) granting a pension to Letitia Tyler Semple, to report it adversely. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. 3828) granting a pension to Cornelius Wessels;
A bill (H. R. 3466) granting a pension to Azzur W. Reader;
A bill (H. R. 6851) for the relief of Mary G. Reader;
A bill (H. R. 4191) granting a pension to Jane Bracken;
A bill (H. R. 1024) granting a pension to Charles D. Duncan;
A bill (S. 2156) granting a pension to Corydon Millard; and
A bill (S. 2148) granting a pension to William A. Penfield.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3901) granting a pension to Mrs. Olive W. Parker;
A bill (S. 2268) for the relief of Robert J. Ballort; and
A bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4317) increasing the pension of Julia A. Chambers, to report it favorably with an amendment, and submit the views of the minority favoring the passage of the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the views of the minority will be received and printed with the report of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2242) granting a pension to Mary E. Crimmins, widow of Patrick Crimmins, to report it adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement, and to submit the views of the minority favoring the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the views of the minority will be received and printed with the report, and the bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6011) granting an increase of pension to Robert Casey, to report it favorably with an amendment correcting an error in the name of the pensioner. The name should be "Cary" instead of "Casey."

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 481) for the relief of John D. Bridges, to report it adversely, the report being based on the ground that the relief sought for may be granted by the Commissioner on Pensions. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1836) granting a pension to Sarah Hague;
A bill (H. R. 7571) granting a pension to Cornelia V. Blackman;
A bill (H. R. 7313) granting a pension to Charles W. Baldwin;
A bill (H. R. 6653) granting a pension to Mary C. Axline; and
A bill (H. R. 3403) for the relief of Jacob J. Morningstar.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 2325) granting a pension to Helen M. Harrison, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back to the Senate a communication of the Secretary of State, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, inviting attention to some commercial statistics submitted therein, showing our trade relations with the several countries in this continent, British North America excepted. I move that it be printed as a miscellaneous document, and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2592) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Winnebago tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BINDING CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to have bound at the Government Printing Office 650 copies of the Congressional Globe, now unbound, in the Senate library, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to have bound at the Government Printing Offices 650 volumes of the Congressional Globe furnished to the Senate library under the joint resolution approved May 16, 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Nebraska be good enough to state the necessity for having these volumes bound?

Mr. MANDERSON. These unbound volumes by action of Congress were placed in the Senate library, and their binding is necessary to complete the bound sets of the Congressional Globe.

Mr. INGALLS. They are in the Senate library?

Mr. MANDERSON. They are already in the Senate library in an unbound form, and are useless in that shape.

The resolution was agreed to.

LANDING OF TELEGRAPH OCEAN CABLES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution of May 2, 1884, the report of the Secretary of State in relation to the landing of telegraph ocean cables on the shores of the United States, and with it a resolution providing for the printing of the report. I will state that the printing of such a report will cost less than a hundred dollars, and it seems to be important. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the papers accompanying the report of the Secretary of State relative to the landing of foreign telegraphic cables upon the shores of the United States, transmitted by the President in response to a resolution of the Senate of May 2, 1884, be printed, and that 1,000 additional copies in paper covers be printed for the use of the Department of State.

LIST OF WAR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of clerks and employés of the War Department, with a resolution ordering its printing; and I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the list of clerks in the War Department, transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of War, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, be printed.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to put a question to the chairman of the Committee on Printing, who has just made several reports from that committee. The Senate some time ago referred to that committee a resolution providing that copies of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States should be furnished to Senators. It is a resolution the execution of which will be a very trifling expense, and it seems very important that we should have copies of the decisions, which may seriously affect our duties in legislation. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing what action the committee has taken on that resolution?

Mr. MANDERSON. The committee has taken no action upon it as yet. It is under consideration and the matter is being investigated.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution was introduced in the Senate at the beginning of the present session. I suppose the illness of the late Senator from Rhode Island prevented the matter from being attended to then. I hope it will be attended to without further delay.

LIEUTENANT STONEY'S REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. HARRISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of Lieut. George M. Stoney, of the United States Navy, of recent explorations in Northern Alaska, to report it back. I report also a resolution providing for the printing of the report, and I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Printing, together with the accompanying papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 5,500 copies of the report of Lieut. George M. Stoney, United States Navy, of his recent explorations in Northern Alaska, with the accompanying charts; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,000 for the use of the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL—WORK OF THE SESSION.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, with amendments, and also to submit a written report, which I hope may be printed; and as I intend to call the bill up to-morrow, if there be no objection I ask to have the report printed in the RECORD for the use of members of the Senate to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised at the desk that there will be no difficulty in having the report printed in document form by to-morrow morning.

Mr. DAWES. If no one else desires to have it printed in the RECORD I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. This report affords me the opportunity to say that I have recently observed in opposition quarters a statement that the Republicans in the Senate were so endeavoring to direct legislation as to compel an extra session of Congress. I am sure it will be matter of interest to the Senate to know the condition of the public business at this time before the Committee on Appropriations, and I will ask the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, to be good enough to state what appropriation bills are now before that committee, what have been reported, and what are yet to be received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas with pleasure.

The Military Academy bill has been signed by the President and is now a law. That is the only appropriation bill which has passed both Houses finally. The District of Columbia bill, the pension appropriation bill, and the consular and diplomatic bill are now in the hands of conference committees. The Army appropriation bill passed the Senate yesterday with amendments. The Indian appropriation bill has just been reported, and the committee will ask that it be considered to-morrow. That leaves in the Committee on Appropriations only the agricultural appropriation bill, which is a small bill and will be reported to the Senate on Monday.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps it will be reported to-morrow, in which case it can certainly be taken up for consideration on Monday.

That is the condition of the appropriation bills which have thus far been received by the Senate. The Post-Office appropriation bill; the legislative, executive, and judicial bill; the naval bill; the fortification bill; the sundry civil bill, and the bill known as the general deficiency bill, are yet in the House.

Mr. LAPHAM. And the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That does not go to the Committee on Appropriations. So six of the general appropriation bills which come under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations have not been received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. And those are among the most important?

Mr. ALLISON. I may say that the most important bills are yet in the House. The sundry civil bill, the naval bill, and the fortification bill have not yet been reported.

Mr. INGALLS. From the House Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Appropriations in the House the legislative, executive, and judicial bill has been reported and is on the House Calendar. The Post-Office appropriation bill is now under consideration in the House, as Senators know from the RECORD. So far as the Senate and the Senate Committee on Appropriations are concerned I beg to assure the Senator from Kansas and other Senators that our work is well in hand and no delay can be caused in any way on account of the action of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Is it not the information of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the work on appropriation bills in the House itself is better advanced than usual this far from the end of the session?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that I feel quite sure these bills are all in such a condition that if the House of Representatives will take care of them within reasonable time there will be no difficulty with reference to them in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What time will the Senate Committee on Appropriations require before the close of the session to enable them properly to consider the appropriation bills yet remaining?

Mr. ALLISON. We ought to have all of these bills next week unless probably the general deficiency bill. There are now fourteen working days of the session remaining after to-day. That of course excludes the idea that much work will be done on the 21st of February, a week from to-morrow. I have stated the condition of the bills so far as I know, and the Committee on Appropriations I think can assure the Senate that so far as they are concerned the work will be well in hand as it comes to us from the House.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say, as I have been asked several questions outside of the Chamber as well as on the floor of the Senate, that with a considerable experience in the Committee on Appropriations in both Houses (I believe I have been eight years on it here, and I was for some time on that committee at the other end of the Capitol with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]), I do not recall a time during a short session of Congress when the work of the two Houses has been better up on the appropriation bills than it seems to be now. I have seen time and again four or five of the largest appropriation bills come before us within five or six days of the close of the session and still we were able to work them through. That is not going to be the case at this session unless things change very much from their present appearance. The Post-Office appropriation bill I think will be over to-day, judging from the RECORD, and I do not see that we are going to have any difficulty in either House in getting through the appropriation bills and having ample time to consider them. I only desired to say that much.

Mr. MORGAN. With a view to facilitate the business of getting through the appropriation bills, I introduced the other day in the Senate and had referred to the Committee on Commerce a river and harbor bill. It was the House bill, as I am informed, with certain provisions stricken out, upon which the House has already acted, which it is not necessary now to mention. I introduced that bill in order that our committee might make progress upon it. It is the subject of very considerable debate in the House, as we all know, and I desired that our own committee should have ample opportunity to consider that bill. It is therefore before the committee, and I conceive that there is no reason why it should not go on to perfect it.

I did not intend in introducing the bill to raise the question which has been somewhat debated of the constitutional power of the Senate of the United States to originate what is called an appropriation bill or a river and harbor bill. At the same time, I should have no difficulty, I think, in sustaining the power of the Senate to originate and pass the bill as an original measure. I will not occupy the time of the Senate this morning in reading the authorities upon which I rely to support that position, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate, so that they themselves can be informed about it, to the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, found in volume 126 of the Massachusetts Reports. The opinion, I believe, was written by Mr. Justice Gray, now one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, in which this subject was very fully gone into and very ably argued upon a constitutional provision in the constitution of Massachusetts, corresponding precisely, I believe, in language with that in the Constitution of the United States. The syllabus of the opinion reads as follows:

> The question whether a bill or resolve appropriating money from the treasury of the Commonwealth is a money bill, which must, by the constitution (c. I, sect. 3, art. 7), originate in the house of representatives, is a question upon which the two branches of the Legislature are authorized by the constitution (c. III, art. 2) to require the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court.
> The exclusive privilege of the house of representatives, under the constitution of the Commonwealth (c. I, sect. 3, art. 7), to originate money bills is limited to bills that transfer money or property from the people to the State, and does not include bills that appropriate money from the treasury of the Commonwealth to particular uses of the government, or bestow it upon individuals or corporations.

That subject is very ably handled in this opinion, and I think that the Committee on Commerce would derive from it a very satisfactory solution of any difficulty that may beset them in respect to the jurisdiction of the Senate to originate a river and harbor bill, to say the least of it.

A river and harbor bill is not in every sense to be classified as one of the general appropriation bills for carrying on the Government. It is a provision for the improvement of commerce, the improvement of the facilities of intercourse between the different States of this Union, and between the country at large and foreign countries, and it is not in every essential sense a governmental project. We can dispense entirely with any further improvements of the rivers and harbors of the country, and yet execute every function of maintaining and conducting the Government of the United States. It does not in the other House go to the regular Appropriations Committee. It is a bill that goes to the Committee on Commerce in both Houses, just as bills here go to the Committee on Claims, which are reported back continually with appropriations originating in the Senate for the payment of debts of the people of the United States.

We had also in the Senate a very notable case at the last session, where some $80,000,000 were appropriated by a bill we passed for the purpose of general education. That bill originated in the Senate; and not only does it take about eighty millions of money out of the Treasury, but it does it for the next eight years consecutively; it charges a debt upon the Treasury of the United States which must be supplied from the future sources of revenue of this Government, which of course are mainly, if not entirely, taxation. That bill comes very much nearer to an invasion of the supposed constitutional right of the House of Representatives than a bill to make appropriations for works of internal improvement out of a fund already in the Treasury, for that bill looks to the raising of money—must look to the raising of money, inasmuch as it is procrastinated in its execution from year to year for eight years to come a charge on the Treasury of the United States, which of course we must meet by taxation. That bill went to the House of Representatives, and it induced, I suppose, a motion or a resolution, which was offered in that body, upon which action was recently taken declaratory of the power of the House of Representatives on such subjects. The House upon a yea-and-nay vote declared that the Senate had authority to originate appropriation bills. The declaration was a very broad one, much broader than I should be willing to see carried into practice. At the same time it concurred, and must have concurred, entirely and precisely with the opinion delivered in the case that I have just quoted from the Massachusetts Reports.

I will also call the attention of the Senate and of the Committee on Commerce to a report from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, made on the 22d of February, 1881, by Mr. Knott, who I believe was then the chairman of that committee:

> The House having referred to the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. 1157) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing," with instructions to inquire into the right of the Senate under the Constitution to originate bills making appropriations of money belonging to the Treasury of the United States, and said committee having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report.

The Senate will observe that that resolution instructing this inquiry to be made by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House was a very broad and comprehensive resolution. Mr. Knott's report concludes with the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate had the constitutional power to originate the bill referred, and that the power to originate bills appropriating money from the Treasury of the United States is not exclusive in the House of Representatives.

I merely desired to call the attention of the committee to this question.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. LAPHAM. Has he also the views of the minority on that question?

Mr. MORGAN. There are no views of the minority expressed in the paper I hold in my hand.

Mr. LAPHAM. There was a minority report. The House Judiciary Committee were divided. There was a minority report, in which I concurred, which was the reverse of that, but no action was ever taken by the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I am informed that no action was taken.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the question is so important a one to the Committee on Commerce that I send to the Senator from Alabama Rule XVI, and I should like his views upon the construction of that rule and the opinion of the Senator in regard to a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors being a general appropriation bill under our rules.

Mr. MORGAN. Rule XVI has been so often discussed before the Senate that I should hesitate about entering into any further discussion with regard to it with a view of trying to enlighten the Senate on the subject. I do not know what precise point the Senator from Michigan has in his mind.

Mr. CONGER. The point with me was this: Rule XVI says:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

It provides which of those bill shall be sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and provides that the river and harbor bill, which seems to be treated as a general appropriation bill in the rule, shall be sent to the Committee on Commerce; and so further down in regard to amendments to such bills.

Mr. HALE. Is not the bill appropriating money for rivers and harbors treated in Rule XVI as a general appropriation bill, and so referred to, the same as other unquestioned appropriation bills are?

Mr. MORGAN. No doubt about it.

Mr. CONGER. It was on that point that I asked for the views of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt of that, and I think it is a general appropriation bill. I am not arguing in favor of an exception upon this bill. I am willing to take it upon the broad proposition that it is a general appropriation bill, and yet the authorities to which I have referred and I believe the sound reasoning on the question are in favor of the proposition that the Senate of the United States can originate one of these appropriation bills as well as the House of Representatives. The case that I have just referred to is a case of general appropriations. The one in respect to the school bill is a case of general appropriations, because it applies to the education of children in all the States of the Union. It is general in another sense, that it makes a general draft upon the Treasury without looking to any specific fund, and, as I a moment ago suggested, it has something in it even more than an appropriation bill; it is a money bill, for it necessitates taxation and prolongs the period over which this taxation must prevail for eight or ten years. We have not the money in the Treasury now to pay that appropriation, nor do we in that bill set apart any fund in the Treasury not otherwise expended to meet that appropriation. It all looks to the future, and involves, therefore, necessarily a charge upon the Treasury of the United States, to be supplied from time to time, of course by taxation in part, if not in whole. So to that extent it is a money bill.

The House of Representatives had that subject under consideration the other day, and they resolved, as I have stated, upon a yea-and-nay vote, that the Senate had the authority to originate that bill. That is a bill wider in its sweep a good deal than the river and harbor bill, because the river and harbor bill appropriates only for a single fiscal year and appropriates money in the Treasury not otherwise expended, and if there happens to be not enough in the Treasury not otherwise expended to meet the appropriation of course it fails, and the deficiency must be made good by a deficiency bill; it can only be made good in that way.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. Does he think that the vote in the House the other day was a fair test of the opinion of the House——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that any reference to any vote taken by the present House of Representatives is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator to have made several references to votes taken by the present House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not aware of it. The Chair thought the Senator referred to votes of a former House of Representatives in another Congress in 1881.

Mr. FRYE. Twice the Senator has referred to votes of the present House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear such references or he would have interposed.

Mr. FRYE. He did, nevertheless, make those references.

Mr. MORGAN. I did refer to the action of the House on a resolution which was before the House, and only before the House, and did not come before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that would not be in order in reference to the present House of Representatives. The Chair supposed the Senator was speaking of the House of a former Congress, in 1881.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I do not wish to transgress the rules at all. I supposed they authorized me to speak of any action taken by the House which was final upon any measure as a measure that had been concluded, though the resolution of which I spoke referred only to the affairs of the House.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me? I call his attention now to the minority views of the House Judiciary Committee at that time. They submitted their views and recommended the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the seventh section of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," confers exclusive power upon the House to originate bills appropriating money from the public Treasury.

Resolved, That the Senate bill which has been referred to this committee be returned to the Senate of the United States with a copy of these resolutions.

This was signed by five members of the Judiciary Committee differing with the views of the majority. I beg while I am up to call attention to one extract from this report:

An extract on this point from the inaugural address of President Washington will not be inappropriate.

Here I may add that President Washington probably knew the meaning of this provision as well any person existing at that time. He said in his inaugural address:

To the preceding observations I have one to add which will be most properly addressed to the House of Representatives. It concerns myself, and will, therefore, be as brief as possible. When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty required that I should renounce every pecuniary compensation. From this resolution I have in no instance departed, and, being still under the impression which produced it, I must decline, as inapplicable to myself, any share in the personal emoluments which may indispensably be included in a permanent provision of the executive department, and must, accordingly, pray that the pecuniary estimates for the station in which I am placed may, during my continuance in it, be limited to such actual expenditure as the public good may be thought to require.

Obviously the view of General Washington was that the House of Representatives alone could originate an appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, Mr. President, of course it is very unpatriotic and very presumptuous in any man to advance a view against the constitutional views of General Washington on the constitutional rights of the Senate of the United States; but unfortunately we have to deal with these questions through the centuries, and I venture the statement that nobody in the United States has ever yet lived who had a right to enjoy that opinion except General Washington. I do not think that any one else would have sufficient weight in the Government of the United States to stand upon it without a good deal of discussion to say the least.

I do not wish to protract my remarks about this matter. As I stated when I introduced that bill I did it in good faith, to give our Committee on Commerce an opportunity to work on the bill and have it ready, and if it should turn out that the House of Representatives can not furnish us that bill, then the question will arise, and I hope the Senate will consider it and decide it, whether we shall not send the bill to the House, for we have a duty to perform in connection with this Government that is quite as important as that of the House, and we stand quite as near to the people as the House of Representatives in every matter except those peculiar functions which the Constitution devolves upon that House and excludes us from. I do not believe that the appropriation of money for the service of the Government or the people is one of the functions from which the Senate is shut out by the Constitution.

Mr. JONAS. I would state to the Senator from Alabama that the Senate passed a bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River in the session of 1881–'82. It went to the House, and, like most of the legislation of that Congress, it went on the Speaker's table, and there remained without action until the end of the session.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not propose to go into this very great question which has heretofore exercised the minds of great lawyers, members of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, but I hope that the Committee on Commerce of this body will think twice before it precipitates the question raised by the Senator from Alabama this morning in speaking of his bill. I should have some doubt, as I think he would have as an original proposition, whether a bill appropriating moneys for rivers and harbors would come under the purview of a general appropriation bill; but upon that I believe we are estopped from raising any question, for the Senate has by its rules made it and adopted it as a regular appropriation bill, and so treats it in every regard and particular, with the exception that it is sent to the Committee on Commerce, because it needs a very exhaustive examination of a thousand details. So far as this body is concerned it is treated as a regular appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. President, unless all the traditions and all the beliefs, so far as we can judge by the records of the past and by the course in the past of the House of Representatives, are to be radically and fundamentally changed, that body will never yield, and especially will not yield in the short time that can possibly be given to the discussion of this great question between now and the 4th of March, the position that it has always firmly taken and insisted upon. The exceptions that are referred to by the Senator from Alabama in no way trench upon the general attitude taken always by the House of Representatives.

The report to which the Senator has referred in the past as coming from the House Committee on the Judiciary was antagonized by a most exhaustive minority report, and the House of Representatives never by any action on its part indicated any purpose of changing the traditional ground of the body; and it will not, no matter what is done by this body in the time between now and the close of this session, depart from its former attitude, and it will not agree to surrender its rights. I have no doubt whatever upon this, because I came here somewhat affected, largely affected, by the habits, course of action, and traditions of that body; and I say it will not agree to part with the power over money bills, of initiating the great appropriation bills that are given for the running expenses, the general expenses, of the Government; it will not give up that jurisdiction as inseparably connected with the other great question of the raising of the revenues of the Government, as to how they shall be expended, and the question of what shall be raised as affected by what shall be spent.

I hope, sir, that the Committee on Commerce will consider this carefully. I have no objection to its taking the bill, spending its time upon it, considering the items, and being prepared for any river and harbor appropriation bill that the House of Representatives may send to this body; but I hope it will not, without the greatest care and deliberation, launch upon this body and upon the two Houses that great question at this late day. I can see but one termination that would come from that, and it is not a good time to raise the question now.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary question. I desire to ask the Chair what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate. This debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Reports of committees are yet in order.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg leave to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been the unfortunate and innocent cause of this irrelevant debate upon an inquiry as to the condition of the public business. I desire to say that the assurances given by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kentucky are entirely satisfactory. I made the request in order if possible to repel the insinuations being made that Republicans in the Senate and House desired that there should be an extra session of Congress. In my judgment nothing could be worse for the country and all its various business interests than an extra session of Congress. If there is a Republican member of the Senate who desires an extra session of Congress I do not know him. I doubt very much whether the interests of the incoming administration would be benefited by an extra session of Congress; and it is proper that the declaration should be made that if there is to be an extra session of Congress the responsibility for it will depend not upon the Republicans of this body or the House, but upon the party friends of the head of the next administration.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the following resolution, for which I ask present consideration:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate to George E. Spencer, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, the sum of $7,132, being the amount actually and necessarily expended by him in maintaining his title to his seat.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to inquire whether that is a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. It is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I do not concur in that report as a member of that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution take its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. On the 30th of January last an order was made by the Senate authorizing the claimants in the matter of the claim of Louis C. Madeira and Emilio F. Cabada to withdraw from the files of the Senate all the papers relating to that claim. The papers at that time were in the hands of the Committee on Claims, and I now return them to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be placed on file.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2637) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to release a right of way across lands of the United States at Carlisle, Pa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2638) for the relief of the legal representatives of Peter Lyle, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2639) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1705) to provide for the issue of duplicate checks; and Joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery, and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That after the call for concurrent and other resolutions has been concluded it shall be the duty of the President of the Senate to lay before the Senate, in their order, House bills on the Calendar which have been favorably reported by a Senate committee, subject to the provisions of Rule VIII, which shall continue until 1 o'clock each day until all of such bills shall have been considered.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that resolution open to objection at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that the resolution was offered on a previous day and now comes before the Senate regularly; but the Chair will call attention to Rule XL relative to motions to modify or suspend the rules. The nature of this, the Chair thinks, is a motion to suspend for the rest of the session and to modify the rules regulating the order of business.

Mr. INGALLS. May we hear that rule read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XL will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice, in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof. Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate, except as otherwise provided in clause 1, Rule XII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has not, as the Chair thinks, conformed to the requirements of that rule; but as it has been the practice of the Senate hitherto, before the present rules were adopted, to receive and consider resolutions analogous in their nature to this, the Chair will submit to the Senate the question whether this resolution is in order without a previous notice in writing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better not be submitted as a question of order, but let it be asked whether the Senate, by unanimous consent, will act upon it. I should vote against its being in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first ask, Is there objection to this resolution being considered in order?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Chair will then submit to the Senate the question whether under Rule XL this resolution is in order.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be compelled to vote, if objection is made, that it is not in order, though I am in favor of taking up and passing on the House bills. I hope the Senator from Tennessee, therefore, will give the requisite notice to-day, and it can come up again to-morrow. Clearly it does not conform to the rule now.

Mr. HARRIS. I quite agree with the Senator that it is not in accordance with the requirement of the rule if objection is made. I will give the notice to-day, and it will suit me quite as well to call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside for the time being if there be no objection, and a notice in writing will be required.

The Chair was of opinion that the practice of the Senate had been to receive similar resolutions, and therefore he proposed to submit the question——

Mr. HOAR. It will put the Senator from Tennessee to a good deal of trouble to go over the various rules and specify each one of them in writing. I suggest that instead of that the Senator from Tennessee have unanimous consent that this resolution of his may be considered on Monday.

Mr. HARRIS. To-morrow or Monday.

Mr. HOAR. To-morrow, I mean.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this resolution shall be considered as in order to be laid before the Senate to-morrow on the call for resolutions. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from Tennessee will give such notice as the rules require.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 475) granting arrears of pension to Emily Agnel;

An act (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 750) granting a pension to Catharine Schools;

An act (S. 1823) granting a pension to Ebenezer K. Marden; and

An act (S. 2168) for the relief of the executrix of Ayres P. Merrill.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under the eighth rule.

The consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, was resumed by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, the morning hour has been so nearly consumed with other matters that I dislike very much to commence the discussion of this question this morning at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to make a privileged report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes sir.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HOAR. I am entitled to make the report as a matter of right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From what committee?

Mr. HOAR. The conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in regard to the bill regulating the Presidential count. If the Secretary will read the report I will make a statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a report from a conference committee, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 25) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
JOHN SHERMAN,
JAMES L. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. W. EATON,
R. T. BENNETT,
ALPHONZO HART,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOAR. The House asked the conference and the House has possession of the bill, or the conferees on the part of the House. The usual custom, therefore, is for the report——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Massachusetts is in error as to which House asked the conference. The minutes show that the conference was asked by the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts said, if the Chair understood him, that the House had asked the conference.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Clerk showed me the fact that the House asked the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In that case the report here would have been proper, with the papers, first. The minutes show that the conference was asked by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The other House agreed to the conference and has the papers. But in either case, the other House having the papers, it is the usual custom between the two branches, as I understand, that the report should be made first in the House of Representatives, and the House then should send over its action upon the report to the Senate for its information and action. This disagreement took place in the first week, I think, of the session, and the report was made up at that time very early in the session, but no information has been communicated to the Senate that the House has taken any action or that any report has been made there by the conferees on the part of the House; and I suppose we are justified in inferring, in the absence of such a communication, that no such report has been made to the House by its conferees. I have not heard of any such report having been made.

It seems to me, therefore, under these circumstances that it is the duty of the committee to report to the Senate without waiting the action of the House, which is a mere matter, I suppose, not of absolute parliamentary right but only of courtesy or custom. I therefore make the report, and move that the Senate further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the House and communicate that fact to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels obliged to decide that such a motion is not in order. No vote can be taken on the bill without the bill being in possession of the Senate. The Chair thinks under the circumstances, there being no action in the report recommended for either House on the disagreement, that perhaps a report of this kind, that the conferees have been unable to agree, might be made in the absence of the papers, but the Chair thinks he can not entertain a motion in respect to the Senate insisting.

Mr. HOAR. I differ from the Chair; but to go into that would involve a long discussion of a somewhat unusual matter. I have reflected on the subject. Without insisting on any difference of opinion with the Chair on this subject I withdraw that part of the motion, and will move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives communicating to the House the fact that this report has been made to the Senate by its conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that a message be sent to the House of Representatives informing it that the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill named have reported that they have been unable to agree with the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. ALLISON. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] is entitled to the floor, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, this very extraordinary bill is accompanied by a report of the majority of the committee, occupying nearly forty pages. The records of the Senate will show that this bill was reported without any report from the committee, and time was asked to prepare a report, and it was, if I remember correctly, some two weeks after the bill was reported before the majority report was made in the Senate. I supposed the object of this report was to present for the consideration of the Senate the reasons which operated in the mind of the committee in favor of this bill; and I supposed, therefore, that the reading of the report was a proper matter for the consideration of the Senate preparatory to taking any action upon the bill. Accordingly I asked, when the Senate decided to take up the bill, that the report should be read. Two mornings of the Senate were occupied in reading a portion of it, when I was gravely accused by the Senator in charge of this bill with being an obstructionist, because I asked for the reading of this report. I do not complain of that, Mr. President. I refer to it simply by way of explanation and for the purpose of showing that the request I made was not an unusual nor an unreasonable one.

When I assented yesterday to the proposition that the further reading of the report should be dispensed with, I accompanied that with a statement that at some period of the discussion, and before the final action of the Senate should be taken, I should ask to have the views of the minority, which truly and succinctly present the questions involved in this case, read; and upon the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who prepared the minority report, as I was informed, that I could have it read as a portion of my remarks, I yielded the point, and the discussion was taken up without reading any more of the majority report and without the reading of the views of the minority. Thereupon the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] took the floor and in a very pathetic and earnest appeal in behalf of these settlers occupied the attention of the Senate for a half hour or more in a strain of remark to which none of us can properly take exception, for all our sympathies are enlisted in behalf of those who have mistaken their rights in settling upon this portion of the lands in Iowa. It shall be my purpose before I conclude to show, and to show very conclusively, I think, that the honorable Senator from Iowa entirely failed to reach or touch any question which is involved in the proper consideration of this bill.

I would have preferred that this discussion should have gone on and the vote taken, when it should be finally taken, on the passage of the bill; and yet the motion of the honorable Senator from Alabama is precisely what would have accompanied a minority report if one had been made, as was made by the Judiciary Committee of this body in the Forty-sixth Congress. It leaves the whole question of the merits of this bill open to discussion, and, therefore, it is perhaps as well that the vote of the Senate should be taken upon this motion to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the bill as to have it taken upon the merits of the bill on its final passage. The questions are the same. The motion of the honorable Senator from Alabama to postpone indefinitely the further consideration of the bill presents precisely the same question which would have come up upon its passage, and that is the question: Is the legislation recommended by this bill such as Congress ought to adopt or such as the Senate ought to sanction?

Mr. President, I can not, in justice to the position I occupy here, allow this question to be taken without examining somewhat in detail the points which arise in this case. When I came into the Forty-fourth Congress in 1875, my friend General Martindale, of Rochester, came to me and said he was one of the purchasers of a portion of the land included in this Des Moines River grant. He asked if I would examine the question, and if I found that he was correct in the positions he took, whether I would assist in defeating any legislation which might be attempted in contravention of the rights of the purchasers from the Des Moines River Company. Being a friend of his, I told him I would. He brought me the papers, which I have had in my possession ever since—most of the papers I have now in my possession—and we spent some time together in the examination of the questions which arise in this case. I promised to aid, as far as I could, the citizens of my State and of Michigan and of a portion of the New England States who had become the purchasers of this property, in defeating the effort which is now made to deprive them of their rights.

General Martindale has since gone to an early though an honored grave; but the covenant I made with him is a "covenant running with the land," and is binding upon me as long as I have a voice or a vote in this body to prevent the consummation of this great wrong upon the rights of these persons.

In August, 1846, Congress made a grant of land to the then Territory of Iowa of the odd sections five miles in width on each side of the Des Moines River for the purpose of improving the navigation of that river from the Raccoon Fork to its mouth. There was no limit in terms in the grant as to the distance along the river which was covered by this enactment.

The Territory of Iowa, through its representatives, claimed that it covered the entire land (odd sections) five miles on each side of the river from the source of the river in the then Territory of Minnesota, and they were clamorous in that claim in the Halls of Congress and before the Departments. The officers of the Government having charge of this subject at that time—for there was no Interior Department then—entertained at first the view that that claim was a correct one, and opened the lands for assignment under this grant of 1846 to the northern bounds of the Territory of Iowa, but not carrying them into the Territory of Minnesota. Accordingly a portion of these lands were assigned to the Territory of Iowa above the Raccoon Fork, which is the scene of the present controversy, on each side of the Des Moines River. Iowa continued to claim that the counter constructions, which were adopted from time to time by the officers of the Government, were erroneous and that she was entitled to these lands by virtue of the grant of 1846. She persisted in that claim, and obtained in the month of March, 1861, a joint resolution of both Houses of Congress that all the lands in this grant certified to the State above the Raccoon Fork to the north boundary of the State should vest in the State of Iowa and in its grantees, which were the Des Moines River Navigation Company and their vendees, the persons whom I represent at this time. An act of Congress was also passed in the year 1862, which confirmed the same title and determined that all the lands which had been set apart by the action of the authorities of the Government as constituting a portion of the lands devoted to the improvement of the Des Moines River should vest in the State and its grantees.

In the course of the proceedings the Des Moines River Navigation Company entered into a contract with the State to make these improvements of the Des Moines River, and to receive, in consideration of the performance of that contract, a grant of these very lands. They were conveyed by the State—every acre of the lands now in controversy was conveyed by the State to the Des Moines River Navigation Company. The Des Moines River Navigation Company conveyed them for value to the persons whom I in part represent. The Des Moines River Navigation Company expended over $366,000 in the work of improving this river, and every dollar of the money was obtained through the sale of these lands, as the Territory first, and the State afterward, had no other means of raising money for the purpose of carrying on these improvements, except by a sale of the lands; and all the money which was expended—fruitlessly, it is true, it turned out to be; but that is not our fault—in these improvements, amounting, as I have said, to over $366,000, was money raised by the sale of these very lands, and was the basis of the title of the purchasers, in whose behalf I now appear.

After the Territory of Iowa first, and the State of Iowa afterward, had clamored in the Halls of Congress for this recognition of the title and obtained it, first by the grant of 1846, then by the resolution of 1861, and then by the act of 1862, and had acquired this large amount of money from purchasers of this property, the representatives of Iowa now turn around and say: "Why, all this was a nullity." That is the present attitude of those who represent the State here. "There were no valid titles conferred by these acts of Congress; the question is all open;" and they ask that here shall be made a public declaration by the Congress of the United States that these lands are now public lands of the United States to the extent they are in the occupancy of settlers—mere squatters thereon.

Well, Mr. President, this very statement of the proposition ought to satisfy every reasonable mind that it is a question with which we have nothing to do. If there had been no decisions of the Supreme Court, it ought to satisfy everybody that it is a question with which we have nothing to do. These acts of Congress were grants, grants in præsenti; they passed the title to the State of Iowa, and the State of Iowa passed the title to the Des Moines River Navigation Company, and that company sold these lands to private purchasers. It is true the purchasers are non-residents of the State, the great bulk of them—I do not know but all of them; and there is the source of all this hostility to these claimants. These lands have been purchased and paid for by men residing in the State of New York, in the State of Massachusetts, in the State of Michigan, and in the State of New Hampshire, and because, forsooth, these gentlemen chose to put their capital into the purchase of lands in Iowa and are non-residents of the State, they are not to be considered by these clamorous men in Iowa, settlers, as they are termed, on the Des Moines River lands. Mr. President, let us see what kind of settlers they are.

I have said that the original grant was made in 1846, that the confirming grants, which settled all questions about the extent of it within the State of Iowa, were made in 1861 and 1862. In 1873 Congress passed an act for the purpose of appointing commissioners to investigate this whole question of the settlers upon the Des Moines River lands, reporting who were the settlers, giving a list of the value of the lands they occupied, with a view of having some provision made by Congress to compensate them for the losses to which they had been subjected. Those commissioners were appointed, and a report was made. That report was made to Congress under the act of March 3, 1873, by Mr. O. P. Chubb, Mr. Charles Aldrich, and Mr. J. S. Robinson, the commissioners appointed under the act for the purpose of making this investigation. They give a schedule of all the occupants of these lands, of the date when their occupancy commenced, of the estimated value of the lands, and of the sums which they were willing to receive by way of compensation for them. From this report the fact appears that there is not a settler upon these Iowa lands, save two or three—to one of whose claims I will refer before I close—who did not go upon the lands and make the settlement either as a homestead entry or a pre-emption entry after all this legislation of Congress and after all these conveyances.

The great bulk of these entries, as shown by this document, were in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, after the whole question of the title to these lands had been settled by this resolution and these acts of Congress, after the conveyance had been made by the State of Iowa to the Des Moines River Navigation Company, and that company had gone into the possession of these lands, and after the purchases had been made by those in whose behalf I now appear. What is the use, then, of talking about their being bona fide occupants? As the Judiciary Committee of this body four years ago decided, they are none of them bona fide occupants and claimants of title. They were all chargeable with notice of the state of the title before they entered or attempted to enter upon these lands. They are, therefore, not in a position, if we are to look at it in one light, to claim even the sympathy of the members of this body, because they have acted with their eyes wide open. They can not claim to have gone upon this property in good faith. The property had been withdrawn by the action of the officers of the Government from entry as public land and had been certified by the authorities of the Government to the State prior to the time when they made these entries.

It may be a fertile valley, as the honorable Senator from Iowa so fervidly said yesterday; I presume it is; but I think I shall show before I conclude the consideration of this question that it has been a very poorly tilled fertile valley since these settlers went into the occupancy of these lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday's sitting, being the bill (H. R. 3993) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New York may have an opportunity to complete his remarks on the Des Moines River bill this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senator from New York be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to say that in the condition of my health this morning I prefer not to go on. It will take me an hour or two to say what I am going to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Chair considers to be in the nature of an objection.

TEXAS PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the Texas Pacific Railroad forfeiture bill is the business before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Nebraska give way?

Mr. VAN WYCK. For what purpose?

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to ask of the Senate consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should prefer not to yield at this time for that purpose. This bill now under consideration by the Senate probably will not require much time or more at all events than the consideration of the bill to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to state that debate is not in order. The Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska to object to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. INGALLS. The unfinished business now before the Senate was reported from the Committee on Public Lands by my colleague [Mr. PLUMB], who is the chairman of that committee, and who is unavoidably detained from the sessions of the Senate upon a conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. He is unable to be present without interfering with other business intrusted to him by the Senate; and as there can be no danger from delay I would ask the Senator from Nebraska to consent in consequence of the statement I have made about my colleague's engagements to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, allowing this bill to retain its place on the Calendar of Special Orders.

Mr. HOAR. What is the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. The Texas Pacific Railroad forfeiture.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask unanimous consent to make a reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Nebraska will be heard in reply to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senate fully understands, and the country also, the nature of the bill which is now proposed to be considered. I of course do not desire to refuse the request of the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from New Hampshire if it may be certain that this bill will not be put in any further peril. It has been put in peril already. About the middle of December it was placed upon the Calendar of Special Orders and there remained without probably any special effort to force its consideration until it was reached on that Calendar, and then it was displaced by taking up for consideration a bill the principal feature of which, if ingrafted by this body and passed here, never can become a law by the concurrence of the other House, and this bill then was placed in peril by being necessarily thrust back and buried in the General Calendar.

That has been its history. There is no reason why this bill should require as much time as the one propounded by the Senator from New Hampshire. It is a plain, simple forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad, and so plain and so obviously just are the features of this bill that, if I may be allowed to say so, it was passed unanimously by the other House, or practically unanimously——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is not in order in referring to the proceedings of the other House.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If I had some papers I might read some facts upon that which might be in order. If I read from the RECORD the result of the votes in the House I suppose the Chair would hold that that would be out of order also?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would certainly so hold.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I shall have to endeavor to get that idea before this body in some other way. [Laughter.]

Some things are very remarkable. The very moment that a land-grant forfeiture comes up in this body terror seizes in some directions. Why should it on a bill of this importance? If I may not say how it was passed in the other House, I suppose it is competent for me to say that this bill is demanded by the unanimous sentiment of the American people. There is unanimity there, whether there was unanimity in the other House or not when they voted on this bill, or whether there will be unanimity in this body when this bill is voted upon here.

There is no reason why this bill should be displaced, no reason why it should not have prompt consideration, and there has been no reason for the last two months. I have a right to say to my friends here that we can not "palter" with the people "in a double sense" on this matter. Our own State and national conventions have demanded that there should be prompt and speedy action upon these matters. The national convention which represents the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber was equally as unanimous and emphatic in its expression of a demand for the restoration to the public domain of forfeited lands, and that it should be done by the prompt action of Congress.

I am desirous that this bill should be speedily acted upon. I am willing to yield to another measure if thereby this bill be placed in no peril; and yet I think every day's delay imperils the bill. If it remains unacted upon until the week coming, then we are to be met with appropriation bills from day to day, and it will be an easy matter for gentlemen by long speeches to prevent a final consummation.

I desire at least to maintain my position upon this matter. I have as far as has been proper sought to press the consideration of this bill. We have discussed the question involved in it on other bills. There is no question remaining to be considered which has not been discussed. The matter has been considered on other bills. We have been enabled in this Congress to pass one of these bills into law and only one, and that was a bill where the railroad company itself was willing that its land grant should be forfeited. We have done nothing more. We have passed one bill which the railroad company concerned consented we should pass—nothing more. I desire that we shall not stop with that. We had some difficulty in passing that bill through this body where the railroad company were willing we should do it.

Now, the present owners of this Texas Pacific road of all men have no claim upon the generosity or the liberality of the people of this Union or of the American Congress. Have we forgotten those celebrated letters written by that great historian Huntington, of the Central Pacific Railroad, as to what was done with the Texas Pacific when he was here in the lobby? We at least can be admonished by the very forcible history which he has made; we at least should be admonished that we furnish no excuse for scandal and no opportunity for any historian like Huntington, or possibly Huntington himself, to reproduce in duplicate any chapters of history of the same kind.

I desired to say this much, because I do not know from the process of rules and the obstructions which arise from them whether I shall have an opportunity to say anything more on this question.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We have had notice that an appropriation bill will be called up to-morrow. If the Senator gives way now there is no telling when he can get his bill up.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Without intending to seem offensive or discourteous, I would prefer to have this bill take its course according to the rules of this body. If the majority choose to displace it, that is for them to say. If the rules thrust it aside, that will be no fault of the friends of the measure in this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska objects to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to be heard. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. I have never found it necessary to disregard what I believed to be my duty under the apprehension that I should be accused of any wrongful motive if I failed to make strong ad captandum demonstrations for the consideration of the public with reference to any matter of legislation that I was called upon to participate in. I am willing to settle those questions between my own sense of duty and such light as I may get from my constituents and from the country and such intellectual powers as I may possess; and whatever may be the result to myself personally from the discharge of my duty as I understand it, I accept that result.

Now, in regard to the Texas Pacific bill, in relation to which the Senator from Nebraska has offered these strange remarks, I have this to say: I am opposed to it in its present form. I am not opposed to its consideration, and I am ready to take my share of responsibility for any action that I in the end may see fit to take. My record will be here for consideration. But, sir, that bill has no rights here more than other measures of legislation. Such rights as it has I am perfectly willing that it should hold if, in the judgment of the Senate, it should retain them.

I wish now to make a little statement with reference to another bill, and if I had the unusual faculty which the Senator from Nebraska seems to possess of insinuating the opinions of the public, or of bringing an indirect pressure upon the members of this body to induce them to act as they might not act yielding quietly to the dictates of their own consciences and sense of duty, I might undertake to say that here is a bill in which the mass of the people are interested, in which all the 55,000,000 people in the United States are interested, and with reference to which it is not safe for the Senate to "palter in a double sense;" with reference to which the platforms of both parties are explicit, and in regard to which there are at least 25,000,000 people in this country anxious and interested for its consideration and for its passage; and if we postpone it, or if we in any way displace it from consideration, we shall be liable to the suspicion that lobbyists and improper influences are the source of the motives which actuate us.

The bill of which I speak has precedence in conscience and in all the formalities of parliamentary law over the Texas Pacific bill. It came to us in the last session. It came in the due and orderly course of business before this body a short time prior to the adjournment last summer. I insisted upon its being heard. Its consideration at that time was defeated by what I thought to be an unnecessary insistence upon formalities, and there can be no Senator present who does not know that this bill was not treated precisely with that fairness that I had a right to expect, nor was I treated personally as a Senator in the management of the bill with that courtesy which we deem ordinarily to be Senatorial. I did my best to get it passed at that time in compliance with what I and all Senators and the country knew to be a strong popular demand; but it was defeated, and upon the motion of the honorable Senator from Georgia not now in his seat [Mr. BROWN] it was postponed until the 9th of last December, quite a number of days before the Texas Pacific bill reached the records of the Senate, coming from its committee, and was placed upon its Calendar. So at this session this bill was in the nature of unfinished business. I understood that it had all the rights of a special order; so did other friends of the measure; but there were special orders interposed a little earlier than that time, and when on the 9th day of December something prevented the consideration of this bill, it went off into the limbo of cases upon the General Calendar. I, however, from that time until the present have made repeated efforts to get it before the Senate for consideration. I have been watching from that time until the present every day when I was not confined to my room by sickness to get the bill before the Senate of the United States for consideration. It has been awarded consideration by the unanimous sense of those members of the Senate who sit upon this side of the House very considerably in advance, as the Senator knows, of the bill which he is now pressing in opposition to it, and I only ask that it may be heard in accordance with those understandings which are binding upon gentlemen and in accordance with the rights of this bill before the Senate and before the country.

Now, sir, I do not anticipate that it will consume any very considerable time. It is a short bill. I do not propose to make a speech upon it. I do not propose to speak upon it half as long as I am now speaking for the purpose of getting consideration for it. A few which I deem to be unimportant amendments I shall offer. They are to some extent, to a very large extent, verbal amendments, and I imagine that the bill may be disposed of, if the Senate proceeds to its consideration, in the course of the afternoon; perhaps in the course of a single half hour.

And, sir, as objection is made against proceeding to its consideration, if I am in order I desire to move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I am aware of that rule, but I desire to ask unanimous consent just to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to be heard upon this matter. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. We are coming to that period in the session when the antagonism between different measures is absolutely sharp, and the advocates of them urge them perhaps with a little more zeal than may be commendable, and we consume more time in discussion as to what we shall take up than would be necessary to dispose of the measures taken up. The measure proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is one that I think will occupy very little time. I think it will receive general concurrence. I believe there is a very wide and general demand for some legislation upon the subject in restraint of those contracts made abroad for the importation of gangs of men to work in this country.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is there any difficulty, if the bill be as important as the Senator thinks, in its being taken up by the Senate immediately after the consideration of the bill now properly before us?

Mr. HARRISON. Probably not; but the bill to which the Senator from Nebraska refers is one I think likely to occupy more time. They are both House bills.

Mr. BLAIR. But this came a long time before the other, and we commenced action on it at the last session.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me that we ought to take up this contract-labor bill and dispose of it, and that we may do it, if the Senator from Nebraska will only agree to it, in a way not to displace his bill at all, but let it follow immediately after this.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator ask unanimous consent that the labor bill be taken up immediately after the consideration of the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill, and then we shall have done with one bill, and he can get unanimous consent for the other.

Mr. HARRISON. Probably we can not get unanimous consent. But I will not take any more time than to say that I will not be put by the Senator from Nebraska's remarks in an attitude of opposition to the land-grant forfeiture bills. I believe in bringing them on to early consideration; but I am inclined to believe that the bill to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, as its consideration will occupy but little time, ought to be considered now, and I shall vote for his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 863, being House bill No. 2550.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the Chair a question? If the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire succeeds, then the Texas Pacific bill is thrown back to the General Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want that distinctly understood.

Mr. BUTLER. Will one objection prevent the consideration of the bill now called up by the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not. Under the rules a motion is in order to proceed to its consideration now, which motion by the rules must be decided without debate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PUGH (when Mr. GIBSON's name was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. I do not know how he would vote, and I refrain from voting.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Pugh,
Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Harrison,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Call,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Wilson.
Conger,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Pike,
Dolph,	Jackson,	Platt,

NAYS—19.

Bayard,	Coke,	Jonas,	Vance,
Beck,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Van Wyck,
Butler,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Hill,	Slater,

ABSENT—28.

Brown,	George,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Camden,	Gibson,	Logan,	Ransom,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Groome,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Farley,	Kenna,	Pendleton,	Walker.

So the motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR. My intimation to the Senate was that I did not desire to be heard in a set speech on the general subject; but I wish to have a few amendments made, which are chiefly formal.

In section 1, lines 9 and 10, I move that the words "to perform service or labor" be stricken out. They seem to be superfluous.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. In section 2, line 6, after the word "service," I move to insert the words "or having reference to the performance of service or labor by any person."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. In section 2, line 8, I move to strike out the words "such persons" and to insert "the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. In section 3, line 12, after the word "person," I move to insert the words "who shall first bring his action therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. In section 3, line 14, I move to strike out the words "who may choose to bring such suit."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. In section 5, line 15, after the word "singers," I move to insert the words, "nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLISON in the chair). The Chair suggests a verbal correction in line 8 of section 3. The word "poral" is printed instead of "parol." That change will be made.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether the amendments he has been proposing come from the committee?

Mr. BLAIR. No; the Committee on Education and Labor reported the bill without any amendment in the hope that it might be passed during the last session. There were some objections made to the bill, and these are amendments that I have drawn and offered in this way without any formal consultation with the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I have had no notice of what the amendments are, and I desire to hear the bill read as it has been amended, so that we may know what is in it.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly. If I had deemed them to be radical and substantial amendments I should have felt that I ought to have called the attention of the committee to them.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not make any complaint about that, of course. I merely wanted to know where is the proper print of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read as amended the sections of the bill which have been amended at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Chief Clerk read section 1 of the bill as amended, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand that the words in lines 9 and 10, "to perform service or labor," have been stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been stricken out.

Mr. McPHERSON. Has that amendment been agreed to by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will see that those words are superfluous, and are to be found later on in the sentence near the close of the section. It is merely a grammatical correction. If the Senator will turn to the next page he will see that the words are there to be found inserted.

Mr. McPHERSON. I suppose it is not in order to discuss an amendment which has been already acted upon by the Senate, but it seemed to me that the whole object and purpose of the bill was to prevent the importation of foreigners under the contract system, like the Chinese, who have been so much complained of. Unless there is some part of the bill which corrects this defect, the result will be that no importation can be made, that no assistance can be given to any foreigners or aliens whatever, even for the establishment, if you please, of an agricultural or a manufacturing colony, or anything of that kind in this country.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will observe, what I stated in the beginning, that these words were stricken out simply as a grammatical correction, and the same words, having the proper connection to express the sense of the section, are to be found at the top of the next page. The section reads in this way, the amendment being made:

Under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

There was a grammatical mistake, which was only corrected in the interest of good English.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read section 2, as amended, and also the remaining sections of the bill which have been amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all contracts or agreements, express or implied, parol or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation, and doing business within the United States, and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service, or having reference to the performance of service or labor by any person, of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, previous to the migration or importation of the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for into the United States, shall be utterly void and of no effect

SEC. 3. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same, and the remaining half or moiety into the Treasury of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, either in private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents or citizens of the United States to act as private secretaries, servants, or domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in the United States as aforesaid; nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to peform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers, nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In section 5, line 7, after the word "aforesaid," I move to strike out the words:

Nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

It is a very easy thing for gentlemen who desire to import labor under contract to have it called "skilled labor." The man who works in the mines is a skilled laborer, I think; the man who works in a factory is a skilled laborer. When the men were locked out of the glass-making establishments in this country there were found "skilled workmen" to take their places; and when the iron manufacturers close their doors against American workmen because they will not work at reduced wages, and sometimes at starvation wages equal to those of the pauper labor of Europe, then it will be said that it is "skilled labor" that is to be brought under contract from foreign countries. So I move that those words be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill was not framed by children and babes, but by the men whose interests it undertakes to guard and conserve. By their leading and most intellectual representatives they came before the committee of the House of Representatives, as they did before our committee, asking for this bill, which they had studied, and which embodied the ideas and propositions which they thought necessary to remedy the public evils of which they complain. The provision which the Senator from Nebraska moves to strike out is one that they were particularly careful to have included in the bill; and to strike it out would, in the general estimate of all those who take any affirmative interest in the enactment of the bill into a law, entirely emasculate it. They very likely would then prefer its defeat, or at all events would become indifferent to its enactment.

The Senate and the Senator perhaps will observe that the proposition which he moves to strike out is one which reserves to the country, to capital and to labor alike, the opportunity for the establishment of such industries, if there are any, as do not already exist in our country, and leaves open the power to American capital and enterprise and to American labor to secure from foreign countries the necessary skilled workmen to establish a new industry and to instruct the American laborer in the secrets and mysteries of the art. It has no application where the industry is already established in this country. It does not reach the iron industry nor the glass industry, nor any other industry which now flourishes upon American soil. It simply gives us the opportunity to establish new industries if there should be any occasion to do so, and thus affords the opportunity for additional investment of American capital and the employment of American labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. In section 5, line 2, after the word "of," I move to insert the words "the United States or of any;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen of the United States or of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, &c.

I propose to follow that with another amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection to it except that the amendment already made after the word "singers," in line 15 of the same section, cures the difficulty and covers the same ground. After the word "singers" the words were inserted "nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants." That is the same amendment and perhaps is a little broader than the one suggested by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware withdraws the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the bill is in contravention of natural right and ought to be very carefully considered indeed. I hesitate, however, because the Senator from New Hampshire tells me it was drawn by somebody outside and that we ought to be careful how we amend it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator, I imagine, will be careful not to misrepresent what I said. I have in no wise intimated that we ought to be careful how we amend it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator said it was drawn with great care by somebody outside, with very great care, and he implied that it was so well drawn that it would be wise for us not to amend it without thinking a great deal. I am sure that is not a misrepresentation of what he said. But that does not of course release us from responsibility in the matter.

I am a believer in the most generous doctrines of immigration, in the most generous and liberal doctrines toward people of any part of the world who desire to come here. That is the existing law, or the old law. Blackstone cautions us in legislating to think of the old law, the mischief and the remedy. Now, what is the mischief? Of the millions who come over here the great mass with scarcely measurable exceptions are people who come here to better their condition in every respect. I I do not pretend to say that the majority of them reason carefully as to the difference between governmental institutions, but they believe that here they can get better wages for their labor, live in better houses, be able to clothe and educate themselves and their children to better advantage, and therefore they come. They are the vast majority of the people who come here.

What are the exceptions to this general fact? I will acknowledge that there are some evils. I will acknowledge that it is against the true policy of settlement here to encourage the coming of numbers of very ignorant laborers from abroad, an ignorant and a degraded class of laborers, who are willing to come here and engage themselves before they come to work at a very small price; but I think it has very seldom happened that they have not found out before they have been here long that they can get better wages. There have been very few who have come here so ignorant as not to discover that they could get a dollar and a half instead of a dollar and a quarter, and they are pretty apt to ask what their labor is worth after they have been here a short time.

Should some of these laborers violate the contract that brought them to our shores, I do not see what remedy the employer is to have, for the laborer is not a slave. He can bring his action for a violation of the contract, and the damages he would get from an American court may be imagined. For example, a laborer came here under an agreement to work two years for 50 cents a day, what damages would court and jury be likely to give the employer who obtained judgment against a penniless and ignorant laborer for the violation of a contract made in a foreign country? Is it likely that men are employed for a long time in this country upon very low wages, wages that are a degradation to the laborers themselves or to the laborers around them?

So I think the evil is exaggerated. But I am willing to acknowledge that there is an evil. It is a very discreditable and disgraceful thing, unjust to American citizens, that a body of men should be invited over here virtually to assume the condition of slaves or of peasants or peons; and if there were a way of correcting that, I should be glad to do it. Perhaps there is; perhaps this body will do it; but I say again that the bill is in contravention of natural right, and should be very carefully considered.

Now let me look at section 3 as it has been amended. For every violation of this proposed act, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of persons to perform labor under a contract after they come over here, &c., there shall be a penalty of a thousand dollars—half to the informer or prosecutor, I believe; and that there may be no element lacking, an amendment was put in this morning to add:

By any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner.

The bill offers to the foreigner the chance to make a bargain to get himself over to the United States and work to pay his passage for a certain length of time, or to work afterward, if you please, but tells him "the day after you get here you may throw up your contract; you may inform upon the man who, whether from motives of gain or generosity, brought you over here; you may have him mulcted in the sum of a thousand dollars, and five hundred of that shall go into your pocket." I do not like the sound of that sort of legislation. Perhaps I am unnecessarily scrupulous, but I do not like the sound of it.

Again, in the fifth section it is wisely put in that this act shall not be construed to prevent any persons from engaging skilled labor to engage in a new industry—in substance, I quote it not literally—

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

That is very loose criminal legislation, Mr. President—very much so indeed. I have been trying to think of some illustration. The nearest I can think of perhaps is the manufacture of plush, such as we see commonly upon the seats of railway cars. It has been all imported. I do not know how much has been done, very little has been done, toward introducing the industry in this country. I do not know why. It seems to me it might be easily done, but such has been the fact.

Mr. FRYE. There is a large concern in Maine.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, it has been growing, but I know that within a short time very large purchases have been made abroad, within one, two, or three years. I happen to know that individually. Here the industry is something. Suppose this Maine establishment desires to keep the business going in the United States, and do not know where to find workmen accustomed to make that particular article. Or I will make the case better for my argument; I will suppose that a new corporation in Connecticut desires to start the business, and not having been aware of the fact that there were skilled workmen in Maine, and that it might buy them away from the Maine establishment by offering a little higher wages, they go over to France and secure there a few skilled workmen, weavers who know just precisely the process of making plush. They are to be fined for it; they are to be heavily punished for it, because they might have gone to Maine and got away those skilled workmen from the Maine establishment, or borrowed them. But suppose they are not aware—I did not happen to be until this moment; if I were going into the business I should probably have found out that there was already an establishment here—but suppose they are not aware that there have been a hundred or two hundred skilled workmen already brought over, and they are here in this country to be found somewhere. Suppose the Maine establishment had broken down, and these men had scattered, some were gardeners, some were plowmen, some were blacksmiths, no matter what; I might have found a hundred skilled workmen if I had looked long enough among 57,000,000 people between Maine and Oregon. But if I go over without hunting them up I am liable to be heavily punished, because the proviso says:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

I do not like those things. If this measure had provided that no such contracts could be binding for anything more than the reasonable sum required to pay transportation to the United States it would have suited me very much better. I do not see how Patrick, coming over here and finding himself in a good place where another gardener is wanted, can ask his neighbor Andy to come, if he does not happen to be his brother. He is kindly permitted to help his brother over, but he wants to write over to Andy to say that in that same garden or in a neighboring garden there is an equally good place, and if he will come over he will do very much better. Andy says, "I have not a penny, and I do not see how I can save $5 a year where I am now." Patrick says, "I will give you the $20 to bring you from Queenstown over here, if you will come and work for me in this garden and see that the wages are secured to me, beyond enough to pay your board and clothes, until you can pay the $20 back." For so helping Andy out he is liable to a heavy penalty, and Andy might himself put a penalty upon him within forty-eight hours after he got over on this side.

I do not believe there is an association of laboring men in this country that desires to put anything of this kind or to put possibilities of this sort upon the statute-book of the United States. I am not afraid to discuss it freely. I am not afraid to vote against the bill if I think it best to do so. I do not think that any bill of this sort, in contravention of natural right, placing to a certain extent a stigma upon honest labor and honest enterprise, should be passed without most careful deliberation. I should like to have not alone the judgment of one committee but of many others. I should like to have that of the Judiciary Committee, which is supposed to be composed, and is, we believe, of able, learned, judicious lawyers. I should like to have them consider it, and the many gentlemen who are constitutional lawyers. I should like to have them think over it a good deal, to say nothing of the people who have read the Declaration of Independence. I do not like the bill, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the force of the amendment that he has made to the first section of the bill. I do not think that the Senator could have investigated or studied over the effect that his amendment will produce, or he would not have offered it. The first section of the bill, as now amended, in my opinion would prevent the importation of any persons or any encouragement being given to any persons in any of the countries of Europe or elsewhere to come to the United States even as colonists. I supposed that if there was any want which the people of this country felt more than another, especially in the Southern and Western sections of the country, it was colonists, it was people to settle, it was money to be brought into those sections for the purpose of developing the resources of that part of the country. I supposed the bill was framed very largely, if not entirely, upon the idea of protecting labor.

In the first section of the bill you prohibit any encouragement of any persons coming here for any purpose, and the Senator has stricken out the saving clause of that section, which is found in the ninth and tenth lines, "for the purpose of performing service or labor." In answer to the inquiry made by me a few moments ago the Senator says it is remedied in the second section of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Not in the second section.

Mr. McPHERSON. I submit that it is not. The second section of the bill expressly provides——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will excuse me——

Mr. McPHERSON. In one moment, as soon as I have finished my statement. The second section of the bill does provide that the importation of these persons shall not be assisted by any person, company, partnership, or corporation for the purpose of performing service or labor anywhere; but the first section stands entirely alone, and declares that they shall not be assisted for any purpose whatever. Is not that the natural effect of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. BLAIR. Most certainly not. If the Senator would read the whole section instead of criticising a single phrase, and would apply his knowledge of the English language to classic usage either in speaking or writing, he would see that the section with those words stricken out has precisely the same effect that he understands it would have with those words in. I would trouble the Senator, if he has no objection, to read the whole section, and he will see that the words "to perform service or labor" stricken out in the ninth and tenth lines are simply superfluous; that the construction requires their elimination; and it is for that reason they were stricken out. The words "to perform labor or service" are precisely the same words——

Mr. McPHERSON. Do you retain the words on the second page?

Mr. BLAIR. They are retained.

Mr. McPHERSON. In the eleventh and twelfth lines?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understood the Senator's amendment to strike out all the words "to perform service or labor" in the section, in lines 9 and 10 and in lines 11 and 12.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought the Senator must have misapprehended it. I failed to make myself understood. I gave as a reason for striking out the words in the ninth and tenth lines the fact that they were in the eleventh and twelfth lines.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am entirely wrong, for I supposed the Senator's amendment included the striking out of the words in the eleventh and twelfth lines.

Mr. BLAIR. No. With those words retained the section has precisely the effect which the Senator understands it to have had originally in the way of the protection of American labor.

I hardly know whether it is worth while to engage in any discussion. I had not contemplated it. This bill has been before the country for a long time and the subject-matter to which it relates has been much discussed. I had supposed the measure to be entirely in consonance with the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the rights of mankind. I certainly would not have purposely made an assault upon the muniments of American liberty or of human liberty. I am willing, I am really if I know myself anxious, that all men should have a chance; that poor men should have a chance, and that the poor classes in all parts of the world should get up a little, step after step, and rise to the full dignity of freedom and of individual sovereignty; that every man should be a king, and that every man should have all the rights that any other man has.

The bill is aimed at slavery rather than freedom. It is designed to prevent substantially the cooly practices which have been initiated and carried on to a considerable extent between America and Europe, and which we have undertaken to prohibit not alone in the forum of general public sentiment, but in the legislation which both parties and the majorities in both branches of Congress have seen fit to enact.

The bill does not aim to prohibit the natural flow of immigration from any other land to the United States. It leaves all natural laws, business laws, social laws, industrial laws to their natural effect and operation. But it does undertake to prohibit the efforts of corporations and of individuals, of capitalists, which have been put forth to some extent in this country to introduce into it the cheap and servile labor of foreign lands, and, when it is not necessary to do so for the good of the American people and the promotion of American industries, the skilled labor of other countries, because that labor, as we know, can be commanded at very greatly reduced wages as compared with what we pay to the working people of our own country.

There have been repeated instances in all the great industries of this country where such importation has been made for the purpose of effecting a reduction of the natural rate of wages in this country such as our working people seem to be entitled to, such as are indispensable in order that they may participate by purchase (for we have nothing that we do not pay for with money in this world) in their due and just proportion of the benefits of civilization and of the principles of American liberty realized. It was in evidence before the committee of the House, and I was so informed personally by some of the leading representatives of the laboring element of the glass industry in this country, that the introduction of skilled glass workmen from the old countries by the practice which is prohibited by the bill—that is, by contracts made in advance for the services of skilled laborers abroad—had the effect to reduce at least 25 per cent. the previously existing rates and the natural rates of wages to those workmen who were engaged in that industry. That is one illustration.

I suppose it is not necessary to quote the newspapers of the country to show that the tremendous difficulties, disturbances, dangers not alone to capital but to life, and affording a most dangerous example to the country at large, in the Hocking Valley mines in Ohio, are attributed by the laboring people there to precisely the same practice that the bill is designed to prohibit; and I have seen it recently stated that already the pecuniary loss to that valley is upward of $4,000,000, and when the trouble is to end and how it is to end is beyond the prophetic vision of any man.

In regard to the suggestion that Patrick can not send for Mike, his relative and friend in the old country, it would almost seem to be trifling with the general framework and purposes of the bill. There is an express provision that this measure shall not be held to interfere with any individual assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States.

It would be utterly impossible, probably, to fashion a bill which could not be subjected to some criticism. It would probably be utterly impossible to so frame this bill that in some direction, to some extent, it might not by an adverse and unfriendly spirit of interpretation, be claimed that it verged somewhat in the direction of an impairment of individual rights. But here is an evil which in the estimation of those who are interested in this bill is a very great one, and we must so frame our legislation as to reach the evil. If it should be found in its practical working that further legislation should be had to relieve it of some of its harsher operations, if evils shall be developed in its operation, then that can be remedied. It is comparatively a new field of legislation.

The bill has been prepared with a great deal of care and thought; and by those who have suffered from the evil and who are interested in the Declaration of Independence as much as the Senator from Connecticut or as myself, it has been thought to reach with its remedial provisions the evil under which they suffer. I am not averse to any criticism or discussion of the bill nor to any amendment of it which seems to be consistent with the principles of the Declaration of Independence and not subversive of the general purposes of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I listened to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], as I always do, with great pleasure and instruction, and I am sure that I sympathize with him as fully as any man can do in the views he expressed about the rights of man, and the infringement that appeared to be imposed upon those rights by some of the provisions of the bill; but we are confronted by a portentous exigency, and shall shortly be required to consider whether the doctrines of the natural rights of man as applied to this continent have not reached a dangerous extremity. We shall be called upon to decide whether every man, woman, and child on the face of this earth, no matter what may be his physical, mental, or moral condition, has the natural right to come to this country and do as he pleases and act as he pleases, to the detriment, it may be, of those here already.

Sir, there are 500,000 wage-workers, willing to labor, out of employment at this particular instant of time in the United States. With their dependent women and children, not less than 3,000,000 people in all are to-day, amid the extraordinary rigors of an unusually inclement winter, suffering for the necessaries of life. They need shelter. They are in want of the clothing that might be manufactured from the surplus production of our factories now stored in warehouses and waiting for a purchaser. They are in need of the corn that is this afternoon being burned for fuel on the plains of Nebraska and the wheat that is being fed to hogs in the valleys of Kansas. The gravity of the situation can not be exaggerated. It is an alarming paradox. In the midst of copious abundance there is haggard wretchedness and starvation. With all the elements of prosperity around us there is unprecedented depression and adversity.

We are confronted with the inquiry whether, under the doctrine of the natural rights of man, we are not under obligations as a nation to protect our own citizens against dangerous, detrimental, and prejudicial competition forced upon us either by the laudable ambition of those who desire to better their condition or by the cupidity of those great employers who are indifferent to the means they employ to swell their egregious gains.

Sir, the condition of society is serious and demands comment. The nations of the earth, under this doctrine of natural right—the right of every man on the face of the planet to come to the United States if he wants to—have been for a generation dumping their paupers, their dangerous and criminal classes, upon our shores under one pretext and another, until I am well-nigh persuaded, in view of recent demonstrations in New York, in Cincinnati, in Pittsburgh, and Chicago, that the time has come to consider whether it may not be patriotic and prudent in some degree to modify existing views as to the significance of the Declaration of American Independence and the universal rights of man. I hazard nothing of veracity in saying that there are elements in this country at work now which will require, as I said the other day in debate upon another subject, the very active coalition of the conservative forces of our system if we desire to prevent organic changes in our form of government through destructive assaults upon our institutions, upon our accumulations, upon our industries, upon everything that by the grace of God under our civilization has made America what we are proud to claim it to be to-day.

The recent violent demonstrations in various parts of this country forebode a perilous crisis, and unless measures are taken to protect the American people, to protect this great civilization that we have builded here by education, by religion, by the acknowledgment of the natural rights of man, within a brief space dangers as great as those that have overthrown monarchs and despots may with ruthless rage assail the institutions of republican freedom.

The socialistic and agrarian demonstrations that are nightly made in our great cities must give us pause. War has been declared upon property. The declaration has been openly announced that property is robbery; and the open avowals of that class of men who have been admitted into this country under the specious application of the doctrine of the natural rights of man to go whither he will irrespective of the purposes for which he migrates leave little room to doubt that in the event of another great financial crash or panic in this country, dangerous outbreaks may be expected in our great commercial centers. Already appeals are made to the unemployed, men who have come here under one pretext or another to better their condition, to commence their assaults upon what they are pleased to term the unjust accumulations of our manufacturers and merchants, to secure what is called in the language of these apostles of anarchy the forcible distribution of property, under the doctrine of the natural right of one man to have just as much as any other man has.

I do not regard the bill as a perfect measure; it has some provisions to which I yield reluctant assent; I should be glad to see it modified; but it is a movement in the right direction. It calls the attention of the people to the most formidable danger that threatens us, and that is this ceaseless, endless incursion of elements that come not for the purpose of building up, of elevating, but for the purpose of overthrowing and destroying.

Inasmuch as the object of the bill propounded by the Senator from New Hampshire is to exclude those men sought to be imported here under contract made in a foreign country for the purpose of laboring at less wages than those already employed can afford to accept, I shall vote for it with pleasure. We have for years past been declaring that the interests of American labor should be protected; and we are now to say whether the interests of the American laborer shall not be protected, not alone against the competition of the pauper and ill-paid labor of Europe, but against that most infamous free trade in labor itself which imports men here under a servile contract that is worse than the African slavery of the South, an ignoble and degrading competition—ignoble and degrading alike to those who make the contract and those who are subjected to its pernicious and destructive influences.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not share the apprehensions of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] as to the future of this country, socially or politically. I am aware that there are many disturbing elements; but I see abundant signs of hope and comfort. These are but merely wrinkles on the great body of politics—little local humors. I am satisfied that the great and generous influences of civilization and of Christianity are abundantly capable of coping with them. I know there are some ranting men who talk about a forcible distribution of property, who pose all over the country as the enemies of property; but there is no land in which there is so general a distribution of wealth as here. Any man who has saved a hundred dollars or obtained for himself a cabin, however humble, or five acres of the sand and pine lands of the South, has given bonds to society against these pernicious errors. He is on the side of law and order; he is not ready to divide what he has. If he is worth $500 he is much more likely to take a musket and fall in at the command of the governor and the sheriff to repress riots than the millionaire who, perhaps, takes his yacht and escapes the danger, having bought foreign exchange. The safety of the country is in the hands of the poor men who have something or who mean to save something, if you omit any respect for their moral and Christian principles.

But, sir, indiscriminate legislation of the kind proposed here, a prohibition of immigration to poor men, would not tend to correct the evils against which the Senator warns us. The dynamite conspirator or the roaring socialist who would destroy all the natural rights, as we consider them, of property, can easily raise money enough to pay the twenty-five or thirty or forty dollars needed for transportation. The professional agitator will not be excluded by any bills like this. I am not willing to put a brand upon immigration by the wholesale. The dangerous men are not alone those who come from abroad, not those ill-informed and ill-educated poor laborers who came from other lands. The dangerous men have some money either from their own resources or by levying upon others, and have a good deal of education, such as it may be. They do not lack for intellectual acumen; they do not lack for the facility of expressing their ideas in common language. They are the men who make the trouble.

I acknowledge freely the evils. I want to correct them. I object to going carelessly and recklessly and too sweepingly at the work. The contracts that bring a body of poor laborers over here, paying their transportation under an agreement that they shall work not alone till they have paid their fare, but shall work for months and years for wage below those of the ordinary American laborer—those contracts are shameful, they are criminal, they are wrong, they are against natural right, against American law and the spirit of our institutions. They ought not to be permitted. They endeavor to establish a new system of slavery here. As I said substantially in my first remarks, they attempt to introduce a peasantry, a class of peons, a degraded class, to be considered as permanently belonging as the basis of society underneath those who may rule and govern the land. I would repress those evils. I would forbid them by all reasonable legislation. At the same time I would be very careful not to interfere with honest immigration; I would be very careful not to affix the brand of crime to deeds that are not only naturally right but exceedingly commendable; and that is what I fear this bill may do. I have specified the class of deeds that under this bill may be fined heavily, fined a thousand dollars, and which of themselves actually reflect great credit upon the men committing the deeds. I do think that a criminal law, a law making that a crime which is not by nature a crime, ought to be very carefully drawn; that is all. I denounce the evils, but I will not hurt the right by reckless and sweeping legislation.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not propose to embark upon a discussion of the somewhat dangerous social problems that are exhibiting themselves with more or less force in this country, nor do I see precisely the force of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas as directed against the communistic forces that propose to array numbers against property in the United States, labor against capital, and obviously and necessarily to involve both in a common destruction. But this bill is not directed, as I understand, to the exclusion of any of that maleficent and dangerous class of people, the outcasts of an older and more corrupted civilization than our own. It is not against them; it is not to their exclusion that this bill seeks to point in any degree. For such classes as he has described the laws of the several States providing for the punishment of criminals exist, and if the offenses shall take technical forms heretofore unknown to our simpler civilization and not amenable to punishment by the common law of England, which is the common law of the United States where not replaced by statute, then the proper method is for a fortification of our system of criminal law to meet and punish unrelentingly those foes to human society whose doings and threatenings have been described—hinted at rather—by the honorable Senator from Kansas.

There is the right, and with the right the obvious duty, of every State, as of every man, for self-preservation. It is the first instinct of nature, the instinct of society as organized and of the individuals that compose it; and I take it for granted that the spirit of liberty under law and the manhood of American citizenship will properly assert itself by the punishment, no matter under what name or what nationality it may appear, of the foes to society, to its peace, to its progress, to its safety.

But, sir, is this bill leveled at this dangerous class? As I read it, it is to exclude those who, under any form of solicitation or encouragement or contract, individual or extended, shall come to this country to perform labor or service; and that description runs through every section of the bill. It is the man who is brought here not for a dangerous purpose but for a useful purpose, to perform labor or service; if he is encouraged to come; if he is solicited to come; if he is paid to come; if his services are contracted for in advance, no matter how favorable to him or to the people of this country whom he is to serve—it is against that class that this bill is leveled.

Why, Mr. President, it seems strange to me that here in a Government founded upon the principles of the Declaration of Independence we find this violent penal anti-immigration law. Our forefathers took up arms against the British King, and they fought him to the death and they fought him to the victory, and one of the causes that they submitted in justification to a civilized world was that he had obstructed immigration to these States. I have no professions to make, there is no necessity of professions being made, of the deepest, simplest, sincerest sympathy for human suffering everywhere. It is not simply a virtue to hold sentiments of abhorrence to cruelty, to hold sentiments of sympathy for suffering; but, in my judgment, it is disgraceful to see suffering and not be for correcting it; it is disgraceful to have it in your power to relieve it and not exert your best effort to do so. This requires no assertion; it is a fact that no respectable man and no respectable nation will attempt to deny. Therefore its assertion here is superfluous.

But, sir, look at the machinery proposed by this bill. In sections 3 and 4 I find two provisions to which I would respectfully call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who is apparently about to leave the Chamber. He has been one of the most intelligent and one of the most persistent and useful members of this body or of Congress in the effort to restore American shipping, to assist this commercial marine of which we were once so proud, and which to-day we all desire so much to resuscitate. Let me ask him what is to be the condition of any ship or of any shipmaster under section 4, which provides:

> That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any such vessel, and land, or permit to be landed, from any foreign port or place, any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan who, previous to embarkation on such vessel, had entered into contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform labor or service in the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan so brought as aforesaid, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months.

And then turning to section 3, you will find a provision for suits for penalties which may be expressly brought by any foreigner who is a party to the contract, one-half the amount to be paid to the person bringing the suit to recover the same and the other half to go into the Treasury. There is no limitation as to the time within which this party had made this agreement to perform labor in the United States, whether six months before or six days before or six years before. I will agree that the word "knowingly" is placed there, that he shall knowingly bring them, although I doubt very much whether the necessity of the knowledge of the contract is there implied; but what is to be the fate—I put it to the intelligent Senator from Maine—what is to be the fate of the master?

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Let me put the question first. What is to be the fate of the master subjected to a fine of $500 and an imprisonment of six months for each foreigner, when any man or any number of men who may be shipped by the hundreds on his vessel can come in and sustain the charge by oath? He is at the mercy of such witnesses.

Mr. FRYE. I was, just before the Senator arrived at that section of the bill, examining it myself. I will say to the Senator that in my judgment there is nothing on earth that would save a ship engaged in the business of bringing emigrants from abroad to this country—in other words, an emigrant ship—from entire destruction except that word "knowingly." Whether or not that would I am not prepared to say.

Mr. BAYARD. I know the word "knowingly" is there; but I submit to the Senator, whom I know to be an able criminal lawyer and who has had very large experience as attorney-general of his own State, that if he will observe the position of this word "knowingly" in the text of the bill, he will find it exceedingly doubtful whether it is the knowingly bringing them into the United States, or whether it is that he has a guilty knowledge of the fact of the contract prohibited by law having been made. But whether it be so or not, what is to protect this poor captain from fine and imprisonment? A score or a hundred of these unprincipled men swearing money into their own pockets, finding him in some port of the United States where he has no friends and no acquaintances, may put him in jeopardy. It is true he may under our present law, which has destroyed the disability because of interest of a witness, and therefore permits all persons to be sworn in the United States courts, be permitted to go upon the stand, and he may deny the fact that he knew or could have known the alleged criminal facts. But there may be circumstances from which it will be presumed that he must have known; and he is to be subjected to suit. The mere fact of being subjected to suit is a rod of terror over him at all times. Then section 3 provides that these very parties who themselves are participes criminis, for they have made the contract, and yet having made the contract here is a direct suggestion that they shall come forward in this country and expose it for the purpose of recovering one-half the penalty which is secured to their use.

We know the fact that there are in other nations classes who leave their country for their country's good; and those are the class who are here authorized to bring suit. They are the classes who are to step into the witness-box and freely and swiftly swear away the money either of a steamship company or of some citizen of this country, or it may be of the captain of the vessel, and he is to be terrorized. Every time a man came in with a ship-load of immigrants to this country he would never know whether he was to have launched upon him prosecutions for the recovery of this penalty and putting him in danger of imprisonment for having knowingly done what? I ask the Senate to notice the want of precision of this charge. The charge is having encouraged a man to come here. I think the whole Senate of the United States and perhaps 20,000 people in the United States every 4th of July do their best to encourage the down-trodden poor of other nations to find their home in this free country. What is to be encouragement? Is it to be a speech of a man who stands up and pictures the glowing beauty of the West and of the happy homes of America, so very different from those to-day pictured by the Senator from Kansas? Certainly that is encouragement; certainly that is solicitation in a sense. I suspect that any man among us who has ever traveled at all in other countries, remembering how much there was in the descriptions of this country to invite free and intelligent men and women who labor to come here, would be glad to see them make their homes in the United States and glad to welcome humanity to strengthen and uphold the institutions of this country.

Then the vagueness of this charge is that any encouragement of this kind may lay—I do not say it would lay—a man open to certain conviction, but I say it would subject him to prosecution under the letter of this bill. Therefore I move that the third and fourth sections be stricken from the bill, and I would say to-day under the beneficent provisions of law as they exist in every State of this Union improvident contracts, contracts so unjust as to shock the sense of justice and of humanity, are constantly set aside by courts. A contract that can be shown to have been made under duress, one where either party was intoxicated, one where he was deprived of the fair means of knowledge and understanding of the nature of the contract he was entering into—all these classes of contracts, improvident and grossly unjust, such as shock the natural sense, are constantly invalidated upon the application of any one to any court of justice; and even where they are not invalidated directly they never can be made the basis of a successful action at law. The very plea that they were so unjustly constituted, that they were so against public policy, that they had their foundations in an immoral source, would be enough to put an end to them before any court of justice in America.

Therefore, sir, if it be true that there have been organized attempts to band together the wretched and the underpaid men of other countries and bring them here by a contract founded not upon their will but upon their necessities, and throwing them into competition immediately with laborers in this country, an act to prohibit such conduct is very easily framed; but such an act as that needs no such penalty as this. Hence I respectfully submit to gentlemen, such as the Senator whom I venture personally to refer to, that they should understand well the fatal blow to the transportation of passengers by water from other countries if section 3 and 4 are permitted to stand.

I do not propose to say much more about this bill. It is very difficult to characterize it. I am far from desiring to speak otherwise than respectfully of the action of either House or of the members of either House. When I look at this measure, observe its crudities, see how it appears to be impracticable, incapable of execution, how wholly un-American is the general drift and purpose, and how far beyond the power of statute are many of the evils which it can be imagined to be intended to relieve, I must express my general want of faith in and opposition to it. In the infinite variety of human opinion I respect a philanthropy which I often recognize, although I believe it to be misdirected; and I see exhibitions of zeal without knowledge in a certain quixotic attempt to relieve evils by scraping the surface and to get rid of some incidents that I am afraid civilized society will ever contain; but when I see these attempts made, they provoke a feeling rather of sorrow than of any other emotion; and therefore, while I may respect the motives of individuals who frame bills of this kind, I can not see a useful result to come from their enactment. I now move, or I have already moved, and ask that the question may be put, to strike out the third and fourth sections of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The Senator from Delaware moves to amend the bill by striking out sections 3 and 4. The question is on that motion.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If there is any necessity for any bill such as this, the fourth section being an important part of the machinery by which contracts improperly made may be punished, it seems to me would also be necessary. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if an amendment could not be made to section 4 that would answer his objection to the section, making it read:

That the master of any vessel who having knowledge thereof shall willfully bring within the United States, &c.

That would place the responsibility entirely on the ship-owner, who having knowledge of the fact that these laborers were under contract to come to the United States should willfully violate the law.

Mr. BAYARD. What in the name of common sense does the captain of a ship know of contracts or can he know of contracts for the carriage of the emigrant? It is not the owner of the vessel, the man who framed or has knowledge of this improper contract, who is punished, but it is the captain who is at sea buffeting the winds and storms, and who comes into port and instantly takes on board a set of men whom he never saw before, and it is he who has to turn round and carry them abroad; he is to be made the target for this penal legislation. Against him its penalties are directed; he is to go to prison, and he is to pay the $500 out of his small salary. How can the captain control it? He is but the agent for the navigation of the ship; it is the ship's agent on shore, the owner of the ship, who is the person against whom this penalty should be directed.

Mr. BLAIR. I hardly know how to make a speech in reply to this sort of criticism against the bill. I have read criminal statutes; I have drafted some; it has been my fortune, as a public officer, to enforce them against criminals to some extent; and I am utterly at a loss to comprehend how anybody can expect sensible legislators to enact any portion of this bill unless they retain the fourth section or something tantamount to it.

The Senator from Delaware in his criticism seems to treat the bill as though it was directed against immigration, such immigration as has been known from the foundation of the Government—as has been known through the history of all nations—free, natural, ordinary immigration; that sort of transition of individuals from one country or continent to another which takes place under the ordinary conditions and rules of existence. But this bill is directed against what is really a crime against the people of this country, against the laboring forces of this country. It is designed to prevent the combination of capital for the purpose of introducing into the American civilization, in direct collision and competition with the ordinary American producer, a foreigner who can not naturally get here, who is brought here by a combination of capital for the express and sole purpose of reducing the natural and ordinary compensation which the American laborer is to receive for his toil.

The American laborer is the essential ingredient, if I may so speak, in American civilization. Whatsoever we have of material, and so further on all spiritual, intellectual, and esthetic culture and development is, after all, based upon the efforts of the American toiler, the American workman, the American laborer. It is the man who is nearest the earth who develops the essential conditions, the primary conditions of existence itself, who gives us food, who gives us shelter, who gives us clothing—it is that man who is the basis of civilization and of all advancement. In our country, under our condition of laws, under the operation of the Declaration of Independence, this American laborer, this American producer, this American civilizer has attained a position where he has a certain amount of compensation, a certain amount allotted to him in the distribution of that which he produces. Capital gets its share. He gets his share, and here in America he gets a larger share, and it is only in the form of his wages that he gets it—more than the laborer does in any other land on the face of the globe.

Capital is selfish as you may say labor is selfish. Capital desires to get as large a proportion as it possibly can of the joint production of capital and labor combined. It says, "Here we pay too much in the form of wages;" we give to the American producer who is a part of our institutions, who is a part of our nation, and who is the real defender of those liberties of which we have been talking so much; the capitalist says "He gets too large a proportion of what my capital and that man's muscle produce." How will he meet the existing distribution of the products and commodities of life? He proposes to send his agents abroad and he does send his agents abroad and he finds the cheap servile labor of another country; he brings it here under such contracts and under such conditions as he can enforce against that foreign producer on the spot, hungry, starving, anxious for any outlet that may improve his condition in life, and he brings him here under a contract which contract he undertakes to enforce and does enforce because he has him practically in chains and holds him as long as he pleases—a contract by which he pays him one-quarter, one-third, it may be one-half what the American laborer would receive for precisely the same exertion, for the same producing power. He thus comes directly in competition with a man who is already a portion of our civilization and who is the grand element in our national existence; and this bill propeses, if possible, to put an end to that evil.

We have in the course of our time legislated against slavery and the importation of slaves, and we have put an end to that great evil. We have in the course of events under the blessing of God put an end to American slavery upon our own soil, which was the grand competitor of free labor; and now we find this evil, not so extensive at present, like the little cloud that appears upon the horizon, but full of ominous portent and of destruction of the near future, for I believe very much more the sentiments enunciated here by the Senator from Kansas than seems to believed by many others; and this evil, great already and yet only in its incipiency, we are undertaking to nip in the bud and to destroy by this legislation, and it is on the whole I think a very tender bill. It is not a bill full of severity by any means.

But the Senator from Delaware and others perhaps sympathizing with him come here and say that it is too severe on the man who is the chief agent in the transaction of this ill, for it is not the contractor, it is not the capitalist here who sends his agent abroad who is really the most formidable agent in the perpetration of the evil itself, but it is the man who controls the ship and who brings the laborer. There is a provision in the fourth section aimed directly at him, but it only touches the master of the ship, the man who navigates it, the man who has to do with its sailing from one port to another. It aims at him a deadly blow if he knows he is violating this law. It presupposes, as does every other criminal statute, that he must have guilty knowledge. It uses the well-known word "knowingly," which has been construed in the decisions of all countries, and we know just what it means when it is a part of a criminal statute. This man is in no danger of prosecution unless he knows that he is violating this law.

If he knows it, why should he not be punished? Is it a very severe degree of punishment that he who knowingly, as the chief agent in the perpetration of this evil, brings a foreign laborer under a contract to our shores, is to be subjected to a fine of not more than $500 and to an imprisonment for a term of not exceeding six months? There is the maximum of penalty which would be applicable only to the most egregious cases of violation of the law, and it may be graduated all the way down to a day or an hour or a moment of imprisonment and to the smallest fine of a pecuniary nature imaginable. The penalty may be graded according to the degree of guilt which may be proven. And does the Senator say that this man is liable to be attacked by witnesses actuated by mercenary motives? It is no different in this case from what it is in all other cases of like statutes. We are all of us liable to be assailed by false witnesses. There are plenty of men in this country who would swear away the reputation of any Senator on this floor for a five-dollar bill. We run these risks, and yet we get along; and so every citizen, man, woman, or child, in the whole country is liable to be utterly destroyed by the perpetration of undetected perjury. We have to take those risks under a government of law, and I do not myself understand why the man who is the real perpetrator of the serious portion of this evil should not be held to liability.

He must be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; and is there any great degree of danger to be apprehended of the maintenance of wrongful prosecutions by this class of immigrants? Where is the money coming from wherewith to make complaints and carry on prosecutions? It is a criminal statute. Are the law officers of the United States likely to enforce a law of this kind at the dictation of these servile immigrants who might possibly themselves be the subjects of bribery, and so might perhaps be induced, if other parties should set them in motion, to swear falsely in some instances?

But, Mr. President, after all there is very little danger to be apprehended, it seems to me, from this class of prosecutors. I doubt whether in the actual operation of this law there would be one case in a hundred where the man who had entered into a contract, the man who had been brought wrongfully to this country, would undertake to avail himself of this right of action. He is not likely to be in a situation to do it, and yet he being himself one of the victims of this bad practice he ought to have the right of action if he chooses to enforce it.

The Senator from Delaware has moved to strike out the third and fourth sections. There is nothing left of the bill, not a thing left of the bill, if that is done. There is, to be sure, a prohibition of the practice, but there is no penalty.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator a question before he sits down. Where is the principal ground of complaint in the Senator's own State about people brought into the State to work in competition with her own laborers?

Mr. BLAIR. We have none in our State.

Mr. FRYE. Is it not against the French Canadians?

Mr. BLAIR. The French Canadian is not brought here; he gets here himself. I never heard of an instance where the French Canadian was brought here under any such combination.

Mr. FRYE. Did you never hear of an instance in the city of Manchester where a manufacturing company, when there was a strike, sent to Canada and employed French Canadians enough to run the mill?

Mr. BLAIR. I never did. I never heard of but one strike in Manchester, and that was some twenty-five or thirty years ago. It was of the most trifling importance. We get on with our labor there without any difficulty. The French Canadians come there in large numbers. There are some 13,000 or 14,000 of the 40,000 inhabitants of that city French Canadians, and they do a much larger proportion of the work in the factories. They come and go.

Mr. FRYE. Why does not the Senator extend the provision of section 4 to railroad corporations, when two-thirds of the New England immigration, at any rate, comes by railroad from Nova Scotia, from the province of Canada, across the whole northern part of the United States?

Mr. BLAIR. For the simple reason that those persons are not brought here by any offensive or unjust combinations of capital. There was at one time a complaint that certain Swedes—I do not remember the numbers, perhaps one hundred or two hundred—were imported by a process that would be prohibited by this bill to the town of Pembroke; but that was investigated by our attorney-general, and his report was to the effect that no cause of complaint whatever existed. There was no evil of the sort that is attempted here to be prohibited, even in that case.

Mr. FRYE. I will ask the Senator another question. There are regularly established lines of immigrant steamers between Liverpool and Quebec and between Liverpool and Montreal. What provision is there in this bill to prevent all the men who desire to make such contracts as are referred to making contracts and bringing all the immigrants into the United States by the way of Quebec down the Grand Trunk Railroad? There is no penalty at all.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know how we can possibly prevent the emigration of men from one country to another outside our own borders. We could make no provision whatever, I suppose, to prevent men coming freely of their own motion, after they arrived in Canada, to the United States. This bill does not attempt any extraterritorial legislation whatever. It would be formless and void if we should do it; but the bill does provide that if men come under a contract by which there is an attempt to evade the provisions of the law by bringing the immigrant from foreign shores to Canada under a contract and then leaving him to find his way to the United States as best he can, that contract itself would be entirely void. I suppose, perhaps, it would be practically void any way, for I do not know how after a man gets here any such contract could be legally enforced in our own courts. But at all events under the provisions of the second section such a contract as the Senator now speaks of would be void.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator said that if these sections or either of them were stricken out of the bill the bill would have nothing whatever left in it, and that had application especially to section 4, which punishes the master of a vessel for bringing men into the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. Not specially to section 4, but to sections 3 and 4.

Mr. FRYE. Well, I apply it to section 4, and I ask the Senator if every man who desires to make his contract for help abroad should avail himself of the privileges of a steamship line to Quebec—which is a direct route to the United States—whether or not he could not escape entirely any penalty whatsoever, and he could by the Grand Trunk Railroad send all his immigrants into the United States? Why it is that section 4 is of so grave importance I do not see myself. I believe in the purpose of the bill; I propose to vote for the bill; but I do agree with the Senator from Delaware that that section 4 contains a fearful provision against the captains and masters of immigrant ships, and I think I would insist very earnestly that it should not be permitted to remain in this bill if we had any immigrant ships. Fortunately, the punishment which the section provides will fall on Englishmen entirely. I believe out of two hundred and sixty ships that sailed from the port of New York on foreign voyages in six days one carried the American flag, and out of probably five hundred ships sailing into the port of New York bringing immigrants not ten will bear the American flag. So this provision applies to foreign masters and not to our own. I am not so particular when the application is made to them. They have so many advantages now even under our best-applied shipping laws that a little disadvantage in that way will not make things equal them.

Mr. BLAIR. I am very glad to know that in addition to the other good qualities of this bill it is one for the revival of American shipping. Now in regard to the other suggestion, that in case the immigrant is brought by way of Canada, the prohibition of the contract would be of no effect.

Mr. FRYE. No; I did not make that suggestion.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood the Senator to say so.

Mr. FRYE. I referred to the punishment for bringing them in.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I only want to say that with reference to the manner in which the immigrant gets here, provided he does get here, the penalties of the third section would seem to apply to the party who made the contract.

Mr. FRYE. I wanted to make one more suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire, and it is in the interest of the bill. It is in the direction seggested by the Senator from Connecticut. What objection has the Senator from New Hampshire to striking out the first proviso of section 5:

Nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

What special use is there in keeping in these words?

Mr. BLAIR. Will it answer the Senator's purpose to say:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not otherwise be readily obtained.

Mr. FRYE. I should prefer very much to have this stricken out. This matter of new industries is of very great importance. For instance, take the tile industry. It was introduced into Indianapolis only a few years ago. It could not have been introduced into this country except by sending to England for skilled workmen, and every workman on those tiles was an Englishman, and it was the only way that industry could be started. After it was started in Indianapolis the education of our own people in that kind of business commenced, and you can multiply those concerns as much as you please, and thus it is an encouragement and help to our people. You may take the manufacture in the State of Maine of the nice covering for furniture, plush-covering, which is a new industry in the United States, all that sort of cloth having been imported until within the last five or six years. Every employé in that immense mill is an Englishman, necessarily so, because nobody in America knew how to make that plush, and those men were employed at the very highest wages. There are no American people in mills who earn higher wages to-day than those men do. Now that the Goodalls have established that kind of manufacturing, other manufactories will spring up and American laborers will get the benefit.

If a man desires to start a new manufacture, why should he be compelled to hunt around the country before he undertakes the establishment of it to see whether or not he can find help of that kind or of that skill within the limits of the United States? The probabilities all are that it would be an impossibility to find it, because it is a new industry. It would not be a new industry if there were men all over the United States who could be employed just as well as not by the man who undertook to start it. That would imply an old industry.

Under the provisions here—I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that it is not drawn for an indictment by any manner of means—I do not believe any man on earth would ever be punished, but it might have the effect to a certain extent to discourage a man who wanted to go into a new enterprise; but to suppose that it can do any good is to me utterly preposterous. I wish the Senator would strike out these words:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

Then transpose the next two lines to the close of the next proviso—

That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States, nor shall its provisions apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers.

It seems to me that would be enough.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the Senator's moving to strike that out. I would not feel authorized to do it in behalf of the committee. I will state the reason why that clause is there. I do not think there is much force in it. I do not think it does a great deal of good, but I do not think that it does any particular harm, especially if it should be modified by the insertion before the word "obtained" of the word "readily" or "easily," so as to read:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise easily obtained.

The proviso applies only to a new industry, and I suppose that it is there because of some jealousy that when skilled labor already in this country might be obtained there would be combinations to bring skilled labor from abroad to compete with it. Still, as it is confined only to the case of the establishment of new industries, I do not think it is at all important, and if the Senator does feel it to be important I should be very glad to have him make the motion to amend the section in the way he indicates unless there is objection from other sources.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor I gave my consent to the report of this bill, reserving the right to object to any of its provisions. I think it is quite manifest that the tendency of our civilization at large in this country is constantly to increase the number of those who are dependent upon their daily wages for support and increase the number of property-owners and large capitalists. A very universal sentiment has arisen among the laboring people of this country, and it has made itself known to the Committee on Education and Labor, demanding some legislation by which their share of production should be made larger. The idea has arisen and exhibited itself in nearly all their conventions that this may be done by preventing competition between the American laborer and the foreign workman imported here under contracts. I do not myself believe that there is any efficacy whatever in this idea or that it will afford anything of the protection to the American laborer that is anticipated by those who have conceived this idea. I think the object which all statesmen and lovers of humanity most cherish, that of giving to the laborer a liberal and adequate compensation by which he and his family may have and enjoy all the benefits of civilization and all the comforts which come from the great inventions and improvements of the age, is to be attained in an entirely different way, and that it is not affected to any perceptible extent by the competition between labor abroad and at home. Still I can not see that there is any harm in gratifying this desire and allowing this measure of theirs to be tested by some enactment that shall make it a law.

I therefore acquiesce in and support this bill to the extent of its prohibition of the importation under contract of foreigners to labor in this country. I can not see that that will do any great harm to anybody, whether it accomplishes any good or not. If it does protect the American laborer from an injurious competition that decreases his wages, to that extent the effect will certainly be a gratifying and a proper one.

The provision of this bill in section 4 which is punitive is, I think, an error, and is one that is calculated to damage the interests of American shipping and foreign shipping, and discourage that branch of industry. I think it is unjust in itself, and I concur with the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in regard to this fourth section of the bill, which I think has no effect whatever upon the general objects of the bill; and striking it out of the bill would not in any way militate with the purpose of the bill to make unlawful and to punish the importation into this country of foreign labor under contract. I shall, therefore, vote for amending the bill in this respect by striking out the fourth section.

While I am up I wish to say that I concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] which has been accepted by the chairman of the committee and in the motion to strike out the words to which he has referred in section 5:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained.

I shall move at the proper time that the third section of the bill may be amended by striking out in the third line the words "assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or;" so as to leave the section read:

SEC. 3. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

Also after the words "contract or agreement," in the seventh line, I shall move to strike out the words "express or implied, parol or special." I think with these amendments to the bill there can be no objection to its passage.

Mr. BLAIR. I doubt very much whether there would be any object in its passage after that. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to amend the bill by striking out sections 3 and 4.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The object of this bill is to extend the protective principle not only to the importation of the products of foreign labor, but to the foreign labor itself. I do not perceive how this bill will effect that object if it becomes a law. From a careful examination of it there is no part of it which seems to me to be at all effective except the second section, which declares that all contracts or agreements of the character inhibited in the bill shall be void in the United States against the rights of the laborer himself, and allows him to break the contract and become a free man. That is a valuable provision.

The penalties imposed in this bill I do not think can ever be enforced. I do not believe the penalty prescribed in the third section, which is a fine of a thousand dollars for any violation of the first section, will ever be enforced, because the violations prescribed in the first section consist of acts committed in a foreign country, and our courts have no extra-territorial jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is under a misapprehension. It is the bringing to this country of the immigrant that is prohibited in the first section, not merely the making of the contract. The crime is consummated by the actual arrival.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The first section reads:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement.

Mr. BLAIR. Go on.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It continues:

Parol or special, express or implied——

Mr. BLAIR. Go on.

Mr. MILLER, of California—

to perform service or labor, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR. Now the Senator will see that the whole matter is consummated by the actual importation or migration of the alien to this country. If he does not come there is nothing prohibited.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But the important element in this offense is the agreement or contract, which must have been made before the party embarked for the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. But the act is not completed until the party arrives in the United States; and therefore it is the contracting and bringing to the United States which is prohibited, not simply the agreement not consummated.

Mr. MILLER, of California. This does not allude to bringing into the United States. The penalty for that is denounced against the vessel-master in the fourth section. The first section relates to the contract or agreement made in the foreign country under which the laborer agrees to perform service or labor in the United States. If that contract is completed after the foreigner comes to the United States I do not see how our courts would obtain jurisdiction of the offense. It is an offense committed in a foreign country.

Now as to the penalties in the fourth section. I can hardly conceive how a master of a vessel could ever be convicted under that section. First it must be proved that he knows all about this contract. The contract is the thing that is denounced in the bill, and the guilty knowledge which the master of a vessel must have is a knowledge of the contract; and it would be impossible to ever prove that he had any knowledge of the contract.

Mr. BLAIR. But the master is not punished for knowing in regard to the contract. What the master is prohibited to do and what he is punished for doing is bringing the immigrant with a knowledge of the contract; it is the actual transportation of such a laborer to this country.

Mr. MILLER, of California. You can not fine him unless you show that he knew the contract had been made.

Mr. BLAIR. There are of course two elements in the offense; one is knowledge that he was doing wrong, and the other is the overt act of doing the wrong. Both must combine.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is no wrong under this section unless he knew it was wrong.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It must be proved that he had criminal knowledge before you can convict him.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That you never can prove.

Mr. BLAIR. The honorable Senator from Delaware makes it the chief objection to the provision that you can prove and always will be able to prove that he had guilty knowledge.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I can not help that.

Mr. BLAIR. Of course not; but it shows the diverse views different minds take of it, and if the truth lies in the medium the section is about right.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Unless this bill should make unlawful the coming of these people into the United States these provisions imposing penalties will not be effective in my judgment. I expect to vote for the bill, but I want to put on record my understanding of it. My objection to the bill is that it has not enough in it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question for my own information. Section 1 makes it an offense "to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien" under a contract made before the alien is imported. If the alien is not imported I agree with the Senator the offense is not complete; but if the alien be imported then the offense consists in having prepaid his passage or assisted or encouraged his coming. In what district are those offenses to be prosecuted?

Mr. BLAIR. The third section prescribes.

Mr. HOAR. The Constitution says that you must first have admiralty jurisdiction, which is a separate matter, for offenses committed on the high seas; but with the exception of offenses committed on the high seas every offense can be punished only in the State and district in which it was committed, which State and district shall have been previously ascertained by law. Now, if a man in Great Britain or Germany or Sweden or China prepays the importation of these laborers or assists or encourages them to come under a contract, and they come, in what district of the United States under the Constitution is the offense to be prosecuted?

Mr. BLAIR. The third section provides that suits may be brought in the circuit courts of the United States. I suppose that the Senator will see that the difficulty which he suggests is one that relates to the jurisdiction of the United States over the subject-matter itself under the Constitution, and if it is a subject-matter upon which there can be no constitutional legislation, then the attempt will utterly fail. But the bill makes the best provision of which the nature of the case is susceptible. I suppose the man or the corporation who might commit this offense would be subject to prosecution either at his or at its place of residence, or perhaps at such point as he may have transmitted the money, if the offense was that of prepayment in the case the Senator supposes; and so of a corporation, the offense might be held to be complete at that point where the money or the consideration was parted with by the corporation alleged to have committed the offense—at the office of the corporation or at the residence of the individual or at such town or city as may have been the one where, so far as he was concerned, his act was consummated.

It will be observed that from the language of the law one of the express purposes is to reach cases of the incitement to the assisting in the the consummation of the offense. It may be and perhaps is exceedingly difficult to reach this, but it is a difficulty that is, as I said before, inherent in the subject-matter, in the evil which we are undertaking to reach and to prevent, which necessarily is consummated partially in our own country and partially in the foreign country, in our own country where the capitalist lives, in the foreign country where is to be found the immigrant. In order to reach the evil at all, the best provision has been made that occurred to me, but if the honorable Senator from Massachusetts who is so learned in the law, who I doubt not can make a great many useful suggestions in the way of the amendment of the bill, will do so, I shall be very glad for one to assist in those amendments being made a part of the act.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am in sympathy with the object and purpose of the bill, but I am entirely at war with the agencies that he is trying to bring into operation.

As to the fourth section, I thought at first sight it might be amended in such a way as to make it more acceptable, but I now understand the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has moved to strike it out entirely. This seems to me to be wise, because the steamship companies are in no sense or form disposed to disobey, so far as I know, any law of the United States touching the importation of people who come in on any plea. They are simply transportation lines seeking business in the transportation of passengers, and their business has no relation whatever to the purposes of this act, which is to exclude people where contracts have been made for their labor, as I understand, which has worked grievous harm and grievous wrong to the laborers of our country.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the injury this might cause. In short, I do not see how this section can be operated. Let me state a case. We will suppose, for instance, that the importation of just such people as the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to keep out by the fourth section were brought not to the United States but to Canada—to Montreal, if you please—on a line of steamships running between the Old World and Montreal. They cross the river at Montreal on a bridge, they come into the United States, not by ship, not by vessel, but by rail; and any number of them may be brought into the country by that means. Steamship lines are now running, several lines I think, between Liverpool and other ports of Europe and the city of Montreal. When the passengers reach Montreal they can be transferred to railroad communication and come by railroad into the territory of the United States. In other words, the effect of the law is simply an invidious distinction against steamships running to our own country; and, therefore, it seems to me that the section has no place in the bill; there is no necessity for it; and how it can be amended to make it acceptable I can not see. I did submit an amendment to the Senator from Delaware, which was to put in the word "willfully," instead of moving to strike out the section, but upon second consideration and upon a more careful reading of the section, I think it has no place in the bill and should not stand.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator from New Jersey sits down, let me ask whether I am to understand him to object to this section because he thinks it can not be enforced?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not think it could be operative as against steamship companies.

Mr. BLAIR. If it can not be enforced will it do any hurt?

Mr. McPHERSON. It does not necessarily appear that we are to enact legislation because it will not do hurt. I think it would do a great deal of hurt. It would throw obstructions and hindrance in the way of legitimate commerce. That we have no right to do except it become necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the law which are of vital force and consequence to our people.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand the harm the section can do if it has no effect.

Mr. McPHERSON. It can do this harm: Any number of suits may be commenced against steamship companies which are entirely innocent of any intention or desire to evade the law or do any illegal act; and from the sole illustration I have stated—there may be others—we find that this is not operative as against all steamship lines, and, therefore, why make an invidious distinction in the law as against ships coming to our own ports and in favor of those going to Canadian ports when the law itself does not cover the immigrant coming here under the conditions the Senator has spoken of so often?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is under a mistake. The law covers the immigrant who comes here by virtue of such a contract entered into between any person or corporation within our jurisdiction, and expressly declares that the contract shall be void, and subjects the party who enters into it, being under our jurisdiction, to the penalties of the act.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very true, but the Senator——

Mr. BLAIR. It makes no difference whether the immigrant reaches us by way of Canadian ports or by way of New York or any American port. So the Senator's criticism as to an invidious distinction between steamship lines that run direct from European to American ports and from European to Canadian ports is wide of the mark.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think the Senator can not possibly understand me. The law will be operative certainly as against the steamship lines landing passengers in any United States port.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. McPHERSON. But the law would not be operative as against a steamship not so landing them, but landing them in Canada and sending them here by rail.

Mr. FRYE. That is, section 4 would not be operative.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am speaking of section 4. That is the only question before the Senate now, as I understand, and it is to that question I am addressing myself. The Senator from Delaware has moved to strike it out.

Mr. BLAIR. If this is an evil and it is worth while to legislate in regard to it at all it is worth while to legislate so far as we can. It is no fault of ours that we can not enforce our laws in the Canadian ports, and the principle the Senator suggests, that we should not legislate at all to prohibit evils which we may control by courts within our own jurisdiction simply because a like evil may be accomplished in another way which we can not control, would put an end to all legislation upon this or any other subject whatever. But that the bill establishes of itself any invidious distinction between American steamships, or between steamship lines running directly between the ports of the Old World and our own country, and those which ply between the Old World and the ports of any other country—that there is any such distinction as that established by the bill, I think, is entirely incorrect. If it is the result, it is not the fault of this bill; but it is by reason of the topography of this world, which we can not very well alter.

In regard to the fourth section, as I said before, it is aimed, and aimed with perhaps the greatest severity of any of the penal provisions of the bill, against the man who knowingly brings an immigrant from foreign shores to our own, who comes here under and by virtue of a contract such as is prohibited by the bill. It seems to me that if we are to legislate on the subject at all it is folly not to reach this man who is the chief agent in the actual perpetration of the crime. We might as well say that we would not hang the man who is incited to commit murder simply because he is the tool of another; but he is the man that we hang, and the accessory may escape, or his guilt may exist in different degrees lesser than that of the man who is the actual agent who accomplishes the death.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson;

A bill (H. R. 6824) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint one passed assistant engineer now on the retired-list of the Navy a chief engineer on the retired-list of the Navy.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands; and it was thereupon signed by the PRESIDENT pro tempore.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to give the written notice, required by the rules, of my intention to move to-morrow morning a modification of standing Rule No. 8. I send the written notice to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The notice will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I give notice that on to-morrow I will move to suspend during the remainder of the present session of the Senate that part of the eighth standing rule of the Senate which provides that "the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock;" and that the following be ordered for said remainder of said session:

"The Senate will proceed to the consideration, in their order, of House bills and resolutions on the Calendar favorably reported by a Senate committee, and continue such consideration until 1 o'clock each day until all of such bills and resolutions have been considered."

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following resolution, in strict conformity to the notice that I have just given:

Resolved, That that part of the eighth standing rule of the Senate which provides that "the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock" be suspended during the remainder of the present session of the Senate; and that the following be ordered for said remainder of said session:

"The Senate will proceed to the consideration, in their order, of House bills and resolutions on the Calendar favoraby reported by a Senate committee, and continue such consideration until 1 o'clock each day until all of such bills and resolutions have been considered."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice now that when that resolution comes up I will offer an amendment by way of proviso that it shall not take effect until after the present order shall have been concluded. I mean the order now pending in the morning hour.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the printed amendment the Senator suggested the other day. That may constitute his notice.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I give notice of that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the resolution insert:

Provided, That the pending order, Senate bill No. 1886, shall not be interfered with.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to give notice in connection with the notice already given by the Senator from Tennessee that as at present advised I shall move a further amendment to the resolution, that it be subject to objection on the part of any member of the Senate.

Mr. McPHERSON. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Tennessee if his resolution will prevent the consideration of pension bills? I think there are a large number on the Calendar, pension bills which ought certainly to be considered and go to the House.

Mr. HARRIS. It will be in order, as under the rule as it exists to-day, for any Senator to move to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the Calendar after the morning business had been concluded and before 1 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator, I suppose, means that the consideration of these bills shall proceed as under Rule VIII?

Mr. HARRIS. That is precisely the effect of the amendment I propose.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I supposed.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask a division of the question on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Delaware to strike out two sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is susceptible of division. The Senator from Maine desires the question to be taken on section 3 first?

Mr. BLAIR. I should like the attention of the Senate, and especially of those on the other side of the Chamber who find difficulty with the fourth section (and I wish the Senator from California were present who criticised the fourth section somewhat, and who supported the Chinese bill, so called), to the second section of the act passed so strongly by the Senate, which is a provision analogous to section 4 of the present bill. Section 2—perhaps the Senator from Maine will listen to this—of the law which we enacted on the 6th of May, 1882, provides:

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on such vessel, and land or permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer, from any foreign port or place, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought—

Whether that laborer institutes the prosecution or not—and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

This bill provides for an imprisonment not exceeding six months, and certainly is a far less severe penal section than the one in the law which was so strongly supported in this body.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to inquire whether he puts laborers who are coming here from Europe, for instance the Irish and Germans and Italians, upon a footing with the Chinese? Does he think they are not better people than the Chinese?

Mr. BLAIR. If they come here by virtue of a contract of this kind by which their compensation is to be restricted to a lower rate of wages than the natural rate of wages which they would obtain in fair competition with our own laboring people, the effect upon American labor is precisely that which we undertook to remedy and to prohibit by the anti-Chinese act.

Mr. MORGAN. My relations with foreign people both by affinity and by blood are of such a character that I could scarcely admit that the English people, the Irish people, the Welsh people, the Scotch people, the German people, or the Italian people are to be placed by the people of the United States in the same category that we place the Chinese. It is very true that we found ourselves necessitated to pass "cooly laws" to exclude cooly labor from this country, and those laws apply to all countries in Asia where the cooly system obtains.

If you will look over our statutes you will find that there is no definition of what is a cooly. We go to the East for that definition. We find it there in a social caste. A cooly in the East is a man whose business in life it is to labor under employment, having a master or a supervisor, or, as we call it in this country, a boss, who manages all of his affairs, hires him out, receives his wages, and doles out to him a part of it after having taken out his brokerage or his commission. That system obtains in India and in China, and through that system we were getting into this country, as they were doing also into Cuba and elsewhere, a large number of very inferior and very degraded people, people that belonged to a different class from those that possess the Anglo-Saxon blood; and we thought it was our duty, for the protection of our race, to legislate against the introduction of those coolies.

It was not merely a labor question, it was a social question, a question of the infusion of lower blood into the social element in this country. So we pass laws to restrain the importation of coolies. We went on afterward, when we found that the Pacific coast was being swarmed with Chinese, a very inferior and disagreeable and repulsive class of people, and we passed law after law for their exclusion. Some of these laws were vetoed by the President of the United States on the ground that they were in conflict with the Burlingame treaty. None of them, I believe, were vetoed because we were doing violence to any national public policy in their enactment, but those of us who sustained these laws I think were largely if not entirely actuated by the idea that it was a very false and dangerous policy to introduce this lower race into this country at all. We were not solely actuated by the idea of their competition with our home laborers, but it was more a question of race than anything else.

Some of us were born and raised in the slave States. We had received as an inheritance from our ancestors that crime, as it has been called a crime, which was perpetrated by the people of the North upon this country, and by whom it was inflicted upon the people of the South. It was something that we were born to as an inheritance; we had no agency at all in starting it up; and having seen the difficulties that it produced in the land, having seen the bloodshed that it led to through the strife between sections as well as between races, we thought that it was a proper thing to do to exclude the coming in of any more of the inferior Asiatic or African races into this land. So we voted for the laws prohibiting the Chinese from coming here.

That cooly system has been two or three times alluded to to-day by the Senator from New Hampshire as a justification of this line of enactment that we are now proceeding with. That includes necessarily the proposition that the men whom we are excluding by this law from migrating must be put on the same basis as the coolies. I object to that. I object to it in the name of those men who assisted us in winning our independence. I object to it in the name of those men who assisted us in winning our second independence from Great Britain in the war of 1812. I object to it in the name of those people who are represented to-day on this floor in the persons of Scotchmen, Irishmen, and Englishmen who are here. There are men on this floor to-day who came as laborers to this country, some as ordinary mechanics, and some who were diggers in mines are Senators on this floor. The law that you propose to enact, that the Senator from New Hampshire proposes now to spread all over the country except New Hampshire and Vermont and the Northeast, would have excluded these Senators from coming here unless they had the manhood to work their passage, or had the friends abroad, not in this country, to have advanced them money enough to pay their expenses to get here.

I am opposed on principle, I am opposed in deference to the traditions of this country, and I am opposed from a sense of respect for the work that these men have done in this country, to placing these people who are coming from abroad, under contracts to do labor in this land, upon the basis of the coolies. I do not want to extend the cooly system to them. I do not want to disgrace and dishonor them in that way, and I shall never vote for it.

The Senator from New Hampshire had his attention called by the Senator from Maine to the fact that no railroads or railroad managers are included in this bill, that he says so much attention has been given to by the committee. The Grand Trunk road leads straight into New England from the Dominion of Canada, and the Saint Lawrence River leads out from Quebec and Montreal to the sea and from the sea abroad to the open world, and the people of New England can import through those railroads connecting with Canada and through the Saint Lawrence River all the labor that they want, and no man can convict any of them under the fourth section of this bill. The Senator from New Hampshire, I dare say, never would have put that in the bill, because by doing so he would have cut off the supply of labor that is being received annually and monthly and daily from Canada to assist the manufacturers in the Northern States to carry on their operations.

When Senators came forward with bills that are pronounced to be very valuable and very benevolent toward other parts of the world, let us see whether they are willing to include their own section in the denunciations of the bill and in the provisions which prohibit the employment of imported contract labor. Let us see that. I speak disinterestedly about this, because the South is not employing foreign labor. We have not a single organization in the Southern States to-day, so far as I am aware of, that looks abroad for any part of its labor. We have labor enough in the South. What we have to do is to educate it, put it to work in our manufacturing interests and industries. That we are rapidly doing. But I speak disinterestedly about it, because the manufacturing industries of the South are not required to look abroad for a a supply of labor.

So I recommend to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, who seems to take charge of all questions on the subject of labor and industry, to consider whether or not he shuts out New England from free access to foreign markets for labor under contract by preventing his own people from bringing them to the Saint Lawrence River and by railroad across into New England.

Let us have a fair distribution of the operations and effects of this law if we are to have the law at all, and not confine it to importation in ships. Let it extend to railways, and let it extend to every other method of introducing labor. We might desire at some time or other to introduce the Mexicans from the South by railway and across the borders on foot or on burros, or whatever method of transportation we might see proper to resort to. What is there in the fourth section of this bill to prevent that? They can come if they please. They can come in such a way as that the Senator from New Hampshire, with all his ability and skill as a lawyer, could never catch them, never detect the people that had anything to do with the operation.

The Senator spoke of this as a bill that had been discussed and debated, I believe, or at least prepared, by some very distinguished person outside of Congress. Well, sir, he is a man who knows a great deal more about the law than I ever dreamed of. He, the framer of this bill, is the only person I ever yet heard of who could make a crime out of the violation of an implied contract. That is exactly what this bill does. A contract that is implied by the law is an agreement that the law sets up between two parties in consequence of their relations to or dealings with each other, and without either of the parties being able to say that there was any agreement between them until the law establishes the contract from the relation and gives effect to it. The first section of this bill says:

> That from and after the passge of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied.

You must not assist any person to come here under any contract "parol or special"—that is, in writing or oral—"express or implied."

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon. Of course he does not mean that the distinction between contracts parol and special shall be simply whether they are oral or in writing. I suppose he understands that a special contract is one under seal, and a parol contract is either verbal or in writing.

Mr. MORGAN. It so turns out in my State that no contract is required to be under seal.

Mr. BLAIR. The proposition of law is correct as I state it.

Mr. MORGAN. Nor in any other State, I suppose. That has been abolished. We got away from that about fifty or one hundred years ago.

Mr. BLAIR. It is the law now, the common law of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator's State is very far behind on the subject of improvement in its judicial system if that is the law there now. Here we have it without reference to that. You must not encourage in any way or assist the importation or immigration of any alien or foreigner into the United States under any implied contract. I should like to have somebody define to me how a man could assist or encourage the immigration of laborers into the United States under an implied contract. Of course I refer to that for the purpose of showing that whoever it was that proposed this bill, however great a man he might have been, he was a very poor lawyer. And then in the third section to denounce a penalty of a thousand dollars fine against a man for the violation of an implied contract is going to rather a romantic extent in the way of creating fines and inflicting punishment.

After the surrender in the South and the negroes became free and the planters desired to control their service there, they had very great difficulty in getting them to adhere to their contracts. They did not seem to have any very clear sense of duty in respect of the obligation of contracts, and so a great many devices were resorted to and many of the ablest and most ingenious lawyers were consulted, both in the Legislatures and out, for the purpose of devising some system of laws that would be constitutional, that would convert the obligations of a contract into a crime whenever the Legislature saw proper to do so by a statute. But no one succeeded in that endeavor. Mr. President, there is no more vicious system of legislation that has ever been conceived of and scarcely one that has ever been more frequently tried than that of converting the obligation of a contract or the making of a contract into a crime, and to make it a crime for a man to fail to keep his obligation.

How can it be that the law can imply a contract out of the relations of two people, and then denounce as a crime that contract thus implied and punish a party for the violation of it by lodging him in the penitentiary? What more monstrous absurdity ever yet characterized a bill than that? I submit it to the judgment of every lawyer in the Senate if there was ever anything more monstrous as an absurdity than that. In our eager desire to gratify public demands, whether it may be on the part of the planters of the South or whether it may be on the part of those who control labor in the North, we are altogether too apt to go off in search of criminal penalties for the violation of merely civil obligations.

It is a very dangerous ground to trench upon, and it is a ground where tyranny can indulge itself to the last possible degree in connection with power, and there is very little hope for the person whose relations are thus made the subject of criminal enactment.

Contracts in some form attend almost every act in our social and domestic relations, and to denounce those as crimes that are in themselves innocent is to endanger every relation and duty of life.

Now, a contract is made in England by a person there that he will furnish the money to a skilled artisan or to an unskilled laborer to come to the United States to do a certain kind of labor—work in a coal mine, iron foundry, or whatever it may be. The contract is, "I will pay your expenses across the Atlantic Ocean if you will agree to return me the money at a certain time with a certain amount of interest or percentage upon it." The contract is reduced to writing; it is signed. The party thus hired to go to the United States, or rather the party who thus receives an advance of money to enable him to come here, takes his steerage passage and lands in the city of Boston.

The first thing he does after getting there is to go and prove himself to some manufacturer as being skilled in the particular industry that he has come to work at. He informs the man who is to employ him, "I wish to charge you so much per month for my work, my purpose being to make money enough to pay my contract in England; that contract is that I was to work as low as $30 a month, and out of that I was to pay my passage-money, and I was to pay a percentage to the broker." He informs him of it, and the Boston manufacturer employs him under the information that he has been hired by an Englishman under English law and where the contract is entirely valid; that he has come here for the purpose of seeking employmemt.

There is a case from which you would imply an understanding on the part of the Boston employer that this man had been brought over to labor in the United States under a contract, and perhaps after he got through was to return to England again, and on that implication, because he employed him, a man better skilled than anybody else he could find, you would convict him, and you would mulct him in a fine of a thousand dollars, and perhaps you would put him in jail. That is a case in which I can suppose that there could possibly be a conviction upon an implied contract which was in violation of the general spirit and tenor of this law, declaring a public policy.

Senators surely do not wish to do that. I should regret very much—it makes no difference what might be the clamor in the country, it makes no difference if the labor-union societies were ten to where there is one—I would regret very much as a Senator to feel that I was compelled to yield to a demand made on me from that direction or from any direction to put upon the statutes of the United States entirely a new and dangerous system of legislation. You may search the statutes for one hundred years back and you will find nothing parallel to it. We have never ventured, it made no difference what might be the exigency, upon legislation of this kind for the correction of evils that are temporary in their nature and must ultimately correct themselves.

Suppose I should answer to the bill of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire and his committee that I believe the evil you are legislating against here is found in your tariff laws; that you are trying to confine the labor of this country to the supply of 55,000,000 people instead of 500,000,000 people, and that in your endeavor to limit the market of this country to the home supply, and in your refusal to go out beyond your borders, whether through reciprocity treaties or through our own legislation, to look up markets in the other parts of the world, you have got an overflux of labor here which is destroying itself; that the strikes in the Hocking Valley and the other strikes, which are said now to include 10,000 laborers thrown out of employment, are due not to the fact of the importation of foreign labor, but due to the fact that you put limits and curbs upon the exportation of American productions. Suppose I should take that view and suggest to the honorable Senator that that is a way out of his troubles for the laboring man? Sir, we are compelled by the very necessities of the situation (which seem to weigh upon the mind and the heart of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I agree that his heart is a benevolent one) to resort to expedients of legislation here that are entirely new and untried and dangerous in themselves, in order that we may give to the people who are thrown out of employment in this country useful and remunerative employment in the vast industries which our country affords and should sustain.

I venture to recommend to the honorable Senator and to the Senate that instead of trying to put what is called here a prohibitory tariff upon the introduction of foreign labor into this country they will reduce and modify some other of our prohibitory tariffs so that these laborers can get raw material brought from foreign countries at cheaper prices, so that they can realize out of their labor in the markets furnished us thus by foreign countries a remunerative compensation.

We have not got too much labor in this country nor are we likely to have. The vast fields which are open now to settlement in our public domain, and where we extend an invitation for settlement to every man who will come here and declare his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, are sufficient for the next twenty-five or perhaps fifty years to absorb the unemployed labor of all the civilized countries of Europe that has any possible chance of emigrating to this part of the world.

Our excess of labor is not a general thing over the country. It is not an excess disproportioned to the magnitude or the strength of our country, but it is an excess of labor in respect of certain industries, certain mechanical pursuits, and only in respect of them. The object of the bill is not to prevent agricultural laborers from coming here and going upon the farms. It is not to prevent orchardists, or the dressers of vineyards, or men skilled in anything connected with agriculture from coming here and going upon farms and finding employment. The object is to protect the men who go into the coal mines, into the iron-works and iron mines, and into the ruder descriptions of manufacture by preventing others from coming to the country to compete with them.

When I speak of that being the object of the bill I do not mean that the bill does not exclude agricultural laborers or orchardists or vine-dressers, for it does, and I intend, before we get through with the bill, to offer for the consideration of the Senate an amendment which will take them out of the category in which the committee have put them. But the object of the bill is to exclude men from this country who can compete in mines and in the ruder styles and orders of manufacture so as to protect those men who are here.

When we are excluding these people from coming here in competition with their own brothers who have been here perhaps only a month or a year, is it not wise for us to consider the question whether we can not get rid of all this difficulty and of all this trouble without resorting to penal enactments to prevent the immigration of people into this land? Ought we not to consider whether a modification of our laws should not be made in respect of the tariff, in respect of the tax upon material brought over for manufacture? Should we not consider whether our laws which shut us out from foreign markets are not greater obstructions to our progress, greater clogs upon the laborer, than any others that we can think of, and ought they not to be removed rather than apply to the persons who import labor under these criminal conditions?

I remember on one occasion I was waited upon by a committee of laboring men, for whom I have great respect. I have much respect for them as I have for any other class of men. They were gentlemen who came from Washington city, and I put to them this question: "Suppose we exclude all foreign laborers from coming into this country, how are you going to prevent the negroes of the South from coming up here and coming in competition with you? When you put wages at a dollar a day or a dollar and a quarter a day in Washington city or in any other town in the North, how are you going to prevent the negroes from going there from the South and taking your place and running you out?" "Ah," they said in reply to me, "we will take care of them; they would not dare to oppose us; and when we wish to strike, we will take into our hands the control of the labor market. Those men will obey us; they speak our language; we know them and understand them; but the foreigners who come here we can not manage."

It is well enough to look over the field to see what we mean by this legislation and what we are doing. I could very conveniently allow this matter to go along and yield to the pressure that is brought to bear upon me by these hundreds and hundreds of labor unions, if I chose to do so and if I thought it was exactly what my duty is as a Senator; but I do not. I believe it is my duty to legislate in every case for equal justice to all men. Whether it is Mr. Vanderbilt or Mr. Gould with their untold millions or the humblest laborer in this land, let the laws bear upon all with justice and equity and with equality. We create such distinctions between men by class legislation as are difficult to eliminate afterward from our laws. All class legislation is wrong.

I do not propose to engage in any class legislation while I am here. There is nothing in the bill that is not directed expressly to class legislation. The classes legislated for and protected by the bill are not the agriculturists, they are not the house-builders and the ordinary mechanics of the country. They are almost wholly and exclusively the miners, the men who delve about the iron-works, and the men who do the ruder sorts of work about the manufacturing establishments of this land. When any Senator will take the bill and analyze it, and submit it to the quiet judgment of his mind, he must be convinced that the whole purpose of it is class legislation.

It is not legislation for the people of the United States at large. Certain particular classes—not named, I grant you, but nevertheless as clearly designated as if they had been named—are provided for in the bill, and no others. In that sense it is vicious legislation; vicious because it is class legislation; vicious because it violates the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race in legislation by converting the ordinary and natural rights to make a contract into a crime; vicious in that, even in the admission of people into this country, it discriminates in favor of professional actors, lecturers, or singers. It makes an express exception and provision for professional actors, lecturers, and singers, leaving out all the other classes of professional men.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all; personal or domestic servants are also excepted. That has been put in by an amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, personal or domestic servants. "Nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers," and, says the Senator from New Hampshire, "nor shall it apply to body servants."

Mr. BLAIR. "Personal or domestic servants."

Mr. MORGAN. Personal or domestic servants are excepted; that is to say, a gentleman who has got the money can come here and bring his personal or domestic servants with him from abroad; but if he happens to be a lawyer, an artist, a painter, an engraver, a sculptor, a great author, or what not, and he comes under employment to write for a newspaper, or to write books, or to paint pictures, as we are informed that a recent Secretary of State sent abroad for an artist to paint his picture, he comes under the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will observe that it is only the importation of such people under contract to labor that is prohibited.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course; I understand.

Mr. BLAIR. If that class of people are liable to become the subject-matter of such importation, then the bill applies to them. Perhaps the bill ought to be further amended.

Mr. MORGAN. People who can instruct us in morals and religion and in every species of elevation by lectures and by acting plays in the theaters and by singing are not prohibited. The Senator wants to introduce those people into this country free; there is to be no tariff on them, no prohibitory duty. Let them come and act and sing and play as much as they please for the enlightenment of humanity on this side of the Atlantic Ocean. Chinese singers and Japanese players can come over here. They can come from any quarter, provided they fall within these honorable and distinguished and exempt provisions.

Now, I shall propose when we get to it to put an amendment in there. I want to associate with the lecturers and singers and actors, painters, sculptors, engravers, or other artists, farmers, farm laborers, gardeners, orchardists, herders, farriers, druggists and druggists' clerks, shopkeepers, clerks, book-keepers, or any person having special skill in any business, art, trade, or profession. I should like to be permitted without getting into the penitentiary to go abroad, if I were engaged in some of these trades and industries, and employ men particularly skilled, and I should like it especially if they happened to be any kin to me or those who are very dear to me.

If I were an Irishman or an Englishman and located in this country, and if I knew of some nice relative, it might be a lady who was capable of being a clerk in a dry-goods store, I should like to bring her in; but no, says the Senator from New Hampshire, "you can not bring her in if she does not sing, or lecture, or act on the stage," and therefore she can not come. If I were an Irishman who had been here only about a month and filed my naturalization papers before this proposed law was passed, I might like to send a little money back to my brother perhaps or to my son in Ireland and say, "I have established the business here of a hatter or a shoemaker, and I propose to carry it on, and if you will come and join me I will give you so much money to pay your expenses, or advance it to you so that you may come to this free and good country and share in its blessings."

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator can send to Ireland for all the relatives he may have there, or to any foreign country where they happen to be, as he will see by the provision of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I have failed to find it.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will read the bill, perhaps he will criticise it with less severity.

Mr. MORGAN. I have read it and reread it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will observe, since it seems he has not read the bill, that the very next clause after the one with which he is now dealing is:

That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. "Migrate;" but before you migrate or while you are migrating you must not have a contract to labor in this country. It only shows that the gentleman who drew the bill for the committee outside of the Senate did not very carefully weigh the words of it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry as to the meaning of that clause? I should like to know for information as to the degree of relationship of those one may bring over. So far as I have any Irish friends, they are "cousins."

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is probably able to define the word "relative" as well as anybody. I have heard of second cousins even.

Mr. MORGAN. The language is, "any member of his family or any relative." That is a pretty broad and generous expression, I grant you, but he must not assist him in doing anything else but migrate; he must not have any contract with him to labor after he comes here for fear he might come in competition with some of the privileged classes under the bill.

The action we are asked to take upon this subject only illustrates the extremities to which we go sometimes in trying to gratify a public whim or a public sentiment. We had better take the truth and a wise public policy for the basis of our action under all circumstances, and if we find ourselves confronted by some hot sentiment, or by some anxiety, or by some concentrated anguish, if you please, in consequence of the failure of the expectation of people to drive us from our duty, that is the time when we are called upon to stand by it more firmly than ever. I have not found in the bill as it is framed, or in any part of it, anything at all which commends it to my favor.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to send to the desk to be read a synopsis of a letter addressed to the President of the Senate. The extract is from the New York Times, taken verbatim, as I understand, from the letter itself, but is not so lengthy as the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN-CONTRACT LABOR—GRAND MASTER WORKMAN POWDERLY WRITES TO SENATOR EDMUNDS.

SCRANTON, PA., January 14.

Ex-Mayor T. V. Powderly, of this city, Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor for the United States and Canada, has addressed a letter to United States Senator EDMUNDS, directing his attention to the fact that the national House of Representatives passed a bill some months ago "to prohibit the importation of foreign-contract labor into the United States," and that the Senate has thus far taken no action in the matter. Mr. Powderly says: "It is of importance to the laboring men, the business men, and mechanics of the United States to know what the Senate intends to do with this bill," and adds: "That promises were made, pledges given, and party platforms spoke in unmistakable terms on this question during the recent political campaign," and that now "nothing remains but to fulfill these promises and confirm the statements made in the platforms of 1884. I see in the reported proceedings of Congress," continued Mr. Powderly, "that days of valuable time are being devoted to the discussion of questions of no consequence whatever to the general interests of the nation. The defense or condemnation of ex-confederates are matters which should be buried in oblivion. While the honorable gentlemen are fighting over again the battles which the powder and steel of the soldier have long since decided, and while the slavery of the past is being discussed in the Senate anew, a more powerful slavery is being established—a slavery which will not only grind 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 of black men, but 50,000,000 of white and black."

The importation under contract of men and women who come only to degrade American labor is described as a link in the chain of the new slavery, and that link, Mr. Powderly says, can be severed by the decisive action of the United States Senate. "Do not think that I call your attention to this matter on my own responsibility," Mr. Powderly adds, "as I but obey the request of the seven hundred thousand workingmen who respectfully ask for the speedy passage of this bill."

Mr. BLAIR. I have had referred to me by the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] a letter addressed to him with the heading "Headquarters District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor," which goes over this matter, and is of a public nature, and I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT ASSEMBLY NO. 66,
KNIGHTS OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1885.

DEAR SIR: Knowing of your friendly interest in the toilers of the land and the cause of humanity, I take this opportunity of calling your attention to a measure now in the possession of the Senate Committee on Labor, H. R. 2550, "To prohibit the importation of foreigners and aliens, under contract or agreement, to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia." This measure is one of vital importance to every American citizen, and should receive proper attention from the lawmakers while they have the remedy in their own hands.

You can see the havoc made in the ranks of free labor in the Hocking Valley of Ohio. (Inclosed is a statement made by the Miner's Association, containing also a statement of Col. W. P. Rend, one of the largest mine-owners and operators in the valley.)

The following is taken from evidence submitted to our body by a committee appointed to investigate the enormity of this curse in the District of Columbia. One of the members of the committee, Mr. John Fallon, represented himself as being a contractor in search of laborers to work for him under contract; he was duly introduced to the "boss" of the gang, working on the new reservoir (Government work, too) who gave his name as Caimino Guidio. He asked: "How many men do you want?"—Ans. "Fifty to two hundred." "How much will you pay?"—Ans. One dollar and fifty cents per day for good men" (they were then getting $1.12 per day). "Do your men come from Italy under contract?"—Ans. "Yes." "Who manages your business in Italy?"—Ans. "Mr. Charles Soldano, Castle Civiès Salamo, Naples." "Who pays their passage to this country?"—Ans. "The company; but the men must pay it back out of the first money they earn; then when you arrange to take the men you must deposit $1 on each man, which will be paid back to you from the first earnings of the men. I can refer you to Mr. Peterson, the reservoir contractor, for whom we have done work for three years. We have depots where we keep men on hand all the time—one in New York city and one in Buffalo; the men work on Sunday also." * * * There were forty Huns and Italians at work then. * * * The room where they lived was 12 by 12 feet, some twenty of them living, eating, and sleeping therein. * * * If they are paid before pay-day they are charged 10 per cent.

I think this will be evidence enough to a man of your broad and liberal mind to convince you that this vile system should be broken up. However, if evidence is needed, you will find it on file in the Committee on Labor, Senator BLAIR chairman, and I will have at your disposal copies of the contract used, &c.

It is conclusive that your honorable body will not have the matter before them this session for specific reasons, unless a demand is made and a day set apart for the special order of business for the purpose of passing the bill (or at least a vote upon its passage). I therefore respectfully, in the name of this body, request you to use your influence in bringing H. R. 2550 before the honorable Senate for adoption or rejection.

Very respectfully,

W. S. WAUDBY,
R. S. D. A. 66, K. of L.

Hon. OMAR D. CONGER.

Mr. BLAIR. In this connection I will read a few lines from William J. Smith, addressed to myself, a letter which comes from the executive office of the Window-glass Workers' Assembly, Pittsburgh, Pa. I read it as bearing upon the question whether there is any unhealthy competition brought about by the importation of such labor under contract. Mr. Smith says, addressing myself:

Thirty-five hundred flint-glass workers urge you to press the passage of the contract-labor bill. We have been made to feel the evil effect of contract labor. Thirty Bohemian chimney-makers have recently been brought from Nova Scotia under contract to work for $1 per day, when the labor of the American workmen whom they displace ought to be worth $4 per day.

These men from Nova Scotia find their way across the line in competition with the American workmen in the same branch of business. They come there under contract to work for $1 a day and in competition with our own workmen, when this class of skilled workmen get $4 a day.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] made some statements interesting in their character which I think ought to be answered if they can be. He stated that the Chinese bill, as it was called, was adopted upon certain principles. If the Chinese bill was a mere bill to discriminate against a man on account of color because he was of a copper color, or on account of his race because he was Chinese or Japanese or Indian—if that was the object of the bill it was very different from what I supposed. I supposed the object of that legislation was to exclude a class of men who came to this country not the owners of themselves, but owned by others, owned by corporations, who had contracted away their liberty, their manhood, before they came here—a class who were quasi servants and serfs, and that was the objection to that kind of immigration.

I voted against the Chinese bill because I thought it was dangerous to depart from the established policy of the American Government to open our doors to laboring men from all lands and from all climes. As I understand, the friends of that bill pressed it upon the ground that the men who came here under contracts as coolies were not free men. It was not because they were Chinese, or because their color was different from ours, but because they were not free men, because they came here as slaves to work against and to compete with free men in their labor. Still, even upon that claim I was opposed to the Chinese bill, and I was very sorry indeed that it passed.

Although I have often been severely criticised on account of my vote, I would stand by that vote now. I was opposed to restrictions upon the immigration of men who come to our country to better their condition, and I thought it was better to submit to the evils even of cooly contract labor than to undertake to interfere with our time-honored American policy. But when I was overruled in that particular, and Congress by a large majority, I think supported by the general public opinion, thought it was best to exclude those people, not because of their race and color, but because they were not free men, because they were owned by others, I yielded at once to that principle, and that became the law of the land and will not be changed.

The same rule ought to be applied to the same class of people of any other race or of any other color, or else I have not learned my theory of this Government aright. You can not base a discrimination of this kind upon race or color, but you must base it upon the condition of the people. We may properly refuse to allow slaves to be brought into this country, as our forefathers did when they prohibited the slave trade, not because they were black, but because they were slaves, and they were excluded on that ground. When slavery was abolished we regarded that the great thing accomplished was that those men were all made free, not that they were slaves and should be made white, or that they were made white by our emancipation, but that they were made free, the owners of themselves, their wives, and their children, hoping that in time, by education and association with our race they would become strong, self-reliant, self-governing. That was my idea of this class of legislation.

I have not considered the bill much. I suppose it would pass by common consent, as it did, I am told, in the other House. I supposed that the bill was in the line of the other legislation, to discriminate against a class, I do not care of what race or of what color, but a class of people who do not own themselves, who are brought here by corporations or by wealthy persons to compete in mines, manufactures, and establishments of various kinds with the free labor of free men, against hardy miners, mechanics, manufacturers, and even farmers; and that the objection to their coming here, whether they are Irishmen, or Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Italians, is not on account of their race or their color, but simply because they are not in a condition to share with us in the civilization which has been founded by free men and which is to be perpetuated by the free intelligent laboring men of this country.

I know there was a demand in my own State that the laboring men of that region should be freed from this kind of competition. They do not object to the incoming into this country of any man from any country of Europe or from anywhere else, but they object to these men brought by corporations under special contracts, to be fed as they were fed in Europe, to be brought up without the opportunity of education or means of improvement, and that they should not be compelled while they are working away at their hard toil to compete with that kind of contract labor.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator said a while ago in connection with his vote on the Chinese question that it was the condition of the people which induced that legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The condition of a class of people.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think I voted with the Senator on that proposition; but if I recollect aright a more important question than that entered into it, and that was that the habits and customs of those people from the great Asiatic empire were so inconsistent with the habits and customs of the Anglo-Saxon race that it raised a problem which required the intervening hand of legislation. I think in the debate which took place at that time it was admitted on all hands that if they were a homogeneous people of Anglo-Saxon blood and capable of assimilation the chief objection to their immigration would be removed.

Mr. SHERMAN. All European nations can assimilate with our people, can mix or mingle with them, but if there is in any country of Europe a class of people who are in such a condition of life that they can be classed as you may say as the coolies of Asia, people who do not own themselves, who work only for others, who have never conceived the idea of independent manhood—if there are in Europe such a class of people, and I am told there are, we should prohibit their importation into this country. We are led to believe that in many countries of Europe there is still away down at the substratum of those ancient societies a class of people who are reduced to that condition.

If there are any such classes of the white race I do not want them here, on the same principles that the friends of the Chinese bill voted for that measure. As for independent emigration from Ireland, from Scotland, or England, the fountains of the great body of immigration to this country, or from old Germany, the fountain of all the Anglo-Saxon people, or from any country in Europe, even of the Latin races, if there are in those countries any class of men so low in the scale of society that by the contracts described in the first section of the bill they may be brought in here to compete with our independent citizens who are struggling to elevate themselves in the arts of manhood, I say I would prohibit them, and I think in doing that I represent not only the laboring people of Ohio, but I represent every class of citizens of the State of Ohio, the wealthy, the rich, the educated, every citizen of Ohio who has respect for his manhood.

Our people do not wish to have such a class brought here in competition with the laboring men of Ohio, who are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, and from which class all the great men of our State and of our nation have sprung. We do not want the class of laborers described in the first section of the bill to be brought in competition with them.

I am not very familiar with this class of subjects, but I am told that in the large tomes that my friend from New Hampshire has piled upon our tables it appears that such contracts have been made by mining corporations and railroad corporations. One is a great railroad corporation near to us here, which it is said made contracts with Italian laborers who had no manhood, no independent home, scarcely a family, persons who sold themselves out and expected to go back to the country from which they came; who did not come to assimilate themselves with us and mingle with our race and our blood, but who were bought for a price and brought here, who turn out of their homes and their workshops thousands of honest, independent, intelligent laboring men. That is the kind of evil I am trying to deal with.

When the bill was brought here I supposed it would pass without much objection. I have given but little attention to the details of the bill. I can see a good deal of force in the statement made by the Senator from Delaware against the fourth section of the bill. I do not see how anybody could be convicted under that fourth section, because how could you prove the guilty knowledge? How could you show that the captain or owner of the vessel knew of such a contract? Such a thing as that would not naturally be communicated. The trouble is that the captain of a vessel might be harassed with suits and bothered and bedeviled by Tombs lawyers and the like. I do not see much force in that section. I think it would be without force, of no account, and therefore I do not care much whether it is in or out; but the first and second sections of the bill ought to demand the attentive and serious consideration of the Senate, because they prohibit a class of labor contracts which are inconsistent with our civilization, and when brought in contact with our laboring people are absolutely destructive to them and to their families and to their homes.

In some cases I have known where this class of imported labor has been brought into competition where they have turned out from happy homes and made poor and a wanderer many a person who has sought honestly and industriously to make a living on what we would regard as very small rates of pay. I do not see any objection to the first and second sections of the bill, and I shall vote for them. As to the rest of the bill it is a matter of detail. If the proposition should succeed to strike out the third and fourth sections of the bill it would not prevent me from voting for the bill, as I do not care whether those sections are in or out.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Delaware has this moment addressed me.

Mr. BAYARD. The language of the first section is exceedingly general and embracing. It prohibits the encouragement of the importation of any alien or aliens into the United States "under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied." I ask the Senator would it not be a very illogical thing to punish a citizen or a company who did these things, at the same time that the Government of the United States encourages and solicits the migration and importation of foreigners from every clime by offering them, under the right to enter homesteads, one hundred and sixty acres of land by merely making an affidavit that the applicant is the head of a family and has made a declaration of his intention to become a citizen? Here is a question of broad policy exemplified by the Government itself inviting and encouraging in the most ample manner men to come to this country and settle upon making the affidavit and the application, and they are, I may say, in direct competition with American labor, with persons doing service and labor in the shape of agriculture in the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Our land laws to which the Senator from Delaware refers were all based upon the idea that the immigration to this country was the immigration of industrious independent men. The whole theory of our land laws, which are the most liberal ever offered in the world, was founded upon the experience of the immigration to this country from 1820, because it did not commence much until after the war of 1812.

Mr. BAYARD. Will not my friend look at the language of the bill? It is confined to persons who are to perform labor or service.

Mr. SHERMAN. All these laws were based on the kind of immigration that came to this country from 1820 to 1870. Down to that time the idea of contract labor described in the bill was not thought of.

Mr. BAYARD. It may be the idea, but it is not the letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the letter.

Mr. BAYARD. The letter is simply encouragement; it is to encourage migration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer that. I say our land laws were made generous and liberal because they applied to a class of men who were worthy of that favor and who when they came upon the land at once contributed to our national wealth. But take the men who come here under these contracts to labor at a specific place and for a specific price; would you give them land? They do not want land; they do not come here for land; they do not come here for home or for family.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio now allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will hear the Senator from Alabama as soon as I answer the Senator from Delaware, if he will allow me a moment further. Look at the language of the bill. The bill prohibits the encouragement of what? The assisting and encouraging of the importation or migration of any alien or aliens. If it stopped there I would say it would be seriously subject to the objection made by the Senator from Delaware, but it goes on, "under contract or agreement." I leave out the words "parol or special, express or implied." I do not think they ought to be there.

Under contract or agreement made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

Take the first section in connection with the exceptions contained in the fifth section. That describes the importation of men who come here under special contracts, mostly in large numbers, to work at largely reduced pay for the benefit of corporations and companies. If the definition is not correctly given, if the kind of people aimed at by the bill is not correctly defined, then as a matter of course the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Alabama can suggest the correction. What I intend to vote for when I vote for the bill is to prevent this organized corporate importation, not of laboring men, but of bought men, to come here and compete with our laboring men, with our mechanics and miners. That is what I mean by it; that is the intention of the bill; and that importation ought to be prohibited in my judgment. Now I will hear the Senator from Alabama, if I have not already answered him.

Mr. MORGAN. I wanted to inquire of the Senator whether, if the party employed came here with the intention on his own part of remaining and becoming a citizen of the United States, he would then punish a man for having invited him to come or having paid his expenses?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill does not propose to punish such a man. If a man comes here and enters into any of the ordinary avocations of life without regard to his contract it does not even prohibit his migration hither. The bill does not operate upon the man who migrates, but only upon the man who imports or encourages the migration of contract labor. That is the difference.

If a man comes here under one of these contracts and goes out and claims the benefit of our pre-emption law, and thus becomes an independent citizen, I do not see how he can be punished; but the man who entices him, the shysters, the fellows who are sent off by corporations to gather up a gang of a hundred or a thousand men to come here and drive out an equal number of hardy, industrious miners and laborers, it is that kind whom it is proposed to punish by severe penalties, and also corporations who do it, and the owners or masters of the ships that bring them over knowingly and willfully. That is the class who are to be punished.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, if a farmer desired to bring over laborers to work on his farm in the West and he should make a contract with them that he would employ them for a year, and should say to them, "In addition to my contract to employ you for a year and to pay you for your service the Government of the United States will give you one hundred and sixty acres of land under her laws if you come," would the Senator consider that a violation of the public policy of the country or a violation of this proposed statute?

Mr. SHERMAN. All that would be done in that case would be that this bill would declare such a contract null and void unless it came within the exceptions embraced in the fifth section. There is no such kind of migration. We all know, the Senator knows as well as any one, that the kind of immigration which comes to this country which adds to our wealth and strength is that immigration which comes first from the adventurers who land here and start homes, who write back to the fatherland that here they can earn a dollar or a dollar and a half a day, and perhaps that information is accompanied with a twenty-dollar or a thirty-dollar contribution, saying, "Come here and share in the blessings of this great and free country." Those are the little influences and motives which have drawn to our country the great mass of our foreign immigration, and those are healthy in their character. They come here without contract, without arrangement, they take their chances with the rest of the laboring men in the country. The contracts described by the bill are contracts for organized labor which comes in competition with the free men who have thus been brought over in driblets in the ordinary course of migration.

Mr. MORGAN. But still, if the Senator will allow me, that would be encouraging the migration of those people into this country, and the bill denounces that.

Mr. SHERMAN. For one, if the Senator from Alabama can point out to me language more meet than the language contained in the first section to express what I want to prohibit, I will try to join with him in not prohibiting any more than we really desire to prohibit in order to accomplish the policy I have indicated. It may be that the language is not such as I would have used if I had framed the bill, and there are a good many things in it that I should have left out.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will excuse me, I can scarcely be called upon to frame language to except people he wants to prohibit from coming here; he can frame it himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not profess to reorganize all the bills that are brought here. I find here a bill that I believe aims at a good purpose. If in practice any defect should occur in its execution, just like the Chinese bill, which was very bad and faulty in the first instance and which was amended by subsequent legislation, so if this legislation is faulty it can be hereafter easily corrected by amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me a moment for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator says, if I understand him aright, that the bill is directed against the importation into this country of people who are practically bought to come here as organized labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I understand it to be.

Mr. McPHERSON. The phraseology of the bill is very liberal, it seems to me, and applies even to individual cases; it makes no difference for what reason they come. It does not apply to organized labor alone, but reaches a great many laborers who would naturally come here to better themselves, and who come here under a contract previously made for that purpose. Let me cite a case, and I should like then to have the Senator answer me whether that gentleman would be subject to the provisions of the bill. About four weeks ago a gentleman who is largely engaged in the manufacture of jute in Scotland, having a plant which cost, he says, nearly a million dollars, employing something like eight hundred laborers, came to this country and was on a visit to California where the market for his goods is mainly found—jute bags for the transportation of grain—as I believe under the law the grain is required to be put in bags before being placed on board vessels and taken abroad. His purpose, he tells me, is to move his plant and his labor to California, he is firmly resolved upon it, and he will no longer pay the duty exacted, as his market is almost entirely in California. He wants to move his laborers bodily to the State of California. How could he do that under this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see anything to prevent him from moving over to California. I should advise him to do it, because he gets nearer to the purchaser. I think if he is going to make jute bags he had better go to California, where he sells them, rather than to New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator and I agree upon that. We have established a protective tariff that we may protect our manufacturers and our own laborers. This gentleman desires to bring from five to eight hundred laborers from Scotland to California because they are dependent upon him there and they are a thrifty set of people who would become good citizens. Now I wish to know how under the bill it would be possible for him to move those eight hundred laborers without being subject to penalty?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the Senator how. Suppose the man frankly says to his workmen, "I have got to go to California to do my business; I prefer to leave Scotland and to go there. If you choose to go there we will make no contract about it, but if you go over to California and choose to work for me, I will employ you at such and such wages." The bill clearly covers that case. That is not the kind of a case which is aimed at. If the Senator wishes to describe the case of the Scotchman who wants, wisely I think, to move his establishment from Scotland to California, and if he will express that in meet words and put it in as an addition to the fifth section, I shall vote for it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Assuredly; but at the same time the Senator begs the question; he does not answer it, I submit, in such a way as I expected him to do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. In other words, either the bill does interfere with the removal of those eight hundred people from Scotland to the United States or it has no virtue whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will tell you what kind of a case it interferes with. Take a railroad corporation in the State of New Jersey that is not willing to pay a dollar and a quarter a day for wages, and finds that on account of the great superabundance of labor in Italy and Hungary it can hire men by the thousand, through shysters that it sends there for the purpose of talking to them, at 50 or 60 cents a day upon an agreement to work three years, with a certain stipulated quantity of rice and other food of that kind, and they make such contracts and are brought over, men who can not speak our language, who are not acquainted with our institutions, and they are put to work on a railroad in New Jersey, thus driving out of employment 3,000 Americanized laborers, good honest Americans, native-born or ordinarily naturalized citizens. That is the kind of people I want to get at. If the Senator and I can only agree on the language of the bill, I have no doubt we shall vote together.

Mr. McPHERSON. I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio, and probably will go as far as he will in any attempt to protect American labor, and I deplore as much as that Senator can the organizations that are gotten up for the purpose of depriving American labor of employment; but I want to do it by some measure of legislation that will be just and fair and proper, that will reach exactly that class of cases, and at the same time will not be so sweeping in its provisions as to deter honest and proper laborers from coming to this country seeking to better their condition.

The Senator from Ohio will go no further than I will in the direction that this bill proposes, and I submit that the only thing I wish to do is to perfect it. I do not like the bill as it is; I do not think the bill should pass in its present shape; but I do think it is possible to so amend it as to make it effective and capable of doing a great deal of good, and to that end I pledge myself, for I am very ready to aid in legislation on this question.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me a moment before the motion is put, as the supply of printed bills is exhausted, I ask that it be reprinted. Several Senators have spoken to me in regard to it. I ask that it may be printed with the amendments already adopted proposed by the committee, so that the Senate may see how the bill stands at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his proposition.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the motion to adjourn is put I would ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion for the purpose indicated?

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. In response to the request of several Senators, as the printed supply of the bill is exhausted, I move that it be reprinted, and that it be so reprinted as to show the amendments already adopted in Committee of the Whole as distinct from the original text, and that it be laid upon the tables to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the pending bill be reprinted with the amendments made in Committee of the Whole so as to show the amendments as they stand as additions to or changes of the bill. That order will be entered if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection. Will the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion to enable the Chair to lay before the Senate certain House bills?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I propose an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas presents an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, which will be printed for consideration.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 6824) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint one passed assistant engineer now on the retired-list of the Navy a chief engineer on the retired-list of the Navy was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. HARRISON. I believe there was a bill in relation to the Yellowstone Park that came from the House to-day. I ask the Chair to lay it before the Senate in order that I may ask the Senate to disagree to the amendments and have a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park, returned from the House of Representatives with amendments. The action of the House of Representatives thereon will be read.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were read.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. MANDERSON were appointed.

Mr. INGALLS. Now I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks unanimous consent to submit several executive communications.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Supervising Architect, recommending an extension of the limit of cost of the public building at Denver, Colo.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM VESSELS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the board of supervising inspectors of steam vessels, suggesting a modification of section 4435 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MERIDIAN OF GREENWICH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending that the meridian of Greenwich be adopted for astronomical and nautical purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MACHINERY FOR STEEL CRUISERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy asking legislation authorizing the expenditure of balance of appropriation for steel machinery for steel cruiser for either of the cruisers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HON. S. F. RICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the First Comptroller upon the claim of Hon. S. F. Rice for services rendered, recommending an appropriation therefor in the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SNY ISLAND LEVEE, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the Chief of Engineers of survey and examination of Sny Island levee, Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF PENSACOLA HARBOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report from the Chief of Engineers of survey and examination of outer and inner bars, Pensacola Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OATES. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether it would be within the rule to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business of the special hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining a request for unanimous consent to set aside that order. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] rises, as the Chair understands, to submit a privileged report.

Mr. OATES. I move to take from the Speaker's table House bill 7004 and refer it, with the Senate amendments, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NELSON. I object.

Mr. OATES. It is a privileged motion under what is known as the "Holman resolution," this being a bill to repeal pre-emption and other land laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send the bill to the desk so that the Chair can determine whether this is a privileged question.

Mr. OATES. It was so ruled by the Speaker when the bill was under consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 12, 1885.

Resolved, That this bill pass with amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Upon what ground is the claim based that this is privileged?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Speaker's table, is it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I think the point of order that it is not privileged is well taken. It requires unanimous consent to take it up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was endeavoring to ascertain whether this is a privileged report that the gentleman from Alabama is calling up.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no report about it; the bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. OATES. The motion I have made is privileged under the "Holman resolution."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Reports from the Committee on Public Lands are privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If this general subject be privileged, the motion in the judgment of the Chair would be privileged. The Clerk will report the resolution adopted by the House January 21, 1884, under which, as the Chair understands, the claim is made by the gentleman from Alabama that this is a privileged motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House all the public lands heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads, so far as the same are now subject to forfeiture by reason of the non-fulfillment of the conditions on which the grants were made, ought to be declared forfeited to the United States and restored to the public domain.

Resolved, That it is of the highest public interest that the laws touching the public lands should be so framed and administered as to ultimately secure freehold therein to the greatest number of citizens; and to that end all laws facilitating speculation in the public lands or authorizing or permitting the entry or purchase thereof in large bodies ought to be repealed, and all of the public lands adapted to agriculture (subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education) ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers, and disposed of under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands is hereby instructed to report to the House bills to carry into effect the views expressed in the foregoing resolutions; that said committee shall be authorized to report such bills at any time, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills; and the same shall in like order be entitled to consideration.

Mr. NELSON. This is not a report from any committee. It is a bill upon the Speaker's table. The motion is to refer it. It does not come within the privilege.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask attention to the point that the resolution applies to forfeited lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is perfectly willing to hear gentlemen on each side. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about the ruling.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the Chair decided?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not been allowed to decide anything.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the rule expressly provides, as has been held by the Speaker of the House, that all matters pertaining to the disposition of the public lands as homesteads shall be privileged under the Holman resolution. The object of this bill, as it came from the Committee on Public Lands, was to confine the disposition of all agricultural lands to homesteads, and therefore it is completely within the terms of the Holman resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think this constitutes a privileged motion. The report of a bill under the provisions of the resolution cited is evidently privileged, but it gives it no higher dignity than an appropriation bill would have. Under the rule the Chair never held it would be competent for any member of that committee to make the motion the gentleman now makes as applicable to this bill. The Chair does not think the motion of the gentleman is privileged.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will submit it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it appears from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the California and Oregon Railroad Company have failed to complete its line of road within the time provided by law; and

Whereas no attempt was made during more than ten years to complete the building of any part of said line of railroad, although said company had ample time so to do; and

Whereas on March 18, 1884, the above-recited facts were called to the attention of the President of the United States, and protest duly made and filed against the appointment of commissioners to examine said line of railroad; and

Whereas during the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress a bill forfeiting said grant passed the House of Representatives, and is now pending in the Senate; and

Whereas the President of the United States has recently appointed three commissioners to examine and report on said line of railroad: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this body, if not incompatible with the public interest, what were the reasons which moved him to appoint said commissioners to examine and report on the said line of railroad from Reading northwardly.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is that a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon what ground does the gentleman from California rest this as a privileged report?

Mr. HENLEY. It is a report from the Committee on Public Lands under the Holman resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, sir; it is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. OATES. I offer the following substitute for the resolution; and after it has been read I wish to say a word in support of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. Is it a report of a resolution or a bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it come from the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has stated that his committee was authorized to report this resolution of inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. Was it referred to the committee?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested not to confirm any favorable report which may be made by the commissioners recently appointed by him to inspect a section or sections lately completed of the California and Oregon Railroad, nor order patents to issue until the Senate of the United States acts upon H. R. 5897, being a bill to forfeit certain lands granted to aid in the construction of said railroad, and which passed this House June 6, 1884, or until after the adjournment of the present Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that is not in order as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine it.

Mr. KEIFER. The substitute is not a resolution of inquiry, but calls upon the President not to do what the Constitution and the laws require him to do.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will wait a moment I think he will see that he misapprehends it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HENLEY. I have no objection to the gentleman from Alabama submitting what observations he chooses on this matter, provided I am to have an opportunity to reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear gentlemen on both sides on the point of order.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the resolution submitted by the gentleman from California under instruction from the Committee on Public Lands is an inquiry to the President why he appointed commissioners to inspect a section of this railroad alleged to have been completed. His reply would necessarily be that he did it in obedience to section 4 of the act making the grant, which is as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the said companies, or either of them, shall have twenty or more consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated by this act, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners, whose compensation shall be paid by said company, to examine the same, and if it shall appear that twenty consecutive miles of railroad and telegraph shall have been completed and equipped in all respects as required by this act, the said commissioners shall so report under oath to the President of the United States, and thereupon patents shall issue to said companies, or either of them, as the case may be, for the lands hereinbefore granted, to the extent of and coterminous with the completed section of said railroad and telegraph line as aforesaid; and from time to time, whenever twenty or more consecutive miles of the said road and telegraph shall be completed and equipped as aforesaid, patents shall in like manner issue upon the report of the said commissioners, and so on until the entire railroad and telegraph authorized by this act shall have been constructed, and the patents of the lands herein granted shall have been issued.

The President has done simply what the law commanded him to do and simply what his oath of office required him to do. Hence, I oppose the resolution in the form presented here and offer the substitute, which respectfully requests him not to confirm any favorable report of the commissioners, or order patents to issue, until the Senate has acted upon the bill which was passed by the House, or until after the adjournment of this session of Congress. I think that is as far as this House ought to go. The resolution reported from the Committee on the Public Lands is, in my judgment, not exactly respectful to the President, nor do I think that it strikes at what the House ought to strike at, that is to say, that the President shall not act upon the report of the commissioners until after the adjournment of this Congress, or until after the Senate has acted upon the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. HORR. Is there a precedent anywhere for such a resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. What has become of the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Chair does not think that it is competent by way of amendment to submit to the House for its action that which is not privileged in its character in lieu of that which has the right of privilege, and which besides is not germane to the matter which is submitted as a privileged report. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Ohio, and holds that it is not competent to bring in, in the nature of an amendment to the resolution of inquiry which is privileged under the rule, a resolution such as that suggested by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. It relates to the same subject-matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This, however, is not a resolution of inquiry as submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, and would not have been in order as a privileged matter unless it had been a resolution of inquiry reported back as the resolution comes from the gentleman from California.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the gentleman from California.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to inquire whether or not we can object to the resolution offered by the gentleman from California or whether all debate is cut off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not cut off unless the gentleman from California chooses to do so by demaning the previous question.

Mr. BELFORD. I want to be heard.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the resolution be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from California is in possession of the floor.

Mr. HENLEY. Have I not the right to the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just so stated.

Mr. HENLEY. Then I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let it be again read.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. HORR. I hope the gentleman from California will not cut off debate instantly on this resolution; it is a matter of a great deal of importance. It seems to me to be in the nature of an insult to the Executive.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to disoblige the gentleman from Michigan, but I shall have to insist upon the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 52.

Mr. HORR. No quorum. I insist that an outrage of this kind should not be perpetrated upon the Executive without some proper [cries of "Regular order!"]—without some proper explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN. I think if the gentleman from California will answer a courteous question the call for a quorum may be withdrawn.

Mr. HENLEY. I will answer every question, of course. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if under the rule after the previous question has been ordered there will not be thirty minutes allowed for debate—fifteen minutes for and fifteen minutes against the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct as to the rule, but debate had been already had before the previous question was demanded, and hence there will be no debate after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. VALENTINE. There has been no debate upon the resolution, as I understand.

Mr. HORR. That is the very thing that we have not had.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal will show.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand the gentleman from California to yield for a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing, and the only thing in order now is the appointment of tellers, the point of order being made that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HENLEY and Mr. HORR were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 47.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STEELE. Is it in order to move to lay that upon the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move to lay it upon the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 47, noes 88.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BELFORD. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, six members only voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 55.

So (no further count being demanded) the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour under the special rule begins at six minutes before 1 o'clock. The Clerk will report the bill coming over as unfinished business in this hour from yesterday, called up by the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. THOMPSON.

NIOBRARA VALLEY RAILROAD.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7081) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes."

Be it enacted, &c., That section 17 of the act of July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," be, and is hereby, amended by adding the following:

That such railroad company now organized, or that may hereafter be organized under State or Territorial laws, as the President of the United States, by its request, may designate or approve for that purpose, shall construct and operate a line of railroad and telegraph from Sioux City, Iowa, westwardly, via the Niobrara Valley, to such point on the Union Pacific Railroad west of the one hundredth meridian as such company may select, not west of Granger, in the Territory of Wyoming, and on the same terms and conditions and with the same rights as are provided in this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, for the construction of the said Union Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Line and branches: Provided, That said company shall receive neither bonds nor lands, as provided in said acts: And provided further, That said company shall not be burdened by any of the obligations imposed upon the said Union Pacific Railway Company by reason of the lands and bonds given to that company, nor entitled to any special benefits conferred by said act growing out of such obligations, but shall be entitled to all benefits conferred by section 15 of the said act, approved July 2, 1864, amendatory of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the said company and the said Union Pacific Railway Company shall be regarded as a continuous line; and each company shall receive from and deliver to each other freight, express matter, passengers, cars, and all traffic, and each company shall charge and receive compensation therefor pro rata according to distance: And provided further, That said road shall carry the mails at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation: And provided further, That said road shall be completed within five years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter further to alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned; and this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal as, in the opinion of Congress, justice or the public welfare may require. And nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in favor of the United States.

SEC. 3. That each and every of the provisions in this act contained shall severally and respectively be deemed, taken, and held as in alteration and amendment of said act of 1862 and of said act of 1864, respectively, and of both said acts.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House in brief that the object of this bill is to authorize the building of a railroad from Sioux City, in Iowa, to a place called Granger, in Wyoming Territory, up what is known as the Niobrara Valley. It has undergone the severest scrutiny of the Committee on Pacific Railroads that we could give it and we have found no objection to the chartering of the company and the building of the road. It is to be built exclusively by private capital, without any subsidy on the part of the Government.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any reservation of the authority of Congress over that road to regulate the traffic.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I have agreed to accept an amendment to declare that expressly. I did not think it necessary, but in order that there should be no doubt whatever about it, I have agreed to accept an amendment that Congress shall reserve the right to regulate commerce and traffic on this road.

Mr. BUDD. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. BUDD. What is the meaning of the reservation from all of the "obligations imposed upon the said Union Pacific Railway Company?"

Mr. THOMPSON. The Government having given to the Union Pacific Company certain bonds and lands, required of them certain things which they should do; one of which was that, under the Thurman act and amendments thereto, they should have a sinking fund for the payment of bonds, &c. That is not required in the case of this road, because the Government has not contributed anything to it.

Mr. BUDD. But does not this exempt the road from all obligations whatsoever to the Government imposed on the Union Pacific?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; on the contrary, the bill provides every guard which the Committee on Pacific Railroads could find was necessary to secure to the Government the transportation of the mail at the same rate it pays to every other railroad in the country, together with the absolute power to regulate and control the traffic.

Mr. BUDD. Will the gentleman allow the amendment he has referred to to be read now?

Mr. THOMPSON. At the suggestion of the gentleman from California I desire to have read now the amendments which have been suggested. They are not, however, of much significance, being mostly verbal.

The Clerk read the proposed amendments, as follows:

In line 12, page 2, strike out the words "State or Territorial laws" and insert the words "the laws of Nebraska."

In line 15, after the words "Sioux City, Iowa," insert "crossing the Missouri River at Sioux City, thence."

After the word "acts," in line 24, insert the words "and the right of way shall be only one-half the width fixed by said acts."

In section 2, line 2, after the word "Congress," insert the words "to regulate interstate commerce or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. YOUNG). The question is on the amendments.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not until the bill is before the House for consideration. I do not wish to take snap judgment in its favor.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to make a few remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. YOUNG). Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to speak in opposition to the bill?

Mr. STRUBLE. No, sir; I am heartily in its favor.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the courtesy extended me, and now ask the attention of the House to the following resolutions recently adopted by the Board of Trade of Sioux City, Iowa, expressing as they do the earnest desire of the people residing there for the passage of the measure now under consideration:

Resolutions of Sioux City (Iowa) Board of Trade.

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill to provide for the construction of a line of railroad and telegraph from Sioux City to a connection with the Union Pacific road west of the one hundredth meridian, said line to cross the Missouri River at Sioux City and proceed directly westwardly; and

Whereas the proposition involved in said bill, carefully restricted, but contemplates a fulfillment, as we understand it, of the original purpose and promise of Congress with reference to the Union Pacific road and its branches: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Board of Trade of the city of Sioux City, Iowa, That special appeal be made to Congress in behalf of the large business interests involved and the wide extent of growing territory to be benefited to pass this bill.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this board, the report of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, made at the last session of Congress, presents succinctly the cogent reasons why this bill should pass, as follows:

"First. It will give railroad facilities to a territory equal in extent to the States of Indiana and Illinois.

"Second. It furnishes by far the best connection with the Union Pacific to the northwestern system of roads at and above Sioux City. Of these roads the most important are the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul, the Chicago and Northwestern, the Illinois Central, the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha, aggregating 15,000 miles of railway.

"Third. It shortens the distance to San Francisco from the principal points in the Northwest at least three hundred miles, on the average, so that its construction will directly benefit Northern Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Southern Dakota."

Resolved, That the unexpected diversion of the so-called Sioux City branch of the Union Pacific road to a line south from Sioux City to within twenty-four miles of Council Bluffs, and thence west to a connection with the Union Pacific at Fremont, in Nebraska, was a virtual nullification of the proposition originally presented, and the same has taken from Sioux City and all Northern Iowa, all of Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Dakota, as well as all of the extent of country immediately west and northwest of Sioux City, the advantages promised in the original proposition for a Sioux City branch of the Union Pacific road.

Resolved, That it is the earnest wish of this body that the bill now pending may be passed by Congress, believing that its provisions involve no more than an act of tardy justice both to the people and the railway interests predicated in an early day upon the building of the Sioux City branch, and can only result in signal advantage to all interests throughout the wide extent of country subject to the influence of the proposed line.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representative in Congress, Hon. I. S. STRUBLE, and that he be requested to present and urge the same.

Attest:

JOHN HORNICK,
President Sioux City Board of Trade.
E. W. SKINNER,
Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, these resolutions voice the united sentiments of the citizens of a city in my district, in the growth and prosperity of which the entire district, and I think I may say the entire State of Iowa as well, feels a just pride.

Four years ago—five at most—it possessed a population of 8,000 people; it now has from sixteen to seventeen thousand. Its growth in every respect that marks its progress of permanent prosperity has, during the past four years, been marvelous.

In 1882 and 1883 its people expended over $600,000 each year in improving and building dwellings and business property. In 1884 they expended very nearly $1,000,000 for similar improvements, and the present year, notwithstanding the financial and commercial depression prevailing, promises further satisfactory growth.

Her wholesale establishments, large and small, number nearly twenty, and embrace some heavy and valuable stocks of goods. Manufacturing industries of importance have already gained a permanent foothold and are rapidly extending.

Situated on the Missouri River, about midway between Council Bluffs and the north line of the State, with no competing city for her wholesale trade east, north, or west for a less distance than three hundred miles, and surrounded on all sides by a vast and magnificent agricultural and stock-raising country, she is destined at no distant day to become a financial and commercial center of no little importance. Indeed that time has already come; and gentlemen may be surprised to learn that one of her three prosperous national banks, the Sioux National, in the amount of its paid-up capital and its individual deposits, ranks first in the State. Its paid-up capital is $500,000, being three hundred thousand more than any national bank in the State; and its individual deposits, as shown by the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency, were, at the date reported, $464,743.93, or $2,373.59 more than the next highest deposits in the State. On December 20, 1884, its individual deposits were over $600,000.

Her commercial and general business condition comports favorably with her financial, but her enterprising people, possessing the same commendable spirit of energy and enterprise for which the people of many sections of country are noted, are not content with the financial and commercial success already achieved.

They seek further growth, a larger prosperity, and it need scarcely be said that they are deeply interested in the passage of this bill. And not only so, but it must be apparent to the most casual observer who will for a moment consider the situation that all the sections of the West referred to in the resolutions which I have submitted are, or should be, largely concerned in having opened up more direct and speedy communications with the Pacific than now exist in that part of the West. The railroad connections of the sections referred to in the resolutions are almost perfect. Roads from the south, east, northeast, north, and northwest center there, and fairly adequate facilities exist across the river to the south and somewhat to the west, but the only way open to the Pacific for this vast section of country, except via the Northern Pacific, is south from Sioux City to within about twenty-five miles of Council Bluffs, thence west to a connection with the Union Pacific at Fremont, Nebr.

One more road, and one only, namely, the one contemplated by the original Union Pacific scheme authorized by the acts of Congress incorporating that road and its branches, and in an important sense promised to the people of that city and the sections to which I have referred, is lacking to complete perfect railroad communication to and from Sioux City in all directions and to open to the people of that great Northwest the same direct connection with the Pacific now and for nearly twenty years enjoyed by all other sections of the country included within the contemplation and purpose of Congress in seeking, as it did in 1862 and 1864, by the passage of the acts to which I have referred, the incalculable commercial benefits which have resulted to the sections of the country situated within convenient access to the Union Pacific and its completed branches. In the name and on behalf of the people of Sioux City and the great Northwest to which I have alluded I earnestly implore of this House the passage of this bill.

The railroad facilities on the east side of the Missouri River in that vicinity centering in Sioux City are practically complete, but west of the river are incomplete. The people in that section appreciate the importance of this line of road, which will give them connection with the West. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to say a word?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to say with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] that the entire section of country in the Northwest is interested in the building of this road. It should have been built under the original legislation, when there was a subsidy granted; but it was not, and the road was diverted down the Missouri River ninety miles without approaching the cut-off that was intended. It is but just to that section of the country, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, and all that region, that this short line of road should be built and all reasonable inducements given to bring about such a desirable result.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. YOUNG). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendments.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to say that I accept these amendments at the instance of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN.] He proposed to strike out the words "State and Territorial laws" and substitute "the laws of Nebraska," because he said that possibly some Territorial Legislature might pass some charter which would contain some provision that was not well guarded. I consented to accept that amendment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The Territories have no right to grant the charter.

Mr. THOMPSON. I accept the amendment and substitute the words "the laws of Nebraska."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the point of order that the time allowed for debate has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. YOUNG]. The question is on the adoption of the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. PETERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to John P. Peterson, late a private of the Capitol police, the sum of $237.60, being the 20 per cent. additional compensation allowed him under joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employés in the civil service of the Government at Washington, approved February 28, 1867.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. There is a unanimous report of the Committee on Claims in favor of this bill, and the Supreme Court has decided that this man is entitled to the additional 20 per cent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the report read.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Yes; I intended to have it read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. WOOD), as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

The committee find that said Peterson was on the 30th day of May, A. D. 1866, duly appointed as private on the United States Capitol police, at an annual salary of $1,581, and that he served as such from that day until the 1st day of April, 1867; that Congress passed a joint resolution giving an additional compensation of 20 per cent. on the amount of their salaries, to commence on the 1st day of July, 1866, to certain employés in the civil service of the Government at Washington, of which the said John P. Peterson was one, which said joint resolution was approved by the President February 28, 1867 (see 14 Stats., page 569), and that under said joint resolution the said Peterson is entitled to the sum of $237.60, the same never having been paid to him, as appears from the following letter from Hon. R. M. Reynolds, First Auditor of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
January 8, 1881.

SIR: Upon examination of the records of this office I do not find that you were ever paid 20 per cent. additional compensation under the joint resolution of February 28, 1867.

Respectfully,

R. M. REYNOLDS,
First Auditor.

JOHN P. PETERSON, Esq.,
Room 13, Floor B, Post-Office Department:

The committee further report that the reason why said Peterson was not paid said additional compensation is, that the right of the members of said Capitol police to said additional compensation under said joint resolution was at first questioned, and for the purpose of determining the same suits were instituted in the Court of Claims, and said Peterson, among other claimants, gave his case into the hands of the attorney who brought such suits, but by some mistake of said attorney his claim was not filed, and said Peterson had no knowledge of the fact until the time had expired in which suits could be filed and until after the appropriations had been covered back into the Treasury.

But your committee find that said suits were finally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the claimants, and that said Peterson is justly entitled to the said sum of $237.60, and they therefore report back said bill and recommend the passage of the same.

PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petition of John P. Peterson, of Altona, Knox County, State of Illinois, would respectfully show that on the 30th day of May, 1866, he was appointed on the Capitol police, at an annual salary of $1,581, and continued a member thereof from that time to April 1, 1867, inclusive.

That under a joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employés of the civil service, at Washington, approved February 28, 1867 (14 Stat., 569), your petitioner was entitled to 20 per cent. additional upon his compensation as aforesaid, commencing with July 1, 1866, or an addition for the nine months from July 1, 1866, to April 1, 1867, of $237.60, no part of which ever was paid to him, although all the other members of the Capitol police force received the extra compensation provided by said joint resolution.

The circumstances which deterred your petitioner from receiving payment of the amount thus due him were as follows: The right of the members of said Capitol police to receive payment under the aforesaid joint resolution was at first questioned; and for the purpose of determining the same suits therefor were brought in the Court of Claims. Your petitioner gave his case to the attorney who brought the aforesaid suits, but by some mistake of said attorney it was never filed; of this fact your petitioner had no knowledge until the time had expired within which suits could be filed, and until after the appropriations had been covered into the Treasury.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Newman, captain of the Capitol police (reported in 13 Wallace, 568), held that the members of the Capitol police were entitled to be paid under said resolution. This opinion was delivered during the December term, 1871, and your petitioner fully believing that his case had been filed with the others, and that his interests were fully protected, waited until long after said time for payment to be made, when he learned for the first time the omission as aforesaid, when it was too late for him to take action on the case.

Your petitioner therefore humbly prays that the amount due him as aforesaid may be appropriated and the same may be paid by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury; and your petitioner will always pray.

JOHN P. PETERSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of January, 1881.

[SEAL.] JAMES LAWRENSON,
Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will state further that a bill was passed quite recently giving the 20 per cent. to the Metropolitan police, and the Supreme Court has held that the Capitol police were also entitled to this additional compensation, which Mr. Peterson has never received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park. A few words of explanation may be necessary in reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will not be in order until after the reading of the bill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. POST, of Wyoming), as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 221) entitled "An act to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park," respectfully report:

That they have given the bill very careful consideration and have unanimously reported it with certain amendments.

The examinations of your committee have disclosed that north of the Yellowstone River there are no objects of public interest which it is desirable to embrace within the limits of the park. It was also very clearly disclosed that the uncertainty of its northern boundary rendered the control of that portion of the park extremely difficult and unsatisfactory. It has been almost impossible to convict persons arrested for depredations there, the ready excuse being that the game killed was not within the limits of the park.

Your committee deems it of great importance in a portion of the park which must necessarily be subjected to a large amount of travel, that its boundary should be so absolutely defined that no such excuses can avail. As it is now, the law is practically inoperative in that portion of the park, through the impossibility of giving it efficient execution for the reason stated.

The northern boundary, recommended by your committee, follows the Yellowstone River and its eastern branch, to a point where the East Fork intersects the meridian of 110° 10′ west longitude, and thence due east to the meridian of 109° 30′ west longitude. The extension of the park upon the east, as proposed in the Senate bill, includes the Hoodoo Mountains and many objects of great public interest, while it does not embrace any territory likely to be encroached upon by settlers, and is therefore peculiarly adapted to an efficient and permanent game preserve.

The bill for like reasons extends the park on the south to the forty-fourth parallel of north latitude.

The changes made by the committee are, first, to make the Yellowstone River and its eastern fork the northern boundary of the park to the meridian of 110° 10′ west longitude, thence due east to the meridian of 109° 10′ west longitude; and, second, to define and fix the judicial jurisdiction in Wyoming Territory, the laws of which are now operative in the park, and which are regarded as amply sufficient.

Your committee concurs in the Senate bill and recommends its passage, the only amendments being the fixing of the northern boundary to follow the Yellowstone River and its East Fork, as defined in the bill, and changing the jurisdiction as expressed in the Senate bill, from Montana to Wyoming Territory, where your committee believes it to properly belong.

Amend the bill as follows:

In line 9, section 1, after the word "point," insert the following: "Where the said forty-fifth parallel touches the Yellowstone River, thence up the north bank of said river to the East Fork of the Yellowstone River, thence up the north bank of said East Fork to a point where it intersects the meridian of one hundred and ten degrees and ten minutes west longitude."

Second. In line 3, section 6, strike out the word "Montana" and insert the word "Wyoming."

Third. In line 6, section 6, strike out the word "Gallatin" and insert the word "Uinta."

Fourth. In line 9, section 6, strike out the word "Gallatin" and insert the word "Uinta."

Fifth. In line 12, section 6, strike out the word "Montana" and insert the word "Wyoming."

In line 18, section 6, strike out the word "Montana" and insert the word "Wyoming."

In line 11, section 7, strike out the word "Montana" and insert the word "Wyoming."

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in favor of the bill has expired.

Mr. HILL. There has been no debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the time for debate in favor of the bill has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a statement about two minutes long in reference to this bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Unanimous consent can not be given under the rule.

Mr. BEACH. I object, unless the full five minutes is allowed in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has the time for debate expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes of the time has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I thought I was recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, but other gentlemen are asking questions.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield a moment to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL], if there is no objection—just one minute.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, almost the sole object of this bill is to protect the Yellowstone Park.

Mr. BEACH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEACH. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio, on my right [Mr. HILL], asked to have two minutes within which to explain the provisions of this bill, and I objected if that time was to be taken out of the time in opposition to the bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL] is now proceeding, not by unanimous consent but in time yielded to him by his colleague [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. BEACH. Ah! I did not understand.

Mr. HILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate unanimously on the unanimous report of the Committee on Territories. Two years ago more than eight hundred elk were shot down in the Yellowstone region by people who were not citizens, merely for the sport, and the year before that a party of despoilers from England went into this park and killed four hundred or more. They also used dynamite in the lake for the destruction of the fish, and cut down valuable timber in the park.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HILL. Is my time out already? It is the shortest minute I ever heard of. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to comprehend an important matter like this in the short time we have to debate it. I agree with the general purposes of this bill, but I dissent from most of the amendments proposed by the House Committee. One of these amendments proposes to recede to the Territory of Montana a part of the land included in this national park. Now, as a matter of fact, the present northern boundary of the park is within less than five miles of the greatest natural curiosity in all the world—the Mammoth Springs. If you recede the northern portion of the park to Montana you bring the boundary line almost to the very verge of this great natural curiosity. We want to protect it.

I understand also, Mr. Speaker, there are some people who have discovered valuable minerals in the neighborhood of these great springs; and for this reason it is thought we should recede that part of the park to the Territory of Montana. But if we encroach upon the boundaries of this park as originally laid out, carefully and prudently, we are likely to encroach again whenever prospectors or others want to get in at one place or another.

It was my great delight to visit the National Park not a great while ago. I am in favor of extending its boundaries as proposed in this bill, but I am utterly opposed to cutting off a portion of the territory of the park, especially on the north. We could spare some of the land on the east or on the west, because there the boundary does not approach so closely to those important natural curiosities—the geysers. But we can not spare any portion of this park on the north.

Mr. CASSIDY. The mining district to which the gentleman has alluded is entirely outside of the boundaries of the park as existing today.

Mr. KEIFER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understand it is right on the boundary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate on this bill has expired.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the rule under which we are now operating it is not in order for the Chair to entertain the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BEACH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether there is any time allowed in opposition to this measure?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been exhausted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. BEACH. Then I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there objections to the present consideration of the bill? [A pause.] Only one gentleman rises to object; and the bill is before the House for consideration. The first question is on the amendments reported by the Committee on Territories. If there be no objection, the question upon these amendments will be taken in gross.

Mr. KEIFER. I object. I ask that the amendments be considered separately.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

In line 9, section 1, after the word "point," insert the following:

"Where the said forty-fifth parallel touches the Yellowstone River, thence up the north bank of said river to the East Fork of the Yellowstone River, thence up the north bank of said East Fork to a point where it intersects the meridian of 110° and 10′ west longitude."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. That amendment ought not to be agreed to.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 69, noes 17.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Second. In line 3, section 6, strike out the word "Montana" and insert the word "Wyoming."

Mr. MAGINNIS. I presume there will be no objection——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to make a motion. I move that the question be taken on all the other amendments together. They simply take the jurisdiction away from Montana and give it to Wyoming, where I am perfectly willing it should go.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the question on the remaining amendments will be taken in gross. The Chair hears no objection.

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATHAN B. CLARK.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6824) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Passed Assistant Engineer Nathan B. Clark, United States Navy, a chief engineer on the retired-list of the Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Passed Assistant Engineer Nathan B. Clark, United States Navy, a chief engineer on the retired list of the Navy, with the highest rate of retired pay of that grade.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported to the House by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is an entirely meritorious measure and should encounter no objection. In order to identify the beneficiary in the bill I will say that he is the inventor of deflecting armor, and has been paralyzed for some years by reason of disease incurred in the service.

I propose at the proper time to ask the adoption of a substitute recommended for the bill by the committee, changing the form of the measure but not its substance. I reserve the residue of my time, intending to yield it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] who introduced this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLACKBURN). So far as the Chair is aware, no gentleman rises to claim the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has the report been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think it should be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read in the time allowed for opposition to the bill.

The report (by Mr. GOFF) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6824) authorizing the President to appoint Passed Assistant Engineer Nathan B. Clark, United States Navy, a chief-engineer on the retired-list of the Navy, respectfully report as follows:

This officer entered the service May 13, 1861, and was placed on the retired-list October 16, 1868, on account of chronic rheumatism, contracted from exposure in the line of duty. During the war he was continuously at sea, with the exception of six weeks' leave of absence granted by Admiral Farragut in 1864, while the vessel to which he was attached was undergoing repairs. He is credited on the Register with five years and eight months' sea-service.

Since his retirement his physical disability has gradually grown worse, and for some years past he has been entirely unable to walk, or even move himself, and it has therefore been necessary to have the services of an able-bodied male attendant, which is an onerous tax on the pay allowed a retired passed assistant engineer, which is the same for a slight disability as for that of the gravest character. While the slightly disabled officer can supplement his retired pay by engaging in other pursuits, the one totally disabled is deprived of that privilege, and is handicapped by the maintenance of personal attendants and other expenses in order to live.

Prior to his retirement he had rendered all the sea-service required by law for promotion, with the exception of two months and eighteen days, and if on the active-list he would have reached the grade of chief-engineer years since. He was appointed to his present grade January 1, 1865. He participated in many of the most important naval engagements of the late war.

The committee are of opinion the bill should pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BENNETT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those who are in favor of sustaining the objection will rise. [After a pause.] Only two members have risen, which is not a sufficient number; and the bill is before the House for present consideration.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I offer the following as a substitute for the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint one passed assistant engineer now on the retired-list of the Navy a chief-engineer on the retired-list of the Navy.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one passed assistant engineer on the retired-list of the Navy a chief-engineer on the retired-list of the Navy, with the highest retired pay of that grade.

Mr. CURTIN. How do you know he will be appointed?

Mr. TALBOTT. That is all right.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent the title of the bill will be amended to correspond with the substitute which was adopted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ABERDEEN, MISS.

Mr. MULDROW. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 870) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Miss., for use as a post-office, United States court, and for United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable fire-proof building at Aberdeen, in the State of Mississippi, for the accommodation of the United States district court, post-office, internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building, for which he shall cause proper plans and estimates to be made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the purchase of said site and the completion of said building exceeding the sum of $100,000: Provided, That no part of the said sum of $100,000 shall be used until the State of Mississippi shall release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax or in any way assess said site, and the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the United States shall be the owner thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is reported from the committee with the amendment to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. MULDROW. The report of the committee is short, and I ask it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 870) providing for the erection of a public Federal building in the city of Aberdeen, Miss., for the use of the United States district court, post-office, and other public services of the Government, make the following report:

The committee have given the matter careful consideration, and find that the city of Aberdeen is a place of great commercial importance and rapid growth, having nearly doubled its population since 1880, and erected nearly two hundred new houses in the last eighteen months. Its location near the head of navigation on the Tombigbee River gives it a controlling influence in the trade of that valley, while its position at the terminus of a branch of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and it being the present terminus of the Canton, Aberdeen and Nashville Railroad, just being completed, which will give it direct connection with New Orleans, and the probable completion of the Memphis, Selma and Brunswick road, upon which it is a charter point, impress your committee with the fact that it is likely in the near future to be a city of leading importance and population.

Your committee are convinced, however, that in considering the question of erecting such a building as the bill calls for at Aberdeen, for the accommodation of the Federal court, the population of the town itself is of secondary consideration. The court and court-house are for the accommodation of the district, and this jurisdiction, to wit, the eastern division of the northern district of Mississippi, embraces the great "prairie belt" of that State, including sixteen of the most prosperous counties of the State, with an aggregate population of about 300,000 people, and including the flourishing commercial towns of Tupelo, Corinth, Okolona, West Point, Columbus, Starkville, Macon, Baldwin, Verona, &c., in addition to Aberdeen.

That the population, wealth, enterprise, and all that goes toward creating business for the courts of the United States, is increasing, and there are many evidences that this immediate section is fully abreast in all things progressive with other portions of the Union.

While the population of the city proper does not probably at the present time exceed 5,000, the population of the supervisor's district, of which it is the center, is over 13,000, and it may be fairly estimated that Aberdeen is the post-office for a population of fully 15,000 people; the market town for fully 50,000, and the seat of the Federal court, to which 300,000 people must bring their grievances.

The Federal court business at Aberdeen is about two-thirds of the business of the northern district of Mississippi, and is constantly increasing. There is no building at present suitable for holding the court that can be obtained, the court now being held over dry-goods stores and law offices, without vaults or other places of safety for the keeping of the records, and where they are constantly exposed to the danger of fire. Your committee believe that the interests of the people of this large and populous region of Mississippi require the construction of the building contemplated by this bill, that it is necessary for the post-office and Federal court purposes, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment making the amount $75,000.

Mr. MULDROW. I will say briefly, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have recommended by their amendment an appropriation of $75,000 for this building. The court there is now held over an old store, where the records are in constant danger of destruction. There is neither conveniences for the court nor its officers.

Mr. HORR. What does the last census show to be the population of Aberdeen?

Mr. MULDROW. About 3,000. The population has nearly doubled since that time, Aberdeen being now the terminus of a railroad, and nearly two hundred new houses were put up in that town last year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in favor of the motion has expired.

Mr. HORR. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is just such a building as the one named in this bill which brings into disrepute the passing of this kind of laws. The gentleman himself admits it is a place of only 3,000 inhabitants.

Mr. MULDROW. Five thousand.

Mr. HORR. The report of the last census he says was 3,000; 5,000 is imaginary.

Mr. MONEY. Allow me to say that is the population within the corporate limits; there are two or three times as many there in and out of the corporate limits.

Mr. HORR. The report itself shows that town is of so little significance there is not a hall in it, or a place they can get to hold a United States court, except over some dry-goods store, showing this, that there are in the United States at a small estimate 50,000 villages larger than this one. And if you give this place a building we should extend the system without limit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two minutes remain in opposition, but the hour under the rule has expired.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5479) to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Messrs. HART and ANDERSON, for this day, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to dispense with all private business for to-day.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Heretofore I have been in the habit of insisting on private business on Friday, but realizing the importance of getting appropriation bills out of the way and into the Senate, I shall not do so to-day.

Mr. BAGLEY. I hope we will not dispense with the morning hour, but let committees report back the Senate bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing but bills of a private nature could be reported.

Mr. BAGLEY. It would not take over fifteen minutes.

Mr. MATSON. Is the effect of the motion to do away with the evening session for pension cases?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not affect that.

Mr. CANNON. Let the Pension Committee report back the Senate amendments. I ask that be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the new rule the Speaker can not ask for unanimous consent. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that all private business be dispensed with to-day.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 20.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, and pending that motion I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], who desires to submit a motion.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. FORNEY, the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be printed with the Senate amendments, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois I ask that unanimous consent be given to the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions to report pension bills to the House for action under the special order of Friday evenings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that under the rule he is not permitted to entertain requests for unanimous consent, but the Chair thinks that it is the province of the committees to make such reports.

Mr. PERKINS. To report them to the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The language of the rule is, "the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions."

Mr. PERKINS. My request is that the committees at the evening session be permitted to make these reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that can be done under the rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to submit a motion.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that at 10 o'clock to-night the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 135, noes 1.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum. I understand this is a proposition to take a recess to-night.

Mr. WILLIS. I object to debate and demand the regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to have the Chair state exactly what the pending motion is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky upon which the House is now dividing, but will again state that it is proposed at 10 o'clock this evening that the House shall take a further recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, upon which question the vote has just been announced and the point is made that no quorum has voted.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do insist upon it. I think that there should be a quorum present if gentlemen on that side of the House——

Mr. WILLIS. I object to debate, and call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 164.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make no further demand for a count and withdraw the call.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TALBOTT, on and after Monday next.

To Mr. GOFF, for three days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

At the close of the last session of the House the pending question was on the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana to the clause of the bill which had been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to submit a single remark in further support of the point of order. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the language of section 4011 of the Revised Statutes, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every contract for transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign country shall contain, besides the usual stipulation for the right of the Postmaster-General to discontinue the same, the further stipulation that it may be terminated by Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that the pending proposition changes existing law is manifest; and my main object in seeking the ear of the Chair further is to call attention to what I conceive to be the clear misinterpretation of this section 4009, to which the attention of the Chair was called at an early moment in this discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the liberty of interrupting the gentleman to suggest that if he desires to close the debate upon the point of order the Chair is informed that a gentleman on the other side wishes to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. One other gentleman desires to speak upon the other side before the argument is closed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall be glad to hear from him before proceeding with my remarks.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I feel some diffidence in undertaking to discuss a question arising under the rules of the House; but this is a question of law. The rules governing the business of this House are laws which are to be interpreted, as I understand it, just as other laws are interpreted.

The question raised here is that the provision of the bill under consideration undertakes to change existing law, and the first section which it is claimed to change is the section 3976; the next is 4007 and 4009.

Now, as a preliminary proposition, I wish to state that there can be no change in existing law until the law itself effecting the change becomes operative. It is admitted on all hands that section 3976 is repealed by the Dingley bill, so called, which goes into operation on the 1st day of April next. The Dingley bill is in conflict with existing law and repeals as soon as it goes into effect that section 3976. Let me ask the gentleman how can any law change existing law until it becomes operative? The law under consideration does not become operative until the 1st day of July next.

Suppose that in this very provision which is under consideration it were declared that on and after the 1st of July next this provision of the bill shall become operative, would it then be in conflict with existing laws? Why, sir, certainly not.

I will give you an illustration which I think is pertinent to the question under consideration. By the constitution of my State it is provided that laws passed by the General Assembly shall not go into operation until ninety days after their passage, unless there is a clause inserted in the bill itself declaring that, because of an emergency and declaring what that emergency is, the law shall go into effect immediately on its approval by the governor. But suppose there is no emergency clause; a bill passes the Legislature, say, to-day; by the provisions of that bill it repeals an existing law. But by the provisions of the constitution it does not go into effect until ninety days after its passage. The supreme court of Missouri have decided that question. They have decided that although the law passed to-day, by the terms of its provisions, by the letter of the law, repealed an existing law, yet it has no effect upon the existing law until it becomes operative in itself, to wit, ninety days after its passage.

Now I think that is a case in point. It is no law at all; it has no effect as a law until it becomes operative; and by the terms of the law itself under consideration it does not become operative until the 1st day of July next, when in the mean time section 3976 of the Revised Statutes has been repealed by the provisions of the Dingley law. So it has not the effect of repealing any existing law. But I can not add anything to the close argument presented by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] and by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] on that point.

The next point under consideration is whether the provision is in conflict with the provisions of sections 4007 and 4009 of the Revised Statutes. Now, let us look at these statutes; and here is really the only question—I will not say the only question worthy of consideration, but I say it is the only question that suggests itself to my mind as to whether there can be any doubt whatever upon the question whether this does change existing law. That section, 4007, provides as follows:

SEC. 4007. The Postmaster-General may, after advertising for proposals, enter into contracts for the transportation of the mail between the United States and any foreign country whenever the public interests will thereby be promoted.

There is an absolute authority unlimited but by the provisions of section 4009. There is a limitation there, and what is that limitation? It is this:

SEC. 4009. For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage; and if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

Now, if the words "on the mail so transported" referred to the first clause of the section as well as the second the point is well taken. But on a fair construction of that section can any one say the latter part of the section refers to the first clause; that is, to the transportation of mails on United States steamships? That first clause is a provision substantive and independent, standing by itself. It says:

For transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the United States touching at a foreign port, the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation, if by a United States steamship, any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage.

That fixes the limit within which the Postmaster-General may make this contract; and, according to its terms, it includes in its aggregate all the sea and inland postage, according to the provisions of this section of the bill; all, not simply the mail that may be transported on the vessel, as is the case in reference to foreign vessels, but all the sea and United States inland postage. There is there a semicolon separating that portion of the section from the balance. The last clause is:

And if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported.

What mail "so transported?" Why, sir, the mail so transported on a foreign steamship. The clause is entirely separate and distinct from the first clause which governs and controls and limits the Postmaster-General in regard to making contracts for transportation of mails on United States steamships. The last clause limits the power given to the Postmaster-General over the mail transportation upon a foreign steamship. The first has no limit except the whole amount of inland and sea postage; and the last is limited to the amount of mail so transported upon the vessel.

I defy any gentleman to place a different construction upon that section other than the one I have placed upon it. The first clause refers to transportation of the mail upon American vessels, the second to transportation upon foreign vessels. The first limits the Postmaster-General and the contracts within the whole amount of sea and United States inland postage; the second to the amount of postage on the foreign vessels on which that mail is transported.

These are the two questions, as I understand them, that are presented for our consideration, and it is simply a question of the construction of that provision of the rules which says that we shall not in an appropriation bill change existing law. I say there is no change of existing law made by this provision under the interpretation of the existing law that I have stated here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, although I think the argument submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] was very conclusive, and one that has not yet been met—that, for the purposes of the rule of the House, section 3936 of the Revised Statutes is still in force, is existing law, and is affected by this provision, yet, notwithstanding the cogency of that argument, for myself I prefer resting this question upon section 4009, which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROADHEAD] has just discussed; and I feel confident that, after reading that section more carefully, my friend would not submit the argument he has made here either to the Chair or to a court of justice. I am absolutely certain he would not. I am perfectly willing that the interpretation of that section shall control this question of order.

Mr. Chairman, in interpreting a statute the mere punctuation is of no moment, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. BROADHEAD] is aware; but see the absurdity (if my friend will excuse me for using that term) of the conclusion which would inevitably be reached if his interpretation is correct. If a contract is made with a United States steamship it may extend to any sum not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROADHEAD] says that means all the United States inland and all the sea postage—all. That is the force of my friend's position. Now see the absurdity of the hasty reading of the statute that my friend has indulged in.

The next provision is:

And if by a foreign steamship or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage—

That is to say, interpreting the statute as my friend does, that under this section all the inland postage, as well as the sea postage, may be paid to an American steam vessel, while at the same time the same section provides that the sea postage on the mail matter transported by a foreign vessel may be paid to that vessel. How is that possible?

The whole of both the inland and the sea postage may be paid by the Postmaster-General to one class of vessels, American steam vessels; but at the same time, under the same section of the statute, a portion of that money, namely, the sea postage on the mail matter transported, may be paid to another class of vessels. I trust the absurdity of the proposition is sufficiently manifest.

Now, what is the fair reading of that provision of law? It is that for transporting the mails between the United States and foreign countries the Postmaster-General may allow to United States steamships, if the mails are transported by them, any sum not exceeding the sea and the United States inland postage, and if by a foreign steamship, or by a sailing vessel, any sum not exceeding the sea postage on the mail so transported. Further, let my friend [Mr. BROADHEAD] note that under his interpretation of this statute the Postmaster-General is authorized to pay to a single solitary steamship the entire inland and sea postage.

Mr. BROADHEAD. The gentleman misunderstood me. I understand that section 4009 to be a limitation upon the power of the Postmaster-General in making contracts; that is all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it is a limitation, but it does not limit him so as to recognize his power to apply the entire inland and sea postage to the payment of a single ship, and yet at the same time provide for the application of a portion of the same money—the sea postage—to a foreign vessel to the extent of its transportation of the mails. Why, the proposition is utterly untenable.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another consideration which should influence us in interpreting this statute, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BROADHEAD] to it. This statute has been in force for fourteen years, and yet it has never received the interpretation which the gentleman from Missouri now seeks to attach to it. It never has been so interpreted; but, on the other hand, it has been interpreted according to the manifest intent and force of the language, and has been held to mean that the contract of the Postmaster-General with an American steamship company might be for the entire inland and sea postage on the mail matter transported, and with a foreign vessel for the sea postage on the mail matter so transported.

The section has received no other interpretation from the time of its enactment till last night, when a gentleman who disclaimed being a lawyer suggested a contrary construction. Up to that time the interpretation for which I contend had never been doubted—that the Postmaster-General is authorized to contract with American steam vessels for the inland as well as the sea postage on the mail matter transported, and with a foreign vessel for the sea postage only on the mail matter transported. That interpretation makes both provisions in harmony, and carries out what has been the policy of the Government—to pay on the basis of service, as our Government has always paid except in three instances when subsidies were given.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one step further. Take section 4011 of the Revised Statutes——

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a single suggestion? Admitting that he is right as to the construction of this section, that it means the specific vessel shall receive the inland and sea postage upon the mail matter carried; admitting that in every case this rule applies under the existing law, is not the provision reported by the Committee on Appropriations a limitation on the power of expenditure?

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have occasion to look at that question in a moment. Section 4011 is in the following words:

Every contract for transporting the mail between the United States and any foreign country shall contain, besides the usual stipulation for the right of the Postmaster-General to discontinue the same, the further stipulation that it may be terminated by Congress.

What is the language of the pending bill?

The contract for said service shall be entered into by the Postmaster-General—

The language is imperative—only after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, for a term not exceeding four years.

Will gentlemen say that there is no direct and immediate repeal of the existing statute? The present law leaves the contract open to annulment either by the Postmaster-General or by Congress; the provision of this bill makes the contract a positive and subsisting contract for the period of four years.

In conclusion—for I do not wish to occupy time unnecessarily—I submit that the following changes are wrought in the existing law by the provision of this bill:

The present law fixes the compensation on the basis of the actual postal service rendered; the proposed bill pays a sum of money for the ship in transit to and from our shores and pays a definite sum per mile whether the ship carries a mail-bag or not.

The provision of the present bill changes the terms of the existing law by withholding from the Postmaster-General and from Congress the power to annul the contract, making the contract a definite, specific contract, unannullable for the period of four years.

At the same time this bill increases the amount of appropriation from the appropriation for the present year ($425,000) to $970,000, being an increase to the extent of $545,000 over the appropriation for the present year or for any preceding year. Yet it is said that the provision of the bill operates by way of limitation!

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, as he has examined this matter very fully. Can he find in the existing law anything authorizing the subsidizing of steamship lines?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing whatever. I was trying to present that point.

Mr. BAYNE. And is not this a subsidy to steamship lines?

Mr. HOLMAN. I was endeavoring to show that all our legislation now in force provides for the transportation of mails, whether foreign or inland, according to the mail matter; and this especially applies to the transportation of every foreign mail, whether by foreign or American vessels. Yet this bill proposes to pay, not on the basis of service, but on the basis of so much per mile traveled by the vessel, whether the vessel transports a mail or not. In other words, the present law rests on the basis of service rendered; the proposed law rests on the basis of an arbitrary subsidy—just that, nothing else and nothing more. In this respect there is a vital change in the principle upon which our laws now rest.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman from Indiana state how this is any more a "subsidy" than the compensation we pay to coastwise steamers, which now receive 10 cents more per mile than this bill proposes to pay to ocean steamers?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no comparison between our inland mail service——

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman from Indiana, adopting the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], calls this a "subsidy." I want either of these gentlemen to explain in what respect it is any more a "subsidy" than the compensation now paid to coastwise steamers, or the compensation paid upon star routes, or the compensation to steamboats or railroads for carrying the mails.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a subsidy, for the reason that it does not rest on the basis of the service rendered, but on the arbitrary principle of paying a given sum without reference to the extent and character of the service. I believe I have presented all the points I desired to present, and I will only further call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an increase of appropriation over former years of $545,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the point of order on the pending paragraph of the bill to the effect that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditure. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] made the further point that if there were any provisions in this paragraph which were obnoxious to the rule, that then the whole paragraph should be ruled out. In reference to that matter the Chair desires to state the authority submitted to support that view was the ruling of a previous occupant of the chair on an amendment to some pending measure. But this is the text of the bill, and it would not be contended by any gentleman if there was one clause of a bill obnoxious to the rule the Chair should therefore rule out the whole bill. The Chair would only regard such substantive clause as obnoxious to the rule as might be brought under its provisions.

The first question to be considered on this point of order is whether the pending bill changes existing law. The argument made by the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is that if section 3976 of the Revised Statutes is existing law there would be no difficulty in deciding this point. But the Chair is of the opinion, as this legislation does not take effect by its very terms until July next, that all questions as to what is existing law must be determined with reference to that time. And it appears by section 23 of what is known as the Dingley bill that that section of the Revised Statutes has been repealed to take effect on the 1st day of April next. This legislation therefore must be considered in reference to the condition of the law at the time this is to take effect.

Now, so far as this matter is concerned, the Chair will hold the existing law is the Dingley bill, and sections 4007, 4008, 4009, and 4011 of the Revised Statutes. That is, we must consider the question whether it changes existing law by comparing the pending bill with reference to the sections of the Revised Statutes which have been indicated.

Section 4007 gives an unlimited power on the part of the Postmaster-General to make contracts for carrying the mails at any price he may agree upon. Section 4009 imposes a limitation upon that power. Section 4011 contains a reservation that Congress may at any time terminate these contracts. Such a provision, if the Chair is not mistaken, applies to all leases for buildings used for post-office purposes, the Government generally reserving the right to terminate such leases at its pleasure. The Chair does not think this section is repealed or modified in any way by the pending bill; that it will be in existence if this bill is enacted into law; that all contracts made will be subject to the provisions of section 4011, which gives the Government the right to terminate these leases at any time.

That leaves only section 4009 as affected by the point of order. Prior to the passage of the Dingley bill section 4009 was modified to the effect that the payment of postage on American vessels was limited to 2 cents for each letter carried. That is the language of section 3976, which was repealed. While that was the law all American vessels were limited to 2 cents on each letter actually carried, and appropriations were made only with reference to that fact.

It does not follow, therefore, the expenses of the current year or of the past year are any criterion of what it may cost to carry the mail under the law after the 1st day of April next. The law which limited the compensation to be paid to American vessels was repealed by the twenty-third section of the Dingley bill. If Congress intended what it actually did it struck out the provision of law which limited the payment of American vessels to 2 cents a letter for letters actually carried, and left only as a substantive proposition the first paragraph of section 4009 standing, that the Postmaster-General may allow as compensation any sums not exceeding the sea and United States inland postage. What that sum is can only be determined by reference to the reports of the Postmaster-General as to the amount of sea and inland postage. And it is given here not only for the purpose of determining the amount to be appropriated, but to determine the maximum to be contracted for for that purpose. Hence the argument of the gentleman from Indiana that there would be inconsistency in appropriating the whole amount at one place and only a portion in another is not well taken, from the fact that neither of the sums is appropriated by section 4009, but are merely given as a basis upon which contracts may be made.

The Chair is therefore of the opinion under section 4009 that there is no limitation on the power of the Postmaster-General in granting compensation for carrying the mails on American ships except it does not exceed the sea and inland postage. But there is a limitation upon foreign steamships to sea postage upon the mail so transported, and that this limitation is not upon the other clause of the bill, and that that was expressly repealed by the repealing section 23 of the Dingley bill.

The Chair is, therefore, of opinion that we are to consider this pending bill with a view to that construction of this section; and it therefore appears to the Chair that the provisions to which the gentleman has called attention in this section, that the payment is to be made by actual trips, is simply a limitation on the law as it exists, and the appropriation in the bill of $600,000 of the net revenues of the Postal Department is a limitation upon the Postmaster-General as to the amount to be expended and placed at his disposal for this purpose, which the Chair regards as a limitation of his power and not an enlargement of it; and so also in regard to the number of trips, which so far as it changes existing law is a limitation of his power and to that extent retrenches expenditures.

The provisions in the two last provisos may be subject to the point of order the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] has suggested, and if insisted upon when the committee has finally disposed of this question the Chair would be compelled to hold the point well taken. In making this ruling the Chair has decided it purely as a legal question and as a legal construction of the rule and the statutes combined, and will not feel at all sensitive as to the action of the committee should an appeal be taken.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMPSON. There was so much confusion in the Hall that I could not hear the decision of the Chair upon the two last provisions of this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that it was possible, after a careful reading of the provisions, that the provisos beginning with line 243 down to and including line 252 were subject to the point of order, and if the gentleman insisted upon it the Chair would so hold.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the Chair holds the effect of the provision is either to change or repeal section 4009. Therefore, there is some law repealed, because by the very terms of the amendment it repeals all laws in conflict therewith. The Chair, however, did not mention in what manner this clause reduces expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that in so far as this limited the power of the Postmaster-General to contract for the service upon American ships to the amount of the sea and inland postage it was a limitation on his power, and to that extent operated as a retrenchment of expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this question is of so vital importance to the country that I shall most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal is upon the decision of the Chair holding this section to be in order under the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the ruling of the Chair that this provision does not repeal existing law and that it does retrench expenditures.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order I made upon this measure I regard to be of so much importance that I respectfully also appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the first appeal, that of the gentleman from Indiana; afterward the gentleman from Kentucky will be heard.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that I must make the appeal immediately, for if any intervening business is permitted I shall be deprived of the privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to take an appeal.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana for that purpose.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee. The Chair desires to ask that tellers may be appointed upon the appeal. If there be no objection the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. TUCKER. It is entirely unnecessary; and I object to the appointment of tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the question will be taken on a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 37.

Mr. HAMMOND. Tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. May not a motion be in order upon this question to order that the committee rise with a view of testing the sense of the House on the question of order raised?

The CHAIRMAN. That could only be done now by unanimous consent, as the committee is dividing.

Mr. ELLIS. I object, and demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. WASHBURN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 130, noes 45.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the pending paragraph.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make an inquiry. Do I understand that the Chair has ruled out already a certain portion of the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The two provisos at the end of the clause, beginning with line 243, down to and including line 252.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the point of order I made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana appealed from the decision of the Chair upon the whole question submitted, which embraced the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky. That having been decided, the Chair does not think a further appeal would now be in order.

Mr. THOMPSON. As I understand it the gentleman from Indiana appealed from the decision of the Chair upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana stated he appealed from the whole ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUNT. Did not the gentleman from Indiana say distinctly that he appealed from the ruling in its entirety? And was not the question so put and voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the two provisos, from line 243 to the end of the paragraph, are out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so stated at the time.

Mr. WASHBURN. That was not the understanding of it generally, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated those two provisos were substantive propositions which stood alone, and that the fact that a particular clause in a paragraph was obnoxious to the rule did not make all of the paragraph obnoxious to it; and that the Chair was only authorized to rule out such parts of the bill as were obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. HORR. It was not understood here, and it was not understood when we voted, that that was the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated it distinctly. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the paragraph. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it may be suggested that as the Dingley act repeals section 3976 of the Revised Statutes requiring American vessels to carry foreign mails at a specific rate, some provision should be made to secure the transportation of foreign mails by American vessels. I do not enter into the apprehension of gentlemen that the repeal of that section will produce any possible embarrassment to the foreign mail service. It will produce none whatever. The mails will be carried as heretofore if no additional legislation is provided—just as they have been carried for years past. While section 4009 of the Revised Statutes remains in force, as it will remain in force, no embarrassment whatever can occur to the postal service. Under that provision the Postmaster-General may contract with the American steam vessel for the transportation of mails, paying them both the inland and sea postage on the mails transported, and to foreign steamships the amount of the sea postage on the mails transported, just as is now done and has been done for many years past. Under that law under which the great body of foreign mails have been carried for years there will be no embarrassment whatever. All of the transatlantic mails are now carried under that law, and I trust no gentleman will vote in favor of the subsidy proposition now pending on the theory that otherwise some embarrassment will accrue to our foreign postal service.

There was never an imperative necessity for section 3976, the section repealed by the Dingley act. It was only enacted because certain lines of American steam vessels twenty years ago refused to carry the mails for the United States inland and sea postage and sought to compel the Government to pay exorbitant rates on the mails transported; and inasmuch as these vessels—American vessels—were deriving great benefits from their exclusive right to the coastwise trade, and that trade was always open to them and to them exclusively, it was not then regarded a hardship to require them when they sailed to foreign ports to carry the mails at reasonable rates, and the then sea postage, 2 cents on each letter, was regarded by the Postmaster-General and by Congress as a reasonable rate; hence that law of 1864 was enacted.

Mr. ELLIS. The coastwise vessels never were under the operation of the compulsory postal law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course section 3976 did not apply to the coastwise trade. My friend misapprehends. The American vessels having the exclusive right to engage in the coastwise trade, a right of immense benefit to them, it was not thought to be an unreasonable burden when they engaged in the foreign trade, with the right always to re-enter the coastwise trade, that they should be required to transport the United States mails at a reasonable rate. The right to engage at all times in either the foreign or the coastwise trade of the United States, which our laws secure to our ships exclusively, of course adds very greatly to the value of the American ship.

Mr. DINGLEY. But this does not apply to vessels in the coastwise trade.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am surely very unfortunate in this failure to express my views. I stated that in 1864 this duty to carry the American mails at reasonable rates was imposed on American ships because of the extraordinary advantages conferred on them by our laws. If they went to a foreign port they were required to carry the mail as I have mentioned, but they had the valuable right, an exclusive right, to enter at any time the coastwise trade. While we gave them the exclusive control of the coastwise trade, adding greatly to their value, there was no reason why they should not bear reasonable public burdens, or at least be subject to reasonable regulations, for the public benefit. And besides that, twenty years ago it was not deemed a great hardship by the Republican leaders in Congress that vessels enjoying the monopoly of the coastwise trade whenever they wished to enter it should be required to carry the mails and take all the postage.

Mr. HUNT. Was not the postage very high then?

Mr. HOLMAN. The sea postage was then 2 cents on each letter. That was supposed to be a reasonable rate, and is still.

But now, Mr. Chairman, to avoid the possibility of its being said we have left the postal service embarrassed, I propose that we shall revive section 3976 of the Revised Statutes and keep it in force for one year, and in the mean time, if the slightest embarrassment shall arise, some course may be adopted to relieve the foreign mail service from such embarrassment without resorting to the fatal expedient of a subsidy, and for that reason I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. Is there not pending a motion to strike out the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moved to strike out the paragraph, but he may modify his motion so as to strike out and insert. Is that the gentleman's motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out the pending paragraph and insert:

"Office of superintendent of foreign mails: For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $425,000.

"That section 3976 of the Revised Statutes, as in force on the 1st day of January, 1878, be and the same is hereby re-enacted, and the same shall continue in force for one year from and after the passage of this act."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. THOMPSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 25) to fix the date for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, have reported to the Senate that the conferees of the two Houses having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. That restores for the present exactly the existing law and the exact present state of the appropriation, and gives us until a year to consider this subject and determine what is proper to be done, without adopting the subsidy principle.

Now a word further. Up to this time, excepting four instances, the mails of the United States have been carried abroad on the basis of the service actually rendered—the mail actually transported. The pending provision of this bill abandons that principle, and, instead of providing for payment upon the basis of the postal service rendered, it provides for paying a subsidy to these vessels whether they carry the mail or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] mean to state that this pays a subsidy to a vessel whether it carries the mails or not?

Mr. HOLMAN. The vessel will carry the mail if any is furnished, but it gets the subsidy any way. If you enter into a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, that powerful organization which has been pressing this measure forward with such industry, if you permit a contract to be entered into with that corporation, which now receives $31,000 a year, it would receive under this law at least $143,000. And I submit that whether you furnished them with mails to carry or not, whether you sent your mails by their vessels or by the White Star line, still this company would receive this enormous subsidy of 50 cents per mile for every mile traveled going to China and Japan and returning.

In the past subsidies have been granted to four lines—the Collins line, the line from New York to Rio, the line to the Sandwich Islands, and the Pacific Mail Steamship line. And can any gentleman say that this country ever received any advantage, or that any other results followed from those subsidies except, so far as the latter one was concerned, national dishonor?

Sir, I am confident that no member who was on this floor only a few years ago and saw the subsidy to that corporation increased by half a million dollars can ever wish to see the like done again, can ever be willing to see the dangerous and corrupting principle of subsidy again brought under consideration in Congress. No, sir. Men came here with untarnished reputations, clothed, as it were, with the dignity and authority of representatives of the people; but, under the baneful influence which this principle of subsidy ever inspires, they left here clothed with dishonor and disgrace.

For one, I protest against entering again on this evil principle. I am willing to vote to pay, to the last dollar, the sum of money that is required to compensate these parties for the service which they render in the transportation of the mails of the United States at home and abroad; but I am not willing, in view of the past history of subsidy in this country, either land subsidy or subsidy on the pretense of postal service, to see that principle which has been so unfortunate in the past, so demoralizing in the past, so humiliating in the past, again brought forward and permitted to obtain a standing in the American Congress. And, for one, my protest will be entered now and forever against it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] allow a question for information?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. The twenty-third section of the Dingley bill repeals sections 3976 plus 4203. Why do you leave 4203 out of the amendment you have just offered?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend think it necessary to re-enact it?

Mr. HAMMOND. I think it ought to accompany the other section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I am perfectly willing that it should be added to the amendment.

Mr. HUNT was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, before my friend [Mr. HUNT] proceeds, I merely wish to say that I trust time will run as smoothly and uninterruptedly for him for eleven minutes as it has run for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] first moved to strike out the section, and addressed the committee for five minutes upon that. Then he withdrew that motion and moved to strike out and insert, and the Chair regarded that as a new proposition, which entitled him to five minutes more. That is how the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] held the floor so long.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the uncommonly warm manner in which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has addressed the committee, I am encouraged by the reflection that he has constantly spoken in a similar spirit since the Post-Office bill has been under consideration, and seldom if ever during that time without failing to carry a majority with him. The gentleman began by expressing the opinion that there would be no difficulty in existing circumstances about the carrying of the foreign mails. The fact is, we are brought to this condition, sir, that there is now no power in the Postmaster-General to compel vessels to carry the mail, as he formerly could do, and the only resource left him is to attempt to enter into contracts at rates which are likely to be declined as entirely inadequate, and which are in the judgment of the Shipping Committee contrary to sound public policy. Therefore, notwithstanding the belief of the gentleman from Indiana, I oppose to his the opinion of the Shipping Committee, which has given full, long, deliberate, and intelligent examination to this topic, and which is really the legislative author in this House of the principle which has been incorporated into the present appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what does the Shipping Committee propose? It proposes to give, out of the revenue of the Department, aggregating some $1,700,000, the sum of $600,000—a portion only of the net revenues derived from sea and inland postage—for the carriage of the mails in American steamships to foreign countries. What is the fact in this regard? When the amount of sea and inland postage was originally fixed—and nobody ought to know this better than the gentleman from Indiana, for I call all to witness the extent of his general information—when the law determining the postage in this way was adopted the rates were high, and the compensation therefore considerable. A change in the law is required by the exigency in which the Department finds itself because of the change in the rates of postage.

In the portion of my five minutes remaining I am brought now to consider what the gentleman says about subsidies.

Mr. Chairman, the object of this measure is to unify the postal system of the United States—to have the same system apply to the ocean-going mail service that applies to the service on the land. If you will look at your star-route service, your steamboat service, your coastwise service, you will find the compensation for carrying the mails will average some 57½ cents per mile.

Mr. FINDLAY. On six routes on the Pacific slope it is 66⅔ cents per mile.

Mr. HUNT. When you consider that the service on the ocean is attended with more risk, demands the investment of larger capital, and is connected necessarily with the maritime growth and glory of the country, and identified likewise with its proper naval development, has any reason been given, can any reason be suggested, why this service should be performed, as is frequently the case, at the cost of the vessels entering upon it, while at the same time the service on land is performed at the liberal rates to which I have referred?

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has drawn a vivid picture of what he says was the scene of shame here when the Brazilian mail subsidy——

Mr. HOLMAN. No, the Pacific mail.

Mr. HUNT. When the Pacific Mail subsidy was advocated and obtained some years ago. Let those blush who have occasion to do so. What have the occurrences upon that occasion to do with what Congress is doing now? After many sessions of a committee, headed by a gentleman [Mr. SLOCUM, of New York] than whom none commands greater respect in the House—after the hearing of numerous witnesses, after anxious consideration kept up ever since the opening of Congress, and after obtaining all the information that was practicable, the result of which I have spoken was reached and brought before the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS. If I can be recognized I will yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HUNT. I am much obliged to my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, and I yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, after public and honorable action of this kind, what right has the gentleman from Indiana to come here and remind us of scenes of disgrace of a former time? What right has the gentleman to tell us of corporations that are pushing their claims industriously? This committee knows nothing of any means that have been taken which were not open and fair and creditable. If it is a crime to have sought for information upon the subject before them, with the desire to develop the naval resources of the country and increase its maritime strength—if that be an offense I wish very much, and I have the right to say so from the way in which the gentleman has spoken, that the gentleman from Indiana had been a participant in it, because he would have spoken in a higher and better spirit than he has to-day.

Mr. Chairman, we have received from all parts of the country, from all well-informed men, from all persons who feel an interest in the development of the maritime strength of the country, from all who have watched the decaying power of its merchant marine, anxious representations that some little at least should be done for the purpose of reviving it. And in our effort to do so our chief regret has been that we could give only the modicum proposed by the bill under discussion in the way of compensation; for, Mr. Chairman, in the popular acceptance of the term, this is no "subsidy." You are as wrong, sir [turning to Mr. HOLMAN], as you have been persistent; you are as mistaken as you have been indefatigable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana must address the Chair.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, the fact being as I have stated, the fact being as I have endeavored to lay it before the committee, we have brought in here a bill which involves the principle of just compensation only. Is it right to give a quid pro quo? Is it right to pay a man for work and labor done? Is it right to pay your railroads for transporting the mails? Do the men who work upon the cars, do the men who build the railways, do the men who own them, do the men who carry on the mail service on land deserve to be paid or not? If they merit to be paid, do the men who own the steamships, do the men who ply the seas, do the men who bare their breasts to the storm, do the men who carry the flag at the masthead into foreign countries to tell of a prosperous, a free, and an adventurous nation—do they deserve to be left without reward for similar service upon a more dangerous element? There is but one opinion throughout the country on the subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COLLINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that he had approved and signed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 309) extending the permission granted Maj. William Ludlow by the act of February 28, 1883, to accept a civil position.

THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the repeal of the law for foreign postage provided for in the Dingley bill occurred under circumstances which did not attract the attention of the great body of this House. It came in by virtue of a conference report. It came in under the counsel of gentlemen who are anxious not so much to give just mode of compensating steamships for carrying foreign mails as for the purpose of subsidizing vessels engaged in foreign trade by giving them large sums for carrying the mails. I submit, therefore, in view of the history of these transactions that we need not stand upon technicalities.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the other day, when discussing this proposition, undertook in the general debate to illustrate its importance by calling the attention of the House to the fact that other great nations of the world were improving their commerce by giving large subsidies. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT], in his report upon this subject, likewise called attention to the great importance of improving American shipping by granting subsidies, and he cited the action of other governments. He called attention to the lines to China, Japan, and India, to France with 8,000,000 francs, to South America with 3,000,000 francs, to the Mediterranean, 4,000,000 francs, making a total of annual pay of 23,000,000 francs. Then he cites various subsidies on the part of the British Government and by the German Government. He shows but for these enormous subsidies these vessels would have to abandon their business.

Now, sir, I think we have fairly opened the question of subsidies when we come to look at the statement of these gentlemen in their reports and their arguments in favor of the Dingley bill and other measures. I say when these gentlemen have demonstrated the fact that these great steamship lines would go down but for these subsidies in foreign countries, how are we to hope to sustain the same lines in this country under more adverse circumstances? Germany does not hesitate, notwithstanding her subsidies, to go into every place on the face of the earth to buy her vessels at the cheapest rate. Great Britain did not hesitate to come to America years ago and buy the fast clippers of Baltimore; and so it has been with most of the nations of the earth. Yet under your navigation laws you are compelled to keep away from the markets of the world and use your own overprotected vessels. Then with a subsidy not equal to these foreign subsidies you seek to lure us into the thought we are likely to rebuild American shipping.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I renew it, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. If that is true, Mr. Chairman, and I think it is irresistible, then with greater subsidies than we have proposed and with our adverse navigation laws we can not hope to revive American shipping by this increase. What is it then? Is it a mere illusion in this House? Is it an admitted failure that there is not to be competition with foreign ships in this way; and, if so, what is it but simply an effort to increase the compensation of the few lines we have now in existence? It seems to me, sir, that is all there is in it.

A distinguished gentleman on this floor said to me the question of order raised on this bill or the objection was presented to him for argument on this floor—presented by the agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Now, sir, I am not here to undertake to deny gentlemen have the right to present it, but simply to illustrate what I believe to be true, that it is these few lines in existence which seek by the repeal of the shipping bill to increase the sums of money to be paid to them under our postal laws. Now, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] objects to the gentleman from Indiana saying this House should proceed cautiously in this direction. That gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was here and witnessed the scenes so memorable in connection with this Pacific Mail Steamship Company years ago. Congress, honestly, no doubt, doubtless impressed by the arguments, influenced by the persuasion perhaps of suggestions emanating from this source, did grant large sums of money in aid of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; what was the result? It resulted in scandal to the party in power. It turned not the gentleman from Indiana alone, nor any particular member of this House, but the whole American people, from that subsidy, and from that hour until now the public judgment has been adverse to it; and I trust, sir, that in the presence of the incoming administration, with the Democratic party on record whenever it has had an opportunity, standing up against this matter, whatever form it may have assumed, with that party in this House to-day and for the future to resist what I believe to be no more or less than a subsidy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The formal amendment by unanimous consent was withdrawn.

Mr. FINDLAY. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, the original question seems to be shifted. The original proposition was to strike out, but that has been superseded by the proposition to insert, and the matter to be inserted is the old compulsory feature of the system which we have abolished, to go into effect on the 1st of April. Gentlemen, therefore, ought to be met on that proposition; and the question which addresses itself to the House is whether or not they are prepared to say that an American vessel about to leave port, with the wind fair and all on board, shall not receive her clearance unless she agrees to carry the mail at 2 cents a letter or at the price fixed by the United States.

Now, I want to know by what authority that is done. It is true that the vessel goes out upon the high seas documented by the Government, but she is none the less the property, the individual property of the citizen because she is on the high seas; and none the less entitled to the protection of the Government, and just as much entitled to it as any citizen is entitled to the protection of his property on the land. Therefore, I say when the United States comes in and by the strong arm of power refuses a clearance to a vessel unless it agrees to take mail matter on board upon the terms fixed by the United States itself, it is equivalent to the taking of private property for public use without making just compensation therefor.

Mr. ELLIS. That is it exactly.

Mr. FINDLAY. So far from there being any subsidy in this thing it is simply a compensation; the payment of an honest sum for a fair and honest service. Why, sir, think of it—think of the United States going on your farm, impressing your wagons and mules to carry the mails. What difference is there between the United States saying to the farmer, I want your wagon and your horses to carry this mail of the United States, as to say to the ship-owner, you shall not leave port unless you agree to carry the mail, and carry it at the price I fix?

Mr. DINGLEY. And it only says that to the American vessel.

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, sir; it does not say it to the foreign ship-owner, thereby making a discrimination against the American vessel.

Mr. Chairman, we have been proclaiming in our State and national platforms, and discussing the question here, and every man rising up on this floor says: "Let us do something for the merchant marine of America, that America may take a step, though it be a feeble step, in the right direction." But the moment that step is taken we are met by a tide of obstruction. I confess I can not understand it.

Now, sir, I have taken an average of six of the steamboat coastwise routes on the Pacific slope, and I find that the prices paid them for mail transportation is 66⅔ cents per mile. Is that a subsidy?

Mr. MONEY. These gentlemen say it is.

Mr. FINDLAY. Yes, according to the definition of these gentlemen it is a subsidy; but these men say, "We will not carry your mails unless you pay us a fair sum for it." On the other side you say to these people, "You shall carry our mail, and it makes no difference what price we pay you." Is that fair, is it honest, is it just? I say nay.

Then again, Mr. Chairman, there is a recognized distinction between the star-route service and the steamboat coastwise service—one, I mean the steamboat coastwise service, being paid a higher rate than the star route, and why? Because it takes the risk of the seas. You go to a man and say, "Here is a mail-bag; I want you to carry it; you shall carry it, and carry it on my terms." He says, "I do not know what the contents are. I know it is valuable, because valuable things come in this way. I do not care about taking the responsibility of carrying the mail-bag." But you say, "You shall carry it; you shall not leave port unless you do; and you shall carry it at the price I fix, or practically for nothing."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is all I desire to say at present.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that we can have our mail carried on the ocean for $55,000 a year under the existing law, while the bill presented by the committee proposes to change that existing law so as to require the Government to expend about $600,000 for the same service.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not require it; that is only the limit that may be expended.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; but it will go to the extreme limit. That is what the bill is for. It is made for that purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the service is still open to competition.

Mr. MILLS. But the very bill which bears the gentleman's name, which passed through Congress, was passed for the purpose of making it possible for this subsidy to pass through Congress.

We have heard, sir, very much said about the Government taking the private property of the citizen for public use without making just compensation. Why is it in this connection we have heard nothing said in condemnation of the policy that is constantly persisted in of taking the private property of the citizen of the United States for private use without any compensation? What right have the Congress of the United States to put one hand of the Government into the pockets of its laboring people and take from them their daily earnings, thereby to build up John Roach for John Roach is the "nigger in the wood-pile" in this bill.

But perhaps there is patriotism in this bill. The mails of the United States can not be carried for $55,000 on foreign bottoms; but they must be carried in American vessels, in vessels built by American shipbuilders, carrying our colors and registry of American origin, and nobody but John Roach has the benefit of that provision of the law.

I ask if there is a gentleman on this floor who in his own private business affairs would be guilty of so squandering his revenues as to pay $600,000 for that service which he could get done for $55,000? What right have we as the public trustees of the people to put our hands into that fund that is wrung by our unjust and exorbitant system of taxation from the labor of this country and give as a bonus to Mr. Roach $600,000 for the service we can get for $55,000?

Mr. ELLIS. May I ask my friend from Texas a question?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. Why not strike out from the proposed re-enactment the 2 cents and compel the vessels to do the work for nothing? Then you will save $55,000.

Mr. MILLS. It has been asked why we compel the vessels of the United States to carry the mail and refuse them a clearance unless they do it. The Government of the United States can confer its protection and its flag upon vessels upon whatever terms it pleases, and wherever a vessel goes to sea and carries the power of this nation for its protection with it, this Government has a right to say upon what terms it will confer that power upon the vessel. It prescribes the terms upon which it shall carry its mail. And why should the Government go down on its knees and say to Mr. Roach that it will give him $600,000 as subsidy to carry the mail of the United States on American vessels when foreign bottoms will carry it and are now carrying it for $55,000?

I agree with my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] it is a bad start for a Democratic administration just ushered into power, and, after being out for twenty-four years, once more brought to the confidence of the American people, after constant condemnation of subsidies and extravagant appropriations of this kind—I say it is a bad start for that administration that, a few days before we see the President-elect taking the oath of office to support the Constitution and laws and promising a great reform to the people of the United States, this Congress should go down on their knees to John Roach and grant him a subsidy of $600,000 for carrying the mails, when they could get it done equally well for $55,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, if I get the opportunity I shall move to amend the section by striking out the limit of $600,000, so that the net revenue of our foreign mail may be placed without reduction in the hands of the Postmaster-General to use for these great objects. The net revenue last year was $1,700,000. This surely is not too much to expend for objects every way worthy, and especially dear at this time to the hearts of the American people. It is to revive American commerce and to recreate the merchant marine, of which our fathers were so proud. The sum is small compared with the last sums spent by our rivals in these great enterprises. They give all their net revenue; more, they give all their gross revenue; more, they add to it all that their treasuries will allow.

England gave last year a million and a half of dollars more than her gross receipts, making nearly five millions; France gave four and a half millions; Italy two millions; Austria one million; Spain one million; little Holland $300,000. Our great Republic gave $327,000! Are you proud of this, gentlemen of the committee? And why should we treat our foreign service so much worse than our domestic? Will members believe it? We sent our steamships the dreary width of the Pacific and paid them 2¾ cents per mile. We sent our steamships down the coast that they might deliver the mail in sight of their homes, and paid them 57 cents per mile; and if you want to carry in your minds a neat illustration of the crying injustice of this discrimination, remember that to carry the mail from Brashear to Galveston, a single night's trip, we paid a company $50,000; and at the same time we paid the vessels that carried the American flag to China, to Japan, and to Australia the munificent sum of $14,849.

If we pay 57 cents a mile to carry our mails on the coast, is 50 cents a mile too much to pay the American owner who sends his steamer half way round the globe?

England, and America, and France are struggling for the commerce of South American ports. England sells in them one hundred and twelve millions of her products; France, seventy-seven millions, and the United States, sixty-four millions. Why this anomaly? Our neighbors on this continent prefer our manners and our merchandise, but American men and American manufactures can reach them only by Liverpool. A double trip across the Atlantic is a burden which crushes even American energy and hope; and we have to see the country tributary to these ports supplied from the European market. What ought to be our home market is left for foreigners to profit by.

Non-manufacturing countries everywhere are the markets for which civilized nations compete. We can secure them only by sending our flag and our mail-bags. Trade never fails to follow the flag. Do you doubt it? Do you doubt that these are the pioneers that open the way, or that when the way is open American manufacturers can not walk profitably in it?

Look at our commerce under this medicine. Look at the countries where we have managed to secure some kind of regular or irregular communication. Since 1866 our Mexican trade has multiplied four times; our Central American trade eighteen times; and our Australian trade three times.

Our exports to Mexico were $3,700,000, now they are $14,300,000; to Central America were $120,000, now they are $2,000,000; to Australia were $3,400,000, now they are $9,600,000. And yet these are the very countries where British trade fights us with the resources of a generous government and the determination to check and destroy our competition. Last year Great Britain paid the steamships that carried her flag and mail-bags to Mexico and the West Indies $420,000; we gave $9,800. She gave for the encouragement of her trade in China and the East Indies $1,700,000; we gave $14,800. Does the American merchant have a fair chance with the British merchant? We ask that he should have some aid in this bitter competition. And my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], generally considerate and wise, strives to frighten us from giving it by raising the ghost of a subsidy. This is too bad, for the average member starts at the ghost of a subsidy as Macbeth started at the ghost of Banquo. And yet this ghost ought "to down." This is no subsidy. A subsidy is a gift without consideration. Or it is a payment so excessive as to grossly overmatch the service rendered and to become a gratuity. Here is no gift, no excessive payment, no subsidy. The provision asks only a payment scarcely adequate to the service rendered; a service vital to the interests of our manufactures and to the men they employ; a service vital to the existence of American shipping.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this provision will pass, for it is the first step in a policy which will revive our manufactures, employ our labor, and place again in the ports of the world the vessels of American merchants busied in the pursuits of peace.

[When Mr. PHELPS had spoken five minutes the hammer fell. Mr. WASHBURN was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. PHELPS, who concluded his remarks as above printed.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, unless I can have unanimous consent to limit the debate on this portion of the bill I must move that the committee rise for that purpose. My object is to reach a final vote on this bill before 5 o'clock, at which hour we are to take a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session being devoted to pension business. I therefore ask unanimous consent to limit the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. What limitation does the gentleman from Illinois propose?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Five minutes on each side. [General cries of "Oh, no!"] Well, ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] asks unanimous consent that debate on this part of the bill be limited to twenty minutes, ten minutes upon each side.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is that a proposition to limit debate on all the provisions of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; only on this paragraph and the amendments thereto.

A MEMBER. Would that cut off amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments would be in order of course, but after the expiration of the twenty minutes they would not be subject to debate. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes, ten minutes to be occupied by the friends of the paragraph and ten minutes by its opponents?

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move then that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for taking the recess this afternoon be extended from 5 o'clock till 6.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—whether it would not be in order for me to submit a motion instructing the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when it resumes the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill to strike out the pending paragraph and adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the amendment pending in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole has not reported any amendment to the House; and the Chair has no official information in regard to the status of the question in the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can not the House instruct the Committee of the Whole, like any other committee, to do a particular thing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not question the power of the House to instruct any of its committees——

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] desires to submit is to instruct the Committee of the Whole to strike out a paragraph of the pending bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks that motion would be in order. By order of the House the bill has been sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and the chairman of that committee has reported to the House that the Committee of the Whole has reached no resolution upon it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills; and pending that motion I move that debate in the Committee of the Whole upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes. On this motion I call the previous question.

Mr. HORR. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will modify his proposition——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has asked the previous question on his motion.

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote it down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in the power of the House. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of sickness.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit, as desired by the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884, a letter from the Secretary of State, with accompanying reports from the Central and South American Commissioners.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1885.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been limited to twenty minutes. Ten minutes will be allowed by the Chair to each side. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is recognized as opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not understand upon which side the gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi, as the Chair understood, rose to oppose the amendment, which is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman is in favor of the provision of the bill?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will allow one-half of the time to the gentlemen in favor of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana, and one-half to those opposed to it. The gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, the question before the committee is not only striking out the clause of the bill providing for transportation of mails on American steamships to foreign ports, but it is also to restore to the statute-book the compulsory clauses which were repealed by what is known as the Dingley bill. That is the question before us; and, sir, to effect this change in the law gentlemen have seen fit to parade before the House the unsightly specter of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and to make it again a stench in the nostrils of the public at this time. They have attempted to sully a good measure here by applying to it an epithet.

They have, sir, denominated this measure a subsidy. What is a subsidy? The meaning of a subsidy is recompense for service performed. But on account of the odious Pacific Mail Steamship job and on account of the excessive aid given to a certain railroad in the United States the word subsidy has received a technical and opprobrious meaning.

Now, sir, if it is a subsidy to pay to steamships owned by American citizens a reasonable compensation for transporting American mails, then it is a subsidy to pay those steamships which carry the mails along our coasts; then it is a subsidy to pay every steamboat on our inland waters that carries a single letter; then it is a subsidy to all our railroads; then it is a subsidy to every single star route of all the star routes which permeate the length and breadth of this land, carrying intelligence to every community in it. If one is a subsidy, Mr. Chairman, then all are subsidies. Yet, sir, with this plain fact staring us in the face, several gentlemen work themselves into a fury, and like a lot of male Cassandras are horrified over the passage of a bill as beneficent, as just, and as reasonable as this.

I recognize the fact there are men who oppose every single improvement in the mail service, and who regard expenditure of a dollar even in the right direction to be a dagger in the vitals of the country. But, sir, I am not to be intimidated from the discharge of what I conceive to be a proper public duty and public necessity by any parade of disreputable jobs in the past.

One cries out that this is John Roach, as if John Roach had in his possession the whole fleet of the United States. I inquired of the gentleman from New York, and he informed me that he had not a single line to any foreign port, except perhaps one to Havana, which is already provided for in this bill in the transportation by steamship routes, which permit them to touch at foreign ports within two hundred miles of the last port on American soil.

Now, it is not worth while for the House to misunderstand this question. It is a plain question, whether we will pay American citizens a reasonable rate of compensation for carrying our mails or not. It is also a question whether we will compel these people, under the old law repealed by the Dingley bill, to carry the mails at what may be considered no price at all. You have the testimony of more than one committee of this House that these steamers lost more money in waiting for mails than they received for their transportation—much more, sir.

I know some gentlemen here, I do not care how reasonable the amount appropriated may be—if I may be allowed to use the expression of the old play—who turn upon it "a damned disinheriting countenance." [Laughter.] They are against anything that carries improvement with it. I ask the committee to stand by what is only fair and just. Do not be frightened from a proper discharge of duty by any cry of subsidy or scandal.

Why, sir, there was not long ago a great star-route scandal, when it was reported by a committee of competent jurisdiction of this House that over $2,000,000 had been plundered from the public Treasury by men engaged in transporting the mails throughout the country by mail coaches and on horseback. Is there here any proposition now, because of that past transaction, we shall put upon the carriers of the mails by star routes the duty of carrying those mails for the compensation of the postage of the letters and other mail matter which they carry? If that were done there is not a star route within the boundaries of the United States—not one of them, sir—could be carried on to-day if they were to receive as compensation only the postage paid on the letters and other mail matter which they carry. This is a self-evident proposition which needs no argument to establish it as a fact.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is claimed and seems to be admitted that this is a proposition to pay at least $500,000 more for carrying the foreign mails than is a fair compensation, or than it will cost to carry them by continuing the service as at present, or $500,000 more than ships now running to foreign ports would charge for carrying them. What is this $500,000 for?

Mr. HORR. Who admits that?

Mr. HUNT. Who admits that? Nobody.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I can not yield for interruptions when I have only five minutes.

It is admitted, Mr. Chairman, that it only costs $55,000 now.

Mr. HORR. But you make them take it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And I think it will be found to be a fact that established lines will gladly carry the mails for $100,000 or less, probably for $50,000. Then why is $500,000 additional proposed? What is it for? For glory? Costly glory that. Who is to get the $500,000? Will it add ships to our merchant marine? Not necessarily. It is claimed that this is not a subsidy, but the argument is that it will encourage the extension of our merchant marine. The argument then is that it is a subsidy or will have the effect of a subsidy.

Now, sir, it has been well said on this floor, and it is a proposition that can not be refuted, that we can go into foreign markets with our products when we can sell them there as cheaply as other countries sell them, and not until then. I grant you if we carry goods for nothing, if we tax other industries, tax the people generally to pay for transporting them for nothing, it would be a gain to those carrying on the trade. But you would secure the same result precisely if, supposing our commodities to be 25 per cent. higher than in other countries—than the commodities of Great Britain, if you please—if you should go to the manufacturers and say: "Here, if you will send your goods to South America and take 25 per cent. less than their cost, we will make up to you its loss by a tax upon other industries." I wish to know how far we would have to extend a trade of that kind in order to enrich ourselves. Is it not evident that the more trade we have of that kind the worse we will be off? That is the economic principle involved in this proposition.

But, sir, I have always understood it to be Democratic doctrine to oppose subsidies; that subsidies, whether of land for railways, or money to special interest, were undemocratic. I believe it to be undemocratic now, and I believe to admit this proposition here would be a departure by a Democratic Congress from sound and safe Democratic principles and Democratic policy as heretofore practiced. Our steamships will go upon the seas whenever they can go there and compete successfully with foreign steamships, and they will not go until they can. If it is more profitable to invest $100,000 or $1,000,000 on shore, on the continent between the oceans than on the oceans in steamships, people will invest upon the land instead of upon the seas, and we gain nothing by attempting to force capital off the land and on the ocean by methods proposed by this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, when the point of order upon this provision of the bill was under discussion last evening I stated that no word should fall from me which would indicate my opinion as to the merits of this provision; and I say now that if I had to decide upon this question in accordance with the views which have been presented here, either in its favor or against it, I should probably take, as I have uniformly taken heretofore during my public service, strong ground against the adoption of this clause. If it were in the nature of subsidy legislation I should oppose it. The original proposition reported by the Committee on Shipping was in the nature of a subsidy, because it proposed to appropriate money from the Treasury not contributed to it by the earnings from foreign postages. The Committee on Appropriations have properly limited the amount to be expended to a sum not in excess of the actual net revenues from the sea postage. The people of this country do not wish to be taxed to build up special interests.

But, sir, the people of this country are not fools. They do not expect to rob somebody in order to put money into the public Treasury. We are a practical people. We live by our daily labor. We want to sell the products of our labor, and we usually have sense enough to find out what is the best mode of getting markets and customers. The question then presented by this measure is simply this: Do the people of the United States want to have the mail carried in American ships or do they not? If they do not want it carried in American ships, then we do not need even to re-enact the law repealed by the Dingley bill. If they do want it carried in American ships, then there must be a reasonable compensation for the service which they demand.

Now they do want it carried in American ships, there is no question of that. They do not want to pay subsidies, and they do not want to hire anybody to do something which does not pay, but they are willing to pay a fair price for that which they wish to have done for their own interest.

I hold in my hand, sir, a petition which I will send to the desk and have incorporated in my remarks, which, so far as I can see, and as will appear by the signatures, is signed by every prominent house engaged in the foreign trade in the city of New York, asking Congress to take steps to procure mail facilities between this country and foreign ports in addition to those furnished by foreign vessels.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is said that this is a departure from the policy and practice of the country. It is no such thing. The policy of this country from the foundation of the Government has been to make the Post-Office self-sustaining, not a source of profit, and to spend every dollar yielded by the Post-Office in the extension of mail facilities. The revenues of the Post-Office came from its foreign mails and from its domestic mails. This foreign mail service shows a profit of about $700,000. That profit, according to the policy heretofore pursued by the American people, ought to be expended in extending the mail facilities to foreign countries; and this bill is a proposition to extend the facilities to foreign countries and pay a fair price for the service. It does not propose to do this by the mile, as the gentleman from Indiana said. It is a limitation that the amount paid shall not exceed 50 cents a mile. The Postmaster-General is to enter into contracts on the basis of service for the carrying of the mail, but when the payments are made if they reach 50 cents a mile no more than that rate is to be paid, no matter how much the service may be. It may cost less, but it can not cost more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am an opponent of all subsidies. I listened with satisfaction or astonishment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania last night when he proclaimed a new doctrine from that State that natural laws could be counted on to regulate and would regulate the distribution of the products of human industry. That declaration from him was as unexpected as his cry yesterday of "stop thief" in regard to the extra session.

Why, sir, Pennsylvania has lived upon the pabulum of protection and subsidies for a hundred years, and she has impoverished her laborers by the doctrine of protection and the granting of subsidies. To-day in the city of Manayunk, in the neighborhood of the rich city of Philadelphia, it is reported that 10,000 people are in a state of starvation as the result of this doctrine of subsidy and protection. I am against it, and in proof of it I give notice I shall offer the following amendment:

Provided, That United States certificates of registry shall be issued for foreign-built vessels which may be purchased or owned by any citizen of the United States, and vessels so registered shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges now conferred by law on vessels built in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The amendment can be read when he again obtains the floor.

The following is the memorial referred to by Mr. HEWITT, of New York:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, merchants, manufacturers, exporters, and dealers interested in the foreign trade of the United States, do hereby set forth and petition your honorable bodies as follows:

That Congress having investigated the claims of American ship-owners to be relieved from the oppressive statutory enactments of a past age, which required them to carry and deliver the United States mails without any adequate compensation, and having enacted that such compulsory service shall cease on April 1, 1885, it becomes necessary, in order to prevent the commercial interests of the United States from lapsing into confusion and suffering loss, especially in connection with the countries of Central and South America, Cuba and the West Indies, Mexico, China, Japan, Australia, &c., that requisite legislation shall be effected without delay by which the Postmaster-General shall be given the competent authority to arrange for the regular and careful transportation of the mails to those and any or all other countries.

We, the undersigned merchants and others, do therefore earnestly petition your honorable bodies to give heed to this vital and important interest, so that the commerce of the United States, especially in the countries designated, may not suffer derangement and damage in its competition with other manufacturing countries, by an infrequent, irregular, and irresponsible mail connection.

Dated January 5, 1885.

Mr. BAYNE. I am a little surprised that in this debate we have not seen a constitutional specter raised; but none has been presented. On most occasions of this kind it would have arisen, and it would have been attempted to show that to give a subsidy to a steamship line was a violation of the Constitution, and that Congress had no right to appropriate money for any such purpose as that.

I am a little surprised, also, as has already been said, that the Democratic party should start out in this way, having seventy of a majority in the present House of Representatives, and seek to inaugurate the Democratic assumption of the control of this Government by the granting of what is and can not be held to be other than a subsidy. No man who knows the meaning of words in my opinion can characterize this provision by any other name. It gives for certain services done more than an equivalent for those services; and in so far as it pays more than may be necessary to pay for the actual service rendered it is a gift and bounty on the part of this Government, and therefore is a subsidy.

And who are benefited by this? Largely the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. And what is the Pacific Mail Steamship Company? It is said that American shipping is suffering. Suffering how? Why the Pacific Mail Steamship Company last year had earnings amounting to $4,780,000, and its net profits were $1,393,000; and yet if you carry out the provisions of this bill you will pay that steamship company $312,000, when that company now renders the service which would be commanded by this bill for $23,000. And yet gentlemen say this is not a subsidy.

Mr. HORR. How large is the capital of the company?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not care what its capital is.

Mr. HORR. Oh!

Mr. BAYNE. Wait. I have the floor. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company declared quarterly dividends of 5 per cent. or 20 per cent. per annum last year. So the amount of its capital has nothing to do with it.

But why is it we find the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] who has just taken his seat and various other gentlemen here arguing this case and insisting on this appropriation to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company? We find among the directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company Jay Gould, of New York; Russell Sage, of New York; Sidney Dillon, of New York; C. P. Huntington, of New York now. And that is the influence that lies back of the promotion of this scheme to wring a subsidy out of this Government, and the Democratic party stands sponsor for the attempt to take out of the national Treasury this money for that purpose, and it shall be held responsible before the country for that act.

But who are these men you are befriending? Why, sir, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] led in a fight to prevent railroad discriminations, and he got his bill through the House after a struggle in which I heartily sympathize. Yet these very men having control of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company are directors also, some of them, in the Pacific railroad companies, and these pay to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company $95,000 per month to keep their rates up so that the steamship company will not enter into competition with the Pacific railroad companies. These are the gentlemen that are to be benefited by this legislation; and you are going to pay $312,000 to this corporation for doing a service which you now get done for $23,000 a year. They say it is not a subsidy. It is not only a subsidy, but it will not aid American shipping. It will only aid a prosperous company controlled in the interest of the transcontinental railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. Just one second more. Sir William Hamilton, one of England's greatest writers, says: "Words are the counters of the wise and the coin of fools." Make that application when you deny that this is a subsidy.

Mr. HOLMAN. That the vote may be taken directly on the proposition to strike out the paragraph I will withdraw the motion to insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to modify his motion. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his motion to strike out and insert, and moves to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out, there were—ayes 95, noes 77.

Mr. ELLIS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HORR were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers made their report.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the tellers report 105 in the affirmative and 97 in the negative. The ayes have it, the motion is agreed to, and the section is stricken out. [Applause.]

Mr. HORR. I give notice I will ask for a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

The Clerk read section 3 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That a special stamp of the face valuation of 10 cents may be provided and issued, whenever deemed advisable or expedient, in such form and bearing such device as may meet the approval of the Postmaster-General, which, when attached to a letter, in addition to the lawful postage thereon, the delivery of which is to be at a free-delivery office, or at any city, town, or village containing a population of 4,000 or over, according to the last Federal census, shall be regarded as entitling such letter to immediate delivery within the carrier limit of any free-delivery office which may be designated by the Postmaster-General as a special-delivery office, or within one mile of the post-office at any other office coming within the provisions of this section which may in like manner be designated as a special-delivery office.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order on that section that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures, and hence is obnoxious to the point of order?

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will make the point of order so as to apply also to the subsequent section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. To what section is the point of order made?

The CHAIRMAN. It is made to section 3.

Mr. BAYNE. The next section is subject to the same point of order, and I ask unanimous consent that the two be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain a point of order on a section of the bill that has not been read.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that section 4 be also read. It is part of the same scheme.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the committee may consider sections 3 and 4 together, and that the point of order shall be considered as applying to both. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think we had better have a decision on the point of order as made on the third section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will allow the point of order to apply to both sections as a matter of convenience.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion, on a casual examination, that section 3 is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is a good deal of confusion. I did not hear what was the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to debate the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear any argument on the subject. It seems to the Chair very clear that the section is new legislation, and it does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. ROWELL. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROWELL. In considering the point of order does the Chair take into consideration the last section of the bill, which provides a limit to the compensation to be paid to the parties employed to deliver the mail, the limit being 80 per cent. of the face value of the stamps?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not considered any section except the one before the committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the Chair will indulge me, I will say my desire is that the bill shall not be loaded down with extraneous legislation. This may be a very good provision, but I do not wish to have it forced on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to say that this bill contains other new legislation besides that against which the point of order has been raised and which would have been obnoxious to the point of order? I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, in the interest of the new legislation which he has not thus far objected to, to withdraw his point of order on this——

The CHAIRMAN. All discussion is out of order; there is nothing before the committee unless some gentleman desires to appeal from the decision of the Chair. If not, the Clerk will read the next section of the bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to an important point in connection with this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear any argument.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the point, with his permission.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order. The Chair is very clear about it; and, unless an appeal is taken, he does not think that the progress of the bill ought to be delayed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. This point of order, as I understand, goes to all these sections.

The CHAIRMAN. This point of order has been made only on the section that has been read.

Mr. CANNON. Then I reserve my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read section 4.

The Clerk read the section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That such specially stamped letters shall be delivered from 7 o'clock ante meridian up to 12 o'clock midnight at offices designated by the Postmaster-General under section 3 of this act.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the same point of order on that.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I not debate that point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The section is of the same character as the other. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] that there can be scarcely any question upon the point of order.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. But, I think, Mr. Chairman, there is a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Very well. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to clause 3 of Rule XXI which, after specifying what amendments may not be made to appropriation bills, says further:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, anything retrenches expenditures which helps to pay expenses, and that is precisely what this legislation does. According to one of the sections here this bill provides that, in addition to the regular postage upon a letter, a 10-cent stamp shall be added, and that there shall not be paid to any messenger for this delivery-service to exceed 8 cents out of that 10 cents, leaving 2 cents out of the 10 to pay the expenses of the work, aside from the matter of ordinary postage.

And, if I may be allowed, I will add against this point of order that these provisions of the bill come to this House upon the recommendation not alone of one committee but of two committees of the House, the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Further than that, it has also the unqualified approval of the Post-Office Department, and is of such importance that it was recognized in the last message of the Chief Magistrate of the Union. Now, sir, if a point of order which has been withheld from other good legislation in this bill can stand against the recommendation thus made with reference to these provisions of this bill, then I have nothing more to offer except to urge the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In response to what has been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] concerning the merits of the two sections in the bill that succeed the one now under consideration, I have nothing to say, because they are not now under discussion. That this section is obnoxious to the rule requires but inspection to determine. So far as withdrawing the point of order is concerned, if I may be permitted to respond to that suggestion, I will also state to the gentleman that these provisions may be very good in their way—I do not attempt to adjudicate that question; but this bill is loaded down to the guards with general legislation, and when that legislation is designed to increase by hundreds and by thousands the officers or employés of the Government, then I think that if that is to be done at all it ought to be done in an independent measure, and not in such a way as to force us either to vote against an appropriation bill or else to vote for a proposition which, to say the least, is experimental. [Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, one word. I am astonished that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] should have sat here in his seat during this entire debate and permitted legislation to go on which is not one-tenth part as much in the interest of the people as this is, and should never raise his voice in objection to it and yet should object to this. Any man who will examine this special delivery question will wonder that the system has not been adopted before in this country—will wonder that it was not adopted twenty years ago. It carries with it nothing but benefits for the people. It pays for itself, and produces a surplus; that is secured by the very nature and wording of these provisions of the bill; and although I agree with the Chair that it may be obnoxious to the letter of the rule, yet I am surprised that any gentleman should here oppose ingrafting upon this bill a measure which simply permits people to send their letters direct by paying for the privilege.

The gentleman talks about this legislation increasing the number of the officers of the Government. Did he ever hear of a telegraph company dismissing all its messengers because it required a large number of boys to do the work?

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit, the point I made was this, that on a general appropriation bill we ought not, without absolute necessity, to increase by hundreds or by thousands the employés of the Government.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply increases the number of the boys who will deliver these letters. The number would be very large; there is no doubt of that; but the service would be paid for by the parties sending the letters. If the gentleman sees fit to insist upon the point of order, of course he can strike this measure out of the bill; but I do say to him that in doing that he commits an injury upon the people of this country and upon the postal service of the country which I believe he himself, when he reflects upon it, will regret. Indeed, I am quite confident that the gentleman has not examined this provision with any care, because I believe that if he had done so he would not oppose it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is in error; I have given it careful examination. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I send up to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman wait a moment? There is a point of order now pending, and the committee has not yet disposed of the sections that succeed section 3.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want this amendment to come in after section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed on section 4, and has ruled that out. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That to provide for the immediate delivery of letters bearing the special stamp, the postmaster at any office which may come within the provisions of this act may, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, employ such person or persons as may actually be required for such service, who, upon the delivery of such letter, will procure a receipt from the party addressed, or some one authorized to receive it, in a book to be furnished for the purpose, which shall, when not in use, be kept in the post-office, and at all times subject to examination by an inspector of the Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the same point of order on this section as on the preceding one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order upon this section, as he must also do upon the succeeding one. He regrets very much the necessity of doing so, because on the merits of these provisions he agrees fully with the gentleman from Michigan. If there be no objection the next section will be ruled out without being read. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND obtained the floor.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. We did not hear what became of section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. It was ruled out, being part of the same subject-matter as the sections immediately preceding.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend by inserting the provision I send to the desk as a new section, to come in immediately after section 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That a special stamp of the valuation of 10 cents may be provided and issued, whenever deemed advisable or expedient, in such form and bearing such device as may meet the approval of the Postmaster-General, which, when attached to a letter, in addition to the lawful postage thereon, the delivery of which is to be at a free-delivery office, or at any city, town, or village containing a population of 4,000 or over, according to the last Federal census, shall be regarded as entitling such letter to immediate delivery within the carrier limit of any free-delivery office which may be designed by the Postmaster-General as a special-delivery office, or within one mile of the post-office at any other office coming within the provisions of this section which may in like manner be designated as a special-delivery office. And that such specially stamped letters shall be delivered from 7 o'clock ante meridian up to 12 o'clock midnight at offices designated by the Postmaster-General under section 3 of this act. And that to provide for the immediate delivery of letters bearing the special stamp, the postmaster at any office which may come within the provisions of this act may, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, employ such person or persons as may actually be required for such service, who, upon the delivery of such letter, will procure a receipt from the party addressed, or some one authorized to receive it, in a book to be furnished for the purpose, which shall, when not in use, be kept in the post-office, and at all times subject to examination by an inspector of the Department. And that to provide for the payment of such persons as may be employed for this service, the postmaster at any office designated by this section shall keep a record of the number of letters received at such office bearing such special stamp, which number shall correspond with the number entered in the receipt-books heretofore specified; and at the end of each month he may pay to such person or persons employed a sum not exceeding 75 per cent. of the face value of all such stamps received and recorded during that month: Provided, That in no case shall the compensation so paid to any one person exceed $30 per month: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall in any way interfere with the prompt delivery of letters as now provided by law or regulation of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendment just read is subject to two points of order: First, that it changes existing law, while it does not retrench expenditures; second, that it is the substance of another bill pending before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the proposition I have just submitted is substantially the same as sections 3 to 6 of the printed bill. I have, however, incorporated those sections in a single proposition; and I do not believe that this proposition as an entirety is subject to the point of order.

This proposition, if adopted, will not cost the Government one dime; in reality it will increase the receipts of the Government. The compensation of the messengers whom it is proposed to employ will come exclusively out of the money received from the sale of the special stamps provided for; and I feel very confident that instead of increasing expenditures the measure will reduce expenses.

This proposition, Mr. Chairman, has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Appropriations; its adoption will be a matter of very great convenience to the people, and I certainly hope, even if it be subject to a point of order, that no one will urge the point. I do not believe, however, that as an entirety it is obnoxious to the point of order, because the last clause of the proposition clearly confines the compensation of these messengers to the receipts from the sale of these special stamps. Besides, one-fourth of the amount thus received is to be retained by the Government and will be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, obtained the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Indiana will allow me to say that this proposition is identical with the provisions just ruled out by the Chair on a point of order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Except that in this the amount to be paid to the special carrier is changed from 80 per cent. to 75 per cent. of the money which may be received from the sale of these stamps. That is the only change.

I presume it will be conceded by every gentleman of this committee that this provision changes existing law. The next question then is, whether it reduces expenditures. Now, if all the expense growing out of this system were simply the payment of these special messengers, it would be true that the measure is in the direction of economy. But is that the whole expense? The proposition certainly involves, in the first place, the necessity of procuring additional stamps—stamps of a special character. This will cost something, as a matter of course. The printing of additional stamps must involve that much additional expense.

Mr. HORR. I know the gentleman from Indiana does not wish to be unfair; and he will allow me to ask whether it will cost any more to print these 10-cent stamps than to print any other kind of stamps that might be placed upon letters?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I presume it would not.

Mr. HORR. Then where is the increase of expense?

Mr. BLOUNT. The increase arises from the fact that the money received from the sale of these stamps is to go toward paying a new and special class of employés. There is the additional expense.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is insisted I am mistaken in supposing that the printing of these special stamps will involve an additional expense. Suppose I am mistaken on that point; certainly this measure will involve the necessity of creating a separate accounting department in the Post-Office—a separate bureau in which to keep an account of the receipts and expenditures of this service. There can be no question in regard to that.

It also creates, though I have no objection to that, so many additional officers, whose salaries are to be paid, and these entail, of course, the necessity of additional accounts in the Department. In the nature of things this provision will increase—I can not tell to what amount—the expenditures of the Post-Office Department.

Now, possibly at the end of the fiscal year it may be developed that money has been made by the Government through the operations of this system. That may be true, but it certainly does not appear on the face of the provision itself.

If I understand the rule, it must appear either upon the face of the proposition itself or upon the face of the proposition taken in connection with existing provisions of law that it is in the direction of economy—that it does retrench expenditure of money. No member of the committee can by any computation tell whether this system is to cost more or less. It can not be told by any sort of computation, and we will never know what the result of the system will be until we have tested it in practical operation. If it is not apparent that it is in the direction of economy, if we can not tell from the nature of the proposition itself, then it is obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. ELLWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the argument of gentlemen themselves show conclusively there will be as the result of this measure a large balance of profit in favor of the Government of the United States. It will not only retain 20 per cent., but also all over $30 per month to any one person. Now, does any man here believe in an enterprise of this kind in offices where the system shall be established will not give more than $100 per month? Are we to stand here, therefore, and allow those who live outside cities to be ruled out on technical points from any advantage under this Government, even when we propose to pay for it? So far from any loss accruing it must be evident to all gentlemen that this Government will receive increased revenue by the adoption of this provision of law. It is provided that in no case shall the compensation paid for any one person exceed $30 per month. Now there is no doubt in my mind the income arising under this law will amount to three or four times that sum. I hope therefore the provision will meet with the favor of the two Houses.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the interest of the passage of this Post-Office appropriation bill I should like to have the Chair rule on this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. When section 3 of the bill was reached the point of order was made on it. At that time there was nothing before the Chair but that section. The Chair could not know, because the other sections had not been read, what they contained. It seems this subsequent section materially changed the proposition. As there is some doubt in the matter, and as the Chair has not had time to consider it, he will submit it to the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the Chair has any doubt about it, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. At the request of many of those around me I withdraw the point of order, and will let the House vote on it. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois I will withdraw my point of order to the original proposition instead of to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the point of order will be withdrawn and the text of the bill will stand.

Is there objection to allowing the original text of the bill to stand?

Mr. HAMMOND. To that I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think the gentleman objected in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the objection at the time.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Georgia was up. I know the fact. I do not know what he was up for, but I know he was up. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his objection?

Mr. HAMMOND. I made objection to this measure because I thought I had a good one. I desire to state the reasons for it, and then I will withdraw my objection, and if no gentleman thinks my reasons are good the proposition will go without objection.

In order under this bill to pay these carriers $30 per month, saying nothing in the world of the cost of books and all the other incidental expenses that occur, there must be delivered 1,500 letters per month at night in all these towns of 4,000 inhabitants to be affected thereby. There is not one in every twenty of them that will have the 1,500 letters. The gentleman interrupts me to say, "Then they will not pay anything." He interrupts me again to say, "Only what they get."

Now, if the gentleman will wait I will finish my sentence. The effect of it is that you will have thousands of officers employed all over the country and the report will be that they get no compensation, and Congress will pay them out of the Treasury.

A MEMBER. They are only boys.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, only boys, and because they are boys you pay them. Appeals will come up that these barefooted boys, after wading through the snow and ice to deliver these letters are not compensated, and you will pay them in spite of the bill now before us.

But, sir, I want to state another objection that is peculiarly personal. I think it is a direct attack upon the Democratic Congress. [Laughter.] It is a well-known fact that we are receiving letters by the peck that every writer understands to be extremely important. I am in the habit when I leave Congress of going to bed at 10 o'clock at night and trying to recruit for the next service here; and am I to be waked up every night and my slumbers disturbed by these night-letters? [Laughter.] It is a personal attack upon my comfort. [Renewed laughter.] Now I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee, unanimous consent having been given that the text of the bill from section 3 to the end shall remain as it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment, if I can ask unanimous consent to go back in the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will it not come in at the end of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well. I will offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. For the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General: For transportation of foreign mails, including the railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $425,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask for the present unanimous consent to substitute the $425,000 for the $370,000 appropriation on page 10 of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to recur to the tenth page of the bill to strike out $370,000 and insert $425,000 with the provision he has annexed.

Mr. HORR. Is this to take the place of that provision?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment may assume the form of the amendment at page 10, lines 226 and 227, instead of incorporating it in the bill as an additional section.

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless the Chair will rule that I may have the privilege to return to this paragraph, I shall not insist upon the amendment here, but will offer it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it in the House before the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MONEY. I asked my friend to change the language. As it stands now there is not a cent here provided for American steamships.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am trying to correct that, but the gentleman from Louisiana objects. Therefore, for the present, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I propose an amendment to come in at the end of the last section of the bill as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Postmaster-General be directed to instruct his subordinates to publish on the foreign bulletin boards in the corridor of the post-office building in the city of New York the news of the sighting or arrival of foreign mail steamers, to the end that the public shall have such news in advance, and provided also that no cost or charge to the Government shall be incurred in consequence of such instructions.

Mr. HORR. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I want to make one statement. In making some remarks upon this bill I was in error in saying that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company divided a quarterly dividend of 5 per cent. and 20 per cent. per annum. It should have been 5 per cent. yearly, instead of 5 per cent. quarterly. I desire to make that correction, not wishing to make any mistake in a statement of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask unanimous consent in behalf of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] to print additional remarks on this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent also for the same purpose.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There were one or two points passed over in the bill, and I ask now that we return to them, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. BINGHAM. After consultation with the gentlemen who have charge of this bill, I withdraw my former amendment and submit what I send to the desk in lieu thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will state that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been submitted to the members of the committee and they are well satisfied with it. It merely makes uniform the charge in weight of letter-postage.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 192, after the word "thereof," insert:

"And drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices; and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where their delivery by carrier is not established."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I have waited for two or three days to make some remarks upon the reduction of postage upon letters to 1 cent. I should like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor and will be recognized as speaking to the present amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. There is no tax imposed upon the American people so iniquitous, so burdensome, so outrageous as that under the 2-cent postage law. The working people of these United States are compelled to pay twice as much on their letters as is required to pay the expense of conveying them. No man dares to deny, no man does deny, that the first-class letter matter to-day pays double the expense of its transportation. Other matters are crowded into the mails, and the people who send the letters have to pay the tax for sending other materials.

We have the franking privilege, which conveys great masses of documents all over the country free. We have the penalty envelopes lying by the thousand around in every Department. I do not know but the constables of the city of Washington have these penalty envelopes. The city department has, the Treasury Department has. And not content with the Treasury Department having them, every bureau has these penalty envelopes; and it was charged by a distinguished subordinate of one of these Departments of the Government that the chief of the Department employed them for his private use. They are lying loose around everywhere.

Then we have this immense conveyance of matter in the mail by hundreds of millions of pounds crowding down the paying portion of the people that pay for the carriage of the letters that are written for private correspondence; and yet we have this Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in place of making any provision to rectify these evils coming in here to allow newspapers to the weight of four ounces to go for 1 cent. What was the use of this? Simply to allow persons to send a paper instead of a letter because they can avoid the postage and put marks inside the papers. The post-offices of the country are crowded with this useless matter.

Then we have a proposition to cut down the postage on the matters sent out from the great newspaper establishments, which go by hundreds of tons to one-half the price. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I have not trespassed upon the time of this committee. I have a proposition that should stop all legislation until this iniquity is remedied. Let me illustrate it in this way: Cyrus W. Field with his newspapers goes to a post-office with one pound of them and tells the postmaster to convey that to California for 2 cents. You propose in future to let him have it conveyed for 1 cent. A poor widow who lost her son in the rebellion and has a daughter in California, wants to write her daughter some family news and she has to pay her 2 cents for one-half ounce. You propose in this bill to allow Jay Gould and Cyrus W. Field and all the millionaires, all the monopolists of this country, to convey a pound of mail matter for 1 cent, while this poor widow has to state all her fears and hopes, her joys and sorrows, in a letter weighing half an ounce, and the United States asks 2 cents for conveying that.

Jay Gould and Cyrus W. Field meanwhile have full swing and have their mail matter conveyed at 1 cent, and the Congress of the United States denies to the poor widow the privilege of sending her half-ounce for 1 cent.

I move to strike out the words "2 cents," wherever they occur, and insert "1 cent."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. HORR. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HORR. I want to know whether it will be possible in the House to make an amendment? Suppose the House, by a yea-and-nay vote, should still strike out the provision for the transportation of the mails in United States ships, which has gone out of the bill in committee, so that there is not a dollar in it for that purpose, can not that be corrected in the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that unless the previous question should be ordered in the House, so as to cut off all amendments, the bill will be there open to amendment just the same as here. It will depend entirely on the previous question being ordered.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] submits an amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] made the point of order on the amendment to the amendment. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I ask permission to extend my remarks as they will appear in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That amendment is accepted by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GEORGE D. WISE] is also recognized to offer the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"And provided further, That the rate of postage on second-class publications deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by the carriers of the office, shall be uniform at 1 cent for each pound, or fraction thereof."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I must make the point of order on that amendment; it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. I send to the desk an amendment to come in after line 28.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi was entitled by unanimous consent to return to this part of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 28, page 2, insert the following:

"And postmasters are authorized, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, to assign at any time any clerk or employé of their respective post-offices to duty in any branch thereof: Provided always, That any employé shall be paid from money-order funds for such time as he is engaged in money-order work."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report this bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, had agreed to sundry amendments thereto, and had instructed him to report the bill as amended back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the bill and amendments; but before doing that I yield a moment to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 224, 225, 226, and 227, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $425,000."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon ordering the previous question upon the bill and the amendments, including the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the question be taken first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] or on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the vote of the House upon ordering the previous question upon the bill with the amendments pending, including the one just offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question on that amendment would come when we reach the section to which the amendment applies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that this bill is to be considered by sections in the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendments be reported in their order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is right. The Clerk will report the amendments in their order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, as the previous question has been ordered, I think it would be well to let the recess begin at this time, and to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, we can call the yeas and nays on these amendments and on the bill. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moves that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, with the understanding that the vote upon the bill and the amendments shall be taken to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the scope of Friday evening's session be enlarged, so that bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary for the removal of political disabilities, as well as Senate bills for the same purpose, on the Speaker's table, may be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no objection be made, the Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if that requires unanimous consent I shall object. I do not want the Speaker of the House to have any power to come here and get us into Committee of the Whole to consider bills generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Chair is assuming no authority to enlarge the order of the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has moved that the scope of the night session be enlarged.

Mr. TUCKER (to Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania). It is for the consideration of bills removing political disabilities.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, if it only for that I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the order will be made in accordance with the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. PRICE objected, but immediately withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

LEAVE TO PRINT A BILL AND REPORT.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, obtained an order to print the bill (H. R. 6864) and the accompanying report No. 1436 touching the establishment of a postal telegraph system.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, and United States post-office, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices at Erie, Pa., and making an additional appropriation therefor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the House takes a recess the Chair will announce that at the session this evening the gentleman from New York, Mr. BAGLEY, will occupy the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

By unanimous consent, it is ordered that the recess shall now begin, and the House will meet at 8 o'clock this evening, according to its previous order.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. BAGLEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the orders defining the business for this evening's session.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, the special order for Friday evening sessions for consideration of bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions was amended so as to include bills for the removal of political disabilities reported by the Judiciary Committee and Senate bills on the Speaker's table for the removal of political disabilities.

NATHAN J. SHARP.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 6816) for the relief of Nathan S. Sharp.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up and the amendment of the Senate, to add to the bill the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving," was concurred in.

JAMES BEDELL, SR.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, the bill (S. 2327) for the relief of James Bedell, sr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JESSE S. HARROLD.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Harrold; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDGAR L. DUTTON.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1790) granting an increase of pension to Edgar L. Dutton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NEWTON J. BURRIS.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1655) granting a pension to Newton J. Burris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. FRANCES L. THOMAS.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2547) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SUSAN WOOLLEY.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6782) granting a pension to Susan Woolley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EUGENE O'SULLIVAN.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. CHARLOTTE HACKETT.

Mr. BAGLEY (by Mr. MORRILL) reported back favorably from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill (S. 1416) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Hackett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALBERT HARPER.

Mr. BAGLEY (by Mr. MORRILL) also reported back favorably from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill (H. R. 8090) granting a pension to Albert Harper; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID SEARS.

Mr. BAGLEY (by Mr. MORRILL) also reported back with amendments from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill (H. R. 8091) granting a pension to David Sears; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES L. ALDEN.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6960) for the relief of Charles L. Alden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES M'CALLEN.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ISABELLA HIGGINS.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM STANSBURY.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7993) for the relief of William Stansbury; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. LUCY PARR.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Parr; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHRISTIAN ARNDT.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7992) for the relief of Christian Arndt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MRS. KATE A. DRUMMOND.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2231) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate A. Drummond; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SYDNEY L. SKAGGS.

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1268) for the relief of Sydney L. Skaggs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JULIA T. SCOTT.

Mr. STRUBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 526) granting a pension of $50 a month, to be paid out of the naval pension fund, to Julia T. Scott, widow of Gustavus Scott, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, and over forty-six years in active service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BEAN.

Mr. STRUBLE, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LINA J. STEARNS.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARGARET FLAHERTY.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PATRICK FURLONG.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to Patrick Furlong; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ISABELLA TURNER.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN SNYDER.

Mr. WINANS, of Michigan, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 7718) restoring to the pension-roll the name of John Snyder; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORIN R. M'DANIEL.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1546) granting a pension to Orin R. McDaniel; which was referred to the Committeee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CYRUS REESER.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (S. 2398) granting a pension to Cyrus Reeser; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. H. GILLEY.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to William H. H. Gilley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID T. HOOVER.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to David T. Hoover; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

E. P. ALEXANDER.

Mr. REESE. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2139) to remove the political disabilities of E. P. Alexander, of Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. (two-thirds of each House concurring), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon E. P. Alexander, of the State of Georgia, be, and the same are hereby, removed.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest that class of bills be laid over until we get through with the pension bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that by unanimous consent permission was given to consider these disability bills this evening. Therefore it would be necessary to have a vote at least.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest the propriety of laying them aside until we get through with the pension bills.

Mr. MATSON. This bill is on the Speaker's table and must be considered in the House, while the pension bills are in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. There are only two or three of them, as I understand.

Mr. PRICE. At the suggestion of friends around me I withdraw my objection. I wish, however, to put on record that this evening I made a clear and distinct objection when unanimous consent was asked, and that objection was never withdrawn, and therefore the order to which the Chair refers could not have been legally made.

Mr. CULLEN. If there are many bills of this character they are likely to take up the whole time of this evening session.

Mr. MATSON. There are two of them in the House and the remainder in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I do not think there can be any objection to taking them up and passing them, as they will take but little time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that under the order of the House it is entirely competent to consider this case.

Mr. CULLEN. I only desire to say that if the most of the time of this evening session is to be taken up by this class of business I must interpose an objection. I am not in favor of monopolizing the session of this evening with bills of such a character.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ALBERT IVERSON.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2034) to remove the political disabilities of Albert Iverson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. (two-thirds of each House concurring), That Albert Iverson, of the State of Florida, is hereby relieved of all political disabilities imposed on him by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HOLMES. I should like to hear the report in this case read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a Senate bill, and there is no report accompanying it, as it is taken up from the Speaker's table.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. This bill has been considered also by the Judiciary Committee of the House, who reported favorably upon it and recommended its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order fixing the regular mode of business be dispensed with, so that the Chair may recognize members on each side of the House alternately to call up bills for consideration. My reason for making this request is that there are perhaps half a dozen bills on the Calendar which will provoke discussion; and since members have not come here to press them, I think it is proper that those gentlemen who are present should have the privilege of calling up their bills. I ask this, therefore, as a favor to the gentlemen who are here to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

EUGENE O'SULLIVAN.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to call up the bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Infantry, at the rate of $18 per month.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out in the last line "$18 per month" and insert "the pension allowed in the case of amputation of a leg above the knee." This pension to be in lieu of any other pension now allowed to said soldier.

Mr. MORRILL. I will make a brief statement in reference to this bill which I think will be satisfactory. This applicant was injured in Mississippi, I think, by being thrown from his horse, and was then placed upon the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month.

He served for a few months after his injury was received, but was so much disabled that finally he was discharged from the service on account of his disability, one leg being two or three inches shorter than the other. He was employed in the quartermaster's department in Louisville, and while on a load of quartermaster's goods the horses became frightened, ran away, and he was thrown from the wagon, when a barrel of pork rolled on him, breaking the leg that had been injured in such a way as to necessitate amputation of the leg above the knee.

Of course he could not be pensioned under the general law, because at the time he had been mustered out and was then in the employ of the Quartermaster's Department. He was, however, on the pension-roll for the previous disability, and this places him on the pension-roll for the loss of the leg.

I will say further, that this bill passed the Senate and has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Pensions of the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Was he performing military duty at the time he received the last injury?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at the time he received the last injury. He had been a soldier, and was injured so that he could not take care of himself at the time the second accident happened; and not being able to get out of the way was permanently disabled, as stated.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. You attribute his injury in the latter case to the disability arising from the original injury?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA W. THORNBURGH.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to Eliza W. Thornburgh, widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza W. Thornburgh, widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the Fourth Regiment of Infantry, United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out, in line 7, the word "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so that it will read "$30 per month."

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I propose to amend this bill by moving to strike out "thirty," the committee being divided upon that subject, and move to insert "twenty," the amount fixed in the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the question will be first taken on the amendment submitted by the committee. Of course if that is voted down the bill will be placed upon its passage as originally reported.

Mr. BAYNE. But the amendment of the committee can be amended.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment of the committee is not agreed to the bill will be before the House as originally presented, which now contains the amount the gentleman proposes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Since there is a divided opinion in this case, I ask if there is a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. WOLFORD. There is.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think we should have the report read before being called upon to vote upon the amendment.

The report (by Mr. WOLFORD) is as follows:

That her late husband, Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, had a military record that would be a credit to any officer fifteen years in the Army, doing active, laborious, and dangerous duty. He acquired a reputation truly enviable early in the war with the seceding States.

When a boy he volunteered as a private in the Sixth Tennessee Infantry, was in the battle of Stone River and in several other engagements, in which he won distinction, and for his good conduct and great gallantry he was commissioned captain, and as captain his fine judgment and superior intelligence attracted the attention of his commanding officers, and he was made adjutant-general and placed on General Spears's staff. After this he was admitted as a cadet in the Military Academy at West Point, and graduated with distinction on the 17th of June, 1867, and was appointed second lieutenant, Second Artillery, and for his good conduct and efficiency he was promoted to first lieutenant, Second Artillery, April 21, 1870.

Served as professor of military science at East Tennessee University.

He was appointed paymaster of the United States Army with the rank of major, which office he filled with credit, being honest, industrious, and faithful.

On May 23, 1878, he was transferred to the line as major of the Fourth Infantry at his own request, and placed in command at Fort Fred Steele, and was killed at the head of his command at the crossing of Milk Creek while under orders. He was en route from Fort Fred Steele to the agency of the White River Utes with a command of four companies to protect their agent and to preserve order among them. He had orders not to attack, but he was attacked by the Utes in overwhelming numbers. In defense of his command he made one of the most gallant charges ever recorded in the annals of war.

General Crook, in General Orders No. 23, uses this language:

"As an officer, Major Thornburgh was active, ambitious, and actuated by a high sense of duty. His private life corresponded with his official reputation. It was unexceptionable and without a blemish."

General Sherman, in his report, says he was a young officer of excellent judgment and of high promise; brave, skillful, and efficient; a gentleman of fine instincts and a high sense of honor; an officer of whom we had reason to be proud. No man could have done better in life, nor met death with more heroism. (The exact language not given; we quote from memory.)

General Schofield testifies to his bravery, intelligence, and faithfulness in performing his duty in the Army, giving him great praise.

He was kind and tender to his men, while exacting strict obedience, and they all loved him and promptly obeyed him. He kept his men clean, healthy, cheerful, and always ready to fight. He was admired and beloved by all his brother officers. He was 6 feet 2 inches high, and every inch a soldier. He had high social qualities, was kind and generous to his friends, and loved his wife and children well. His widow, a lady every way worthy of him, is poor and has two of his children to support.

Your committee therefore report the bill with an amendment: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty," and with this amendment recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. WOLFORD. Before the vote is taken upon the amendment I want to make a little explanation. The committee, I have said, was not unanimous in this recommendation. They were divided, with a majority, however, in favor of the report.

I shall not detain the committee but a very few moments, but I hope the House will vote down the amendment and restore the amount originally fixed in the bill. If ever there was the widow of an officer who served under this Government, and who was entitled to consideration, this is a case that deserves it. If ever there was an officer below the rank of major-generul who performed a gallant, high, and laborious service, this man did so. His widow now comes and asks for this relief. Her husband was murdered by the Indians in the discharge of his duty. He was started from Fort Fred Steele with an inadequate force. Proud, ambitious, and brave, he did not grumble, but moved right along. His hands were tied under the orders which he had not to attack the Indians.

The savages were on his right and left and in front of him, but he was not permitted to attack. When the attack of the Indians was made he charged with a gallantry and bravery unparalleled in the history of war. He was a most gallant officer, devoted to his men. He drove back the savage foe and stood manfully in front of them until he fell and died.

Now I say if there is gratitude in the American heart, if we intend to do right, this is a case which calls for fitting action on our part. The widow of Major Thornburgh is of excellent family, the daughter of Colonel Clark, of the United States Army, and closely related to the late Colonel Dawson, of Pennsylvania; and, with her two infant children to support, she comes before this Congress and asks Congress for enough to educate and raise as they should be educated and raised the children of that gallant officer.

I will not detain the House with an argument; for I feel it must be in the heart of every American, in Congress or out of Congress, to see the widow of that officer—young, brave, and promising, if he had lived, to be one of the greatest men in the United States—to see her put in a situation to properly educate and raise her children.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky as to the family of this lady. How many children has she?

Mr. WOLFORD. Two.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Kentucky, I presume, wants the amendment voted down?

Mr. WOLFORD. Yes, sir; I want it voted down.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to ask one more question. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this lady is now getting the full pension to which the rank of her husband entitled her?

Mr. WOLFORD. I think not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I mean the regular pension to which a major's widow is entitled.

Mr. WOLFORD. She is getting $25 a month.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to make one observation. This widow is now drawing a pension of $25 a month and $2 a month for each one of her children. That is, they are getting all of the pension the law allows to the widow of a major of the Army. And it is only a question now whether or not you propose to raise the amount from $25 to $50, making an exception of this case. I suppose there were many other officers that were as brave—I do not suppose any were braver—but I believe there were many as brave as this officer.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the widow is now drawing a pension?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. She is drawing a pension of $25 a month.

Mr. HOUK. For herself?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUK. In her own right as a widow of this major?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUK. Under the general law?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Under the general law. And this bill proposes to increase that pension. The committee recommend an increase to $30.

Mr. HOUK. What pension are the children drawing?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Each is drawing $2 a month.

Mr. WOLFORD. That is part of the $25.

Mr. MATSON. I do not wish to detain the committee arguing the question which has been frequently argued before. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] has said, the question is whether there is to be an exception in this case. But there is a question beyond that. The question is whether this Congress is not going so far that there will be no exceptions after a while, and that it will be impossible for Congress to resist the applications that are made for the increase of widow's pensions.

Mr. HOUK. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MATSON. I decline to yield until I get through.

We have had it said, Mr. Chairman, time and again in the discussion of these questions when a particular application is brought before us, that this is an exceptional case. We have allowed an increase of $50 a month to the widows of all general officers. There the Committee on Invalid Pensions has stopped, and proposes to stop; not because the widows of general officers in all cases are entitled to be pensioned at a higher rate than the widows of some that were not officers at all, but because there must be a line drawn or else Congress launches out upon an unknown sea and no one can tell where this thing will stop.

There were many men in the service, of different ranks, some of them without rank at all, who performed deeds of very great heroism, and whose widows are living in absolute want. Nobody proposes to increase their pensions to $50 a month, and the question recurs upon this committee and upon this Congress as to where we are to stop. That is all there is of it.

I have no doubt that every word uttered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD] in relation to Major Thornburgh was true; but the same thing could be said of thousands of men who have fallen in defense of their country. If this Congress believes that the country can afford to increase the pensions of all widows of soldiers to $50 per month, then it is right to go ahead.

But I say to you if this thing is carried to an extreme length, as it seems likely to be under the precedents set here night after night, it is not only an injustice to the widows, but an injustice to all of the pensioners on the pension-list. Pensions will be brought into disrepute, and the country will cry out against the outrage of attempting to make classes and pension some widows at $50 a month and others at $8 a month.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, this is a serious question. I have presented it time and again to this House. And I say unless we draw the line and stop somewhere there is serious danger ahead, not only to the pensioners, but there is serious trouble ahead to the members of Congress.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my agreement with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] and to indorse every word that he has said. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to see that gentlemen, when addressing the committee, shall have a proper hearing during the time to which they are entitled.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And gentlemen will certainly make nothing by calling "Vote! Vote!" while I am on the floor.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we do injustice when we single out a pensioner here and there and grant an exceptional pension without extending like benefits to others equally meritorious. I say equally meritorious, because, while this was undoubtedly a brave officer, it can not be claimed that there were not others equally brave and deserving. Doubtless there were among the men whom this brave officer led a number wearing the plain uniform of the private soldier who were equally brave, and who fell with him on that occasion. Their widows get but $8 a month; but, because some one is willing to introduce a bill for this special case, because this applicant has friends in the House of Representatives, it is proposed to raise the pension of this widow even above that of the widow of a major-general.

I do not think that we are treating the pensioners of the country rightly when we select a few from the top and raise them still higher, leaving the great majority of the pensioners of the country to get along with pensions of $2, $4, and $6 a month—on an average about $4 a month—and widows $8 a month. I have steadily opposed increasing the pensions of the widows of officers to $50 a month while we leave the pensions of widows of private soldiers at $8 a month. It does not seem to me to be right; and whenever a bill is brought in here for such a purpose I am moved to enter my protest against it as an injustice to the many widows who are drawing but $8 a month. One widow may be living in a city on one side of the street and another on the other side, one drawing $50 a month and the other only $8 a month, yet both may have lost husbands in the service, killed possibly in the same battle. I do not think that is just or that it is wise policy, and as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has said, if we go on making these discriminations, selecting individuals here and there and increasing their pensions, the applications for the increase of pensions will multiply and there will be no end to them.

I think therefore that we do better justice and better promote the interests of the pensioners generally when we lay down right principles and adhere to them, doing equal justice to all.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disposition upon the part of some members of this House to grade men in this matter of pensions according to the shoulder-straps they wore in the service—to grade them, not by the meritorious services they rendered to their country, but according as they were privates, or sergeants, or lieutenants, or major-generals. Sir, I am opposed to any policy that has that end in view. I am in favor of encouraging and rewarding military prowess and military genius. I am in favor of acknowledging and fitly rewarding the services of gallant men who imperiled their lives or gave up their lives for their country, no matter what rank they may have held or on what field they may have fallen.

This is the case of a man who risked his life as bravely against worthless barbarian redskins as if they had been his peers. He went down to death on that field as bravely as any man could die fighting against any foe. There seems to be a prevailing opinion in this House that if a man was only a major, his widow should receive but $20 a month. Mr. Chairman, that is a false idea, a false policy. It is warring against the inevitable law of cause and effect—it is warring even against human nature itself.

We recognize men for what they are worth, and the mere fact that a man was a major, or that he was not a major-general, does not preclude his family from the right to receive that recognition and reward which a brave and honorable soldier, whether living or dead, should always receive at the hands of his country.

Mr. Chairman, there is an effort made here to confine the pensions of privates to $8 a month. I regret to see an attempt to bind the American Congress down by any such rule. We have not followed that rule. We have violated it time and again, and I am glad to be able to say that there have been enough men found in the House of Representatives willing to violate a rule like that, having so little foundation in equity or common sense.

Here is a case which is recommended by the best men in the Army of the United States, the men who have rendered its history illustrious. They are all proud to do honor to the name of Major Thornburgh and to honor his wife and his family, and I hope there will be men enough in this committee to-night to stand up and give this widow and her family a pension of $50 per month. I hope we shall be generous. We shall not learn how to appreciate such men as Major Thornburgh until a foreign foe shall again knock at our doors, until our Navy, what little we have, has been driven from our shores and we are engaged in another great war.

Mr. Chairman, it is a good lesson to teach the young men in our Military Academy and in our Naval Academy that we do recognize the service of men of this kind, and if they fall in the cause of their country their wives and their families will be taken care of by their country. I trust, sir, that whether the case is that of a private, or a major, or a major-general, we shall always be ready to do justice, and that because a brave man was a private soldier we shall not therefore confine the pension of his widow to $8 a month or $50 a month, if he has done for his country that which deserves higher recognition and reward.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Chairman, I will say only a word on this case. My excuse for saying anything is that this lady's friends and relatives have lived in my district. She is a niece of Dr. Dawson, who resided a great many years in my county; and I know something of her situation and the circumstances which have surrounded her since the death of her husband.

There is one fact that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] must not forget. When he admits that the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD] is a truthful statement, he must not forget that the gentleman from Kentucky stated this officer was sent forward with an insufficient force to rescue an Indian agent. It was a desperate service. This Indian agent, a civil officer of the Government, was in peril, and this officer, going forward with an insufficient force to his rescue, met his death. Now, will my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] or any other gentleman claim that the sum we propose to allow in this case is an exorbitant amount for a widow and two children to live upon?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is not the question.

Mr. CONVERSE. But the gentleman says he wants all these cases drawn in a line, and wants them to stand exactly alike.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. CONVERSE. The very fact that this case comes here at all shows that it is an exceptional case. These applications for increase of pension are always exceptional. You can not draw any line in exceptional cases.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is not one widow with two children as deserving as another?

Mr. CONVERSE. And when another widow with two children, under circumstances which make an equally deserving case, comes here, I am ready to vote to her a similar increase. I am willing to vote to the widow of a private soldier in a meritorious case as much as to the widow of a colonel or a general.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If the gentleman is ready to vote pensions of $50 a month to all widows of soldiers killed in the war, very well; but till we are ready to do so let us not single out particular cases and discriminate in their favor.

Mr. CONVERSE. Let the gentleman present here any exceptional case like this—a case where a man has lost his life on a field where no glory was to be won, where there was nothing but the naked and conscientious discharge of duty and where his death was the fault of the Government, and I am ready to vote $50 a month to the widow and children.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Was the peril of this Indian agent imminent?

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes, sir; it was so considered by the officers there. These Utes rose and met this officer half-way.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Did the Government have within convenient reach other forces that could have been added to the forces under the charge of this officer?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Oh, no; not available.

Mr. CONVERSE. Forces were scattered all along the Atlantic coast, and there were four companies at Fort Steele, but they were not within seventy-five or one hundred miles of this agency at the time.

Mr. STEELE. And the circumstances did not admit of delay?

Mr. CONVERSE. No, sir. There was an emergency. This officer was ordered by his superior officer to go forward with four companies at once, and he went in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Then he only performed his duty; and the Government was not at fault, inasmuch as no other forces were near there and subject to immediate order.

Mr. CONVERSE. The gentleman seems to forget that the country should do its duty by all. This is not a question of "drawing a line," as my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] desires to do. It is a question of charity, of generosity. If this woman's husband had been spared to her his salary would have placed her in far better condition than this pension can do.

My friend from Kentucky, it seems to me, puts this case on the right ground. The proposition is to place in this woman's hands not only a bare support, but something with which to educate these children of hers; and $600 a year is a very small sum for any such purpose. Certainly it is no compensation for the loss of her husband.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How about those widows who receive only $75 a year, and some of whom have five or six children?

Mr. CONVERSE. If their pensions are not sufficient, increase them.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, this case, it seems to me, is entirely exceptional in its character. Let it be recollected that Major Thornburgh had given almost his whole life to his country. He had served for years on the frontier.

Mr. MORRILL. What had his salary been?

Mr. PETTIBONE. He had not been able to accumulate anything; he had been kept on the frontier, and every dollar that he had received had necessarily been spent for the support of himself and his family. Now in the very prime of life——

Mr. MORRILL. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Was not Major Thornburgh educated at the Government expense and paid a handsome salary as long as he was in the service?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Certainly he was educated at the expense of the Government, but before going to West Point he won his spurs in the war of the rebellion, having gone into the service as a boy. His father was a martyr in the cause of the country and his brother was in the service. He came of a line of soldiers.

This whole matter, it seems to me, is in a nutshell. Major Thornburgh, after giving the best fifteen years of his life to the country, died a poor man. The cause of his death was being suddenly pushed out into the Indian country to rescue an Indian agent, the lamented Meeker, and his family. He was sent out with orders not to fight if it could be avoided—not to make the attack. He could unquestionably have defeated the enemy. In an enterprise in which no glory was to be won he went forward without murmur, without question. He took his handful of men and started on his mission of rescue. Sternly obeying orders, refusing to make the attack when the emergency was imminent, certain that nothing but the utmost heroism would enable him to cut his way through, he saved the lives of his command but sacrificed his own, leaving his poor widow and two orphan children to receive a paltry pension of $25 a month, upon which the whole family were to be supported and the children educated.

This is one of those cases which probably will be rare in the history of the country, but it is one, it seems to me, which appeals to a liberal and enlightened action on our part, so that if we would have officers in like manner to shed glory forever on the American arms, to do their duty without murmur, although no fame is to be won, with alacrity to enter upon the sternest discharge of duty, then we ought not to leave this widow and her orphan children to live in genteel poverty.

Mr. PUSEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just one word in indorsement of that report. He was stationed at Omaha, and surrendered what is not usual, a very soft thing, a paymaster's position in the Army, to go out on our frontier to protect our settlers.

I say, gentlemen, if there ever was an exceptional case brought before this committee this is one; and I hope we will have the magnanimity to give this widow and her children some justice in compensation for the great sacrifice her husband made.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not in the habit of detaining this committee with any remarks. I am glad to hear the eloquent voices of the gentlemen who have spoken on my left. We are not accustomed to hear them in these pension meetings.

But I wish to say this, Mr. Chairman: There are in this country something like 70,000 widows whose husbands died gallantly for their country's sake, and when we begin to build up these discriminations no mortal man can tell where we are going to stop.

That this lady and some of her friends live in the district of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] is no reason why we should increase her pension.

That the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PUSEY] is able to pay his most eloquent tribute to the character of Major Thornburgh is no reason why we should make her an exception.

If there are any facts in her circumstances which make it impossible for her to live on the pension she now receives, that may be a reason for increasing it, but ought to be no more reason for increasing it in her case than in each and all cases of widows whose husbands have perished in their country's cause.

I do not rise to oppose this bill, but I do rise to protest against discriminations which are not founded upon some good reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "$50" and insert "$30 a month."

Mr. RANDALL. What does the committee recommend?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty dollars a month.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 25.

Mr. RANDALL demanded tellers.

Mr. BAYNE. I move by way of compromise, to remove all objections, it be put at $40 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing and debate can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. Further debate is not in order.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw the demand for tellers with a view to move $40 as a compromise.

The CHAIRMAN. The demand for tellers was made by the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. RANDALL. I want this widow to get $50 a month. The vote was so close I asked for tellers so as to decide it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. WOLFORD and Mr. CUTCHEON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 28.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I move to amend by making it $40.

Mr. CULLEN. I move to amend the amendment by saying $35.

Mr. CULLEN'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 31.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 22.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am upon the floor and make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. STEELE. The point of no quorum came too late.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I was on the floor all the time.

Mr. MATSON. It makes no difference, as the point can be made in the House as well as here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio states he made the point in time, and the Chair will recognize it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I suggest the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the understanding that the previous question shall be ordered and that a vote shall be taken by the yeas and nays.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It should be open to further discussion, and we might as well pass it now as to agree to that. I dislike to call a quorum on a bill of this kind, but the proposed legislation is of a character that seems to me to demand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being insisted upon that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, and Mr. WOLFORD were appointed tellers.

Mr. WARNNR, of Ohio. If we can reach an understanding that there is to be a yea-and-nay vote in the House, not to-night, however, but when a quorum is present, I will withdraw the demand for a quorum.

Mr. WOLFORD. And with the understanding that the previous question is to be ordered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let the previous question be ordered upon it, and it will come up then as unfinished business.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not want the previous question to be ordered, for the reason that I wish to have an opportunity of being heard on this bill when it comes before the House. I want at least five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio has made a suggestion that the friends of this measure will agree to, that the previous question prevail in the engrossment and third reading of the bill and that there be allowed on each side five minutes for debate.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PERKINS. And that the vote shall not be taken until a quorum is present.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the understanding.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Can the House be bound by any agreement made in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RANDALL. This agreement can be made after the committee rises to-night in the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. And made a matter of record on the Journal.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask if any agreement made in this manner in Committee of the Whole will have any binding effect upon the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has just made the same inquiry. It is suggested that the agreement be made in the House when it comes before the House after the committee rises.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is satisfactory to me.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass and with the understanding above recorded.

ALBERT HARPER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of calling up the bill (H. R. 8090) granting a pension to Albert Harper.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Albert Harper, late of Company G, Ninth New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ADDISON M. COPEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask consent to take up from page 51 of the Calendar the bill (H. R. 8136) for the relief of Addison M. Copen and to put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Addison M. Copen, late of Company I, Third United States Dragoons in the Mexican war, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ESTHER HUDSON.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2645) granting a pension to Esther Hudson, mother of William H. Hudson, deceased, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company E, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Esther Hudson, mother of William H. Hudson, deceased, late a private in Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and afterward a sergeant of Company E, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month, and to pay her, or cause to be paid her, a pension at said rate from the death of her said son, subject to the general laws should she again marry or her dependence upon her son cease.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "pension," in the tenth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN WOOLLEY.

Mr. MATSON. I ask to take up the bill (H. R. 6782) granting a pension to Susan Woolley.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Susan Woolley, of Indiana, widow of Benjamin Woolley, late a private in Company C, Ninetieth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH DENNY RIPLEY.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 150) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah Denny Ripley, widow of Brig. Gen. James W. Ripley, deceased, late Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill of the Senate No. 1228, granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven, report numbered 2465, and ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Marie Louise Craven, widow of T. A. M. Craven, late a commander in the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension heretofore received by her.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I object. That is an adverse report.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I was about to state that this bill had been reported adversely by the committee, but I think a word of explanation will satisfy the committee as to the propriety of setting aside the adverse report.

Mr. MATSON. Permit me to say, if the gentleman from New York will allow me——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MATSON. In order to save time, that I am perfectly willing this bill should go into the House as the other bill went a few moments ago; otherwise I shall be compelled to insist upon the presence of a quorum. This bill, as I have said, comes from the committee with an adverse report.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I assent to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, because, in the first place, there is nothing else that I can do, and because I am satisfied a mere statement in the House will be satisfactory to the members as to the propriety of the bill. I think it can be shown that there is a clear distinction between this and the other bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside and reported to the House with the understanding that a vote is to be taken in the House on the terms on which the other bill was reported to the House, if there be no objection.

Mr. PRICE. I object to that arrangement.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that an objection will necessitate the presence of a quorum before action can be taken upon the bill. The proposition is to take a vote in the House.

Mr. PRICE. Very well; I will withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was laid aside with the understanding that a vote should be taken in the House upon its passage.

CYRUS REESER.

Mr. CULLEN. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2398) granting a pension to Cyrus Reeser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Cyrus Reeser, late a private in Company F, Sixty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN SNYDER.

Mr. WINANS, of Michigan. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7718) granting a pension to John Snyder, reported with amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Snyder, formerly of Company I, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Infantry.

The amendment by the committee was as follows:

In line 4, strike out the words "place on" and substitute therefor the words "restore to;" so that it will read: "Directed to restore to the pension-roll."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. REID.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2068) granting a pension to James H. Reid, reported by the Committee on Pensions with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Reid, of Dorsey's Regiment of Illinois Volunteers in the Black Hawk war.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" and after the words "Black Hawk war" insert "and pay him at the rate of $8 per month on and after the passage of this act."

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to oppose the amendment recommended by the committee. I think it should not prevail. The bill provides that this soldier shall be placed on the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. The committee has recommended that he be placed on the pension-rolls to draw a pension of $8 a month. This soldier was wounded in the leg in the Black Hawk war. He is now an old man, over 70 years of age. I think the amendment should not prevail.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to state to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] that $8 a month is as large a pension as a soldier of the Black Hawk war can get except for specific disability.

Mr. PERKINS. Very well; I will not oppose the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROSANNA RILEY.

Mr. LOVERING. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Rosanna Riley, reported with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to place the name of Rosanna Riley on the pension-roll, and pay her a pension of $20 a month.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The amendment recommended by the committee was as follows:

In line 5, section 1, strike out "$20" and insert "$18."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. FRANCES L. THOMAS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2547) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of $30 per month now received by Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, to $2,000 per annum, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. The objection comes from that side of the House.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to say that no bill shall pass with my consent raising a pension for a soldier or a soldier's widow until there is a general bill that will take them all in. I willingly admit that General Thomas was one of the most brilliant men that adorned the history of the war. I grant all that.

Mr. RANDALL. If there be a case of increase of pension in which the American people will respond with a universal "ay," it is this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. PRICE. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 3.

Mr. PRICE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MATSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] that we make some arrangement by which this case shall go as the others, to be voted on in the House to-morrow, the previous question being ordered to-night; the agreement to be entered on the Journal, so that there may be no question about it, that the yeas and nays shall be taken after ten minutes' debate.

Mr. PRICE. I am perfectly willing to make any arrangement by which the majority of this House may do anything it chooses. I have no objection to that. There is no position that I assume with so much reluctance as that of taking advantage of the power that an individual has here to block legislation; but the difficulty in this case is that the gentleman who calls up this bill took advantage of that same power to prevent the passage of a bill infinitely more meritorious than this one.

Mr. RANDALL. The difference between the two cases is that I thought that bill was wrong, while you admit that this bill is right.

Mr. PRICE. Oh, I do not.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I am very sorry you do not.

Mr. PRICE. I am perfectly willing to make an arrangement that this bill shall go to the House, with the understanding that it shall not be acted upon until we have a quorum present, and then they may do what they please with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside under an order similar to that which has been made in two other cases this evening.

Mr. PRICE. I do not want the previous question ordered on it. Let it be open for debate in the House, if necessary.

A MEMBER. Let us agree then as to the time that shall be given for debate on this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest five minutes on each side.

Mr. PRICE. No, I will not agree to that. I do not want the five-minute rule. I will consent to twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not that much time to give, but I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] shall have twenty minutes entirely under his control.

Mr. PRICE. That will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the understanding just stated.

JAMES M'CALLEN.

Mr. STRUBLE. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws in force at the date of his filing of the claim for pension, the name of James McCallen, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment California Volunteers; the disability for which pension is granted by this act being disease of throat, as claimed by said soldier in his application.

On motion of Mr. NUTTING, by unanimous consent the reading of the report was dispensed with, except the portion of it stating the amendments recommended by the committee, as follows:

Your committee, however, with the view of preserving some degree of uniformity in these measures of relief, recommend that the bill be amended by striking out after the word "pension laws," in the third line, the words "in force at the date of the filing of his claim for pension," and also by striking out all after the word "infantry," in the sixth line; and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN L. COWARDIN.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7078) to remove the political disability of John L. Cowardin.

The bill was read.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET FLAHERTY.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, the name of Margaret Flaherty, dependent stepmother of Bartlett Flaherty, late a private of Company F, Third Maine Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTE HACKETT.

Mr. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1416) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Hackett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Charlotte Hackett, mother of Samuel F. Hackett, late ex-private in Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

KATE A. DRUMMOND.

Mr. PRICE. I call up the bill (S. 2231) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate A. Drummond.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Kate A. Drummond, of Iowa City, Johnson County, Iowa, widow of Thomas Drummond, late captain of the Fifth United States Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NICHOLAS WITHAM.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7612) granting a pension to Nicholas Witham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nicholas Witham, late a private in Company H, Third Regiment Massachusetts Heavy Artillery.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The report by (Mr. LOVERING) is as follows:

Your committee find that claimant enlisted as a private in Company H, Third Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, December, 4, 1863, and was discharged therefrom September 18, 1865. He filed a declaration for pension September 12, 1877, alleging chronic diarrhea and kidney disease, resulting in affection of the eyes. His claim was rejected by reason "no records, and inability to furnish medical or other evidence showing that condition of eyes is the result of disease contracted in the service and line of duty."

George H. Peirce, captain of claimant's company, says:

"Claimant was taken sick while in the line of his duty in summer of 1865, and was sent to the hospital, and never returned to duty afterward. He was a good soldier. Affiant's records fail to show nature of disease."

William Nichols, surgeon of Third Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, says:

"Claimant, while sick in the hospital at Fort Saratoga, in 1865, was under the charge of Drs. Grant and Gilbert; the former is dead; the latter, affiant understands, has disappeared. Affiant is convinced that claimant was sent to hospital in July, 1865, and was sent home sick with his regiment at date of its muster out; believes sickness of claimant was continuous from date of his arrival home, and was such as to disable him for very light business during the autumn and winter of 1865; is of opinion that claimant's disability was contracted in line of duty."

Lyman H. Chase, a comrade, and was detailed as ambulance-driver; recollects carrying claimant to the hospital; knows that he came home sick; came home with him.

Hiram N. Breed, ex-mayor, of Lynn, Mass., says:

"Ever since claimant's return home, in 1865, his sight has been poor, so that it is hard for him to recognize acquaintances, and his health has been poor; knows that he was an active man before he enlisted, and that since discharge he has been unable to do anything of consequence."

Thomas L. Swain testifies conjointly with Mr. Breed.

Thomas B. Knight, city treasurer, Lynn, Mass., says that claimant drew aid from the treasury in 1866, '67, '69, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77.

In a personal interview claimant says he has "chronic diarrhea, and is so blind that he can scarcely find the way around," which is evidently true.

Dr. Isaac F. Galloupe, examining surgeon, says:

"In my opinion the said Nicholas Witham is totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the cause above stated."

In view of all the facts, and in consideration of the extreme age (72 years) of claimant, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lina J. Stearns, widow of Oliver F. Stearns, late a private in Company F, Sixteenth New Hampshire Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN K. MITCHELL.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call up the bill (H. R. 7077) to remove the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell, of Virginia.

The bill was read; and, there being no objection, was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID SEARS.

Mr. NUTTING. I call up the bill (H. R. 8091) granting a pension to David Sears.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of David Sears on the pension-roll of the United States, under the rules and regulations of the pension laws in regard to amount of pension.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE S. HARROLD.

Mr. MATSON. I call up the bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Harrold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse S. Harrold, late second lieutenant of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $33 per month, in lieu of what he is now receiving.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LUCY PARR.

Mr. SMITH, of Iowa. I call up the bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Parr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Lucy Parr, widow of Samuel B. Parr, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORIN R. M'DANIEL.

Mr. STEVENS. I call up the bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Orin R. McDaniel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Orin R. McDaniel, late of Company H, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN RANDOLPH HAMILTON.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call up the bill (H. R. 7230) to remove the political disabilities of John Randolph Hamilton, of North Carolina.

The bill was read, and, there being no objection, was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISABELLA HIGGINS.

Mr. HOLMES. I call up the bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isabella Higgins, late hospital matron of the Eighth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

Strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert "at the rate of $20 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. ELLWOOD. I hope the committee will not rise; a number of us want to have our bills passed.

Mr. MATSON. My object in moving that the committee rise is that the House may extend the time for taking the recess, so that all gentlemen having bills they want considered to-night may be accommodated. I propose to ask the House to extend the time for taking the recess until half past 10 or 11 o'clock.

The motion of Mr. MATSON that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BAGLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration, pursuant to order, sundry bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also bills for removal of political disabilities, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations.

JONATHAN C. HARRISON.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5998) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan C. Harrison; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH SANSOM.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7990) granting a pension to Joseph Sansom; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLARINDA HUNT.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1804) granting a pension to Clarinda Hunt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

A. W. STARK.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8186) to remove the political disabilities of A. W. Stark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order fixing the time for taking the recess to-night at 10 o'clock be modified, so that the recess shall take place at a quarter before 11 o'clock.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand by the order of the House a recess is to be taken until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Have we the right by unanimous consent to change the hour to which a recess is to be taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair thinks the House has the right by unanimous consent to extend the hour at which the recess is to be taken. Is there objection?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask for the reading of the order under which these evening sessions are held.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the proposed extension?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not believe we have the right to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Do you object? It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not believe unanimous consent can do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the hour will be continued.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest this amendment: that the hour for taking a recess be postponed until all the bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar have been acted on.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object, because under the order for the evening session we can only do that which we are authorized, and nothing more. It certainly does not authorize any such extension.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Indiana we can by unanimous consent extend the hour for taking a recess until the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar have been disposed of; nothing more is asked, and immediately after that has been done we can take a recess.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. When we pass 10 o'clock all we can do is to adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not think the gentleman is correct in that, but I do not insist upon it.

Mr. MATSON. There is time enough to dispose of the business reported from the Committee of the Whole House before 10 o'clock.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 8090) granting a pension to Albert Harper;
A bill (H. R. 8136) for the relief of Addison M. Copen;
A bill (H. R. 6782) granting a pension to Susan Woolley;
A bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty;
A bill (H. R. 7612) granting a pension to Nicholas Witham;
A bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns; and
A bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Parr.

Bills of the following titles were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof):

A bill (H. R. 7077) to remove the disabilities of John K. Mitchell, of Virginia;
A bill (H. R. 7078) to remove the disabilities of John L. Cowardin; and
A bill (H. R. 7230) to remove the disabilities of John Randolph Hamilton, of North Carolina.

Amendments to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2645) granting a pension to Esther Hudson, mother of William H. Hudson, deceased, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company E, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;
A bill (H. R. 8091) granting a pension to David Sears;
A bill (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Rosanna Riley;
A bill (H. R. 2068) granting a pension to James H. Reid; and
A bill (H. R. 7718) granting a pension to John Snyder. The title of the bill was amended to read "A bill restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll."

Senate bill of the following titles were severally ordered to a third reading; and were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

A bill (S. 1546) granting a pension to Orin R. McDaniel;
A bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Harrold;
A bill (S. 2231) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate A. Drummond;
A bill (S. 1416) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Hackett;
A bill (S. 2398) granting a pension to Cyrus Reeser; and
A bill (S. 150) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley;

Amendments to the following bills were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins;
A bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry; and
A bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCullen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the following bills it is the understanding the previous question shall be ordered and that the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered:

A bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army;
A bill (S. 2547) granting increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas; and
A bill (S. 1228) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven.

And then, at 10 o'clock p. m. (February 13, 1885), in compliance with previous order, the House took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning (February 14, 1885).

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House at 10 o'clock a. m. (Saturday, February 14) reassembled.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to reach the consideration of the river and harbor bill, and also that all debate upon that bill, when next entered upon, shall be limited to one and one-half hours; one hour to be allotted to the enemies or opponents of the bill and thirty minutes to its friends, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] a question as to the distribution of the time; how it is to be made; whether the debate shall proceed as we proceed with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs, or whether he proposes that the debate allowed by this motion shall be a general debate?

Mr. WILLIS. I can only give the gentleman from New York my own idea. It is this: The section will be read, and the gentleman from New York or some other gentleman opposed to the bill will take charge of the hour in opposition, and distribute it so as to suit the gentlemen who desire to speak in opposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. What I have desired to suggest is this: while the time for debate is limited, it will proceed, as I understand, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. That ought to be so, and that arrangement will no doubt accomplish the purpose of all parties. Let the time be occupied on the paragraphs as under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is precisely the point I am endeavoring to get at. I am sure there is no intention unreasonably to consume the time so far as this debate is concerned. But if I understand the gentleman from Kentucky, he does not propose to limit us even to the hour and a half allowed by his motion.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state for myself, and so far as I can speak for the friends of the bill, that even if the hour is exhausted when a gentleman offers an amendment and wants to present facts in connection with any particular paragraph, I at least will not raise the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desired to have this understanding before we went into committee, so that it may be clearly understood when we are in the Committee of the Whole that this was the arrangement.

Mr. CLARDY. I wish to suggest to gentlemen that the Committee of the Whole of course would be powerless to extend the time allowed for debate by the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] will pardon me, I will say if this understanding is now arrived at in the House, that there is to be such a license as has been suggested, the committee would be bound by that understanding.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union I would like to have the opinion of the Chair on one point. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] this morning startles me. It is alarming. He suggests that somebody on this side of the House and somebody on that side shall control the time. Now, that may be all very well for the big men on this side of the House and the big men on that side; but the last opportunity that an obscure man like myself might have to speak in his own right for five minutes would be gone forever. Now, I would like to have the opinion of the Chair whether when the House by a majority limits debate on a section, say to one hour and a half—whether that hour and a half shall be in the control of one man on each side of the House or whether the debate shall progress under the five-minute rule. That is the point on which I would like to have the opinion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Iowa its opinion, that the question as to the disposition of the time allowed for debate would be one entirely in the hands of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REAGAN. If the understanding can be as was suggested a little time ago, that the debate is not to be what is called a general debate, but a debate under the five-minute rule, such an arrangement would allow a better chance to meet the point now suggested by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the chairman of the Committee of the Whole should take it into his head that under this order general debate was to be allowed for one hour and a half, to be controlled by one gentleman on the other side and one gentleman on this side, what chance would an obscure man like myself have to take part in that debate?

Mr. REAGAN. The chairman can not do that under the rules while the five-minute debate is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole is under the operation of the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I just wanted that much said by the Speaker.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to make a single remark to the gentleman on the other side who has charge of the bill. The friends of the bill say, "We have given you a great deal of latitude in this case; we have given you more time than we take ourselves." Now, I would like very much to speak against the provisions of this bill; but under the present circumstances I can not discuss any provision of the bill—I can not say a word against it. Why? Because here is my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], here is my friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], here are other gentlemen who want to occupy the whole of the time in presenting their views on amendments that they wish to offer. I can not say to the gentleman from Wisconsin or these other gentlemen, "I will occupy time in attacking the provisions of this bill," when these gentlemen stand here and say——

Mr. KING. I will ask the gentleman whether it would satisfy him if this side of the House would allow him one half hour?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not want to occupy time in that way under the circumstances.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman fails to recognize the fact that we are proceeding in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute debate, and there will be opportunity for amendment to every clause.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that. But here is the gentleman from Wisconsin, who says, "I have an important amendment that I desire to offer, which is vital to me and my people." Under such circumstances I can not take five minutes or ten minutes if thereby I interfere with the presentation of the merits of his amendment. So also I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] wishes to advocate an amendment. The case is the same with gentlemen all over this side of the House; they want the whole of this hour for presenting their arguments in favor of amendments that they may wish to offer.

Mr. REAGAN. That means that we are to defeat this bill by letting every man talk as long as he wants to——

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no; it does not. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for; and the Chair will state that the regular order is the business coming over from last night's session under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to say in behalf of the friends of this bill that the only object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order, the regular order having been called for.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. May I say a word?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is only in order by unanimous consent; and the regular order has been called for.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. When the recess was taken yesterday afternoon it was generally understood that the business of the House before noon to-day should be the consideration of the river and harbor bill; and the general understanding is that no vote is to be taken upon the Post-Office appropriation bill until the House meets at 12 o'clock to-day. Now, good faith toward the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as well as toward the Committee on Appropriations, demands that this order shall be carried out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that was the understanding; still the Chair was not a party to any private understanding on the part of the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr Speaker—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House will be in order, the Chair will state the regular order. The Chair thinks the understanding of the House has been correctly stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]; but the Chair has no power except to state the order of business under the rule. The regular order, in the judgment of the Chair, would be business coming over under the operation of the previous question from last night's session, of which this is a continuation. But the gentleman from Kentucky asks now, in accordance with the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] as to what was the understanding of the House, that the House may now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That ought to be done.

Several members objected.

EVENING SESSION FOR LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. The call for the regular order is withdrawn to permit me to request that a session be held to-night, beginning at 8 o'clock, to take up the legislative appropriation bill. I think that can be promptly disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask whether that means an understanding that the river and harbor bill shall stand out of the way? I do not understand from the gentleman that it does.

Mr. HANCOCK. That is just what it does mean.

Mr. HOLMAN. For to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the request was for a session this evening for the purpose of taking up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only ask it for to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated the regular order and has stated that the gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object. It seems to me the regular order is public appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think so. The Chair thinks this is an extension of the session of last night; and the House having by its own action applied the previous question to certain bills undisposed of at the close of the session last evening, that business, in the judgment of the Chair, constitutes the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to postpone the further consideration of that business at 2 o'clock to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it is in order to move to postpone the previous question; the rule is imperative. The Clerk will report the clause of the rule which defines the operation of the previous question.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to appeal to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will wait one moment while the Clerk reports the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XVII.

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The language of the order under which the House sat last evening is this:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess from 5 until 8 o'clock p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that this is not Saturday. This is Friday's session.

Mr. HAMMOND. But it is not the evening session of Friday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair this is a continuation of the Friday evening session and will be until the House shall adjourn or dispose of the business brought over from the Friday evening session under the previous question.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion. I wish to appeal to the sense——

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to adjourn at all, but I do not desire to go on with pension bills when the understanding was that we were to go on with the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the understanding was as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HAMMOND, but the Chair can only observe the rule. The Chair can not take official cognizance of private understandings.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YOUNG. Is a motion to adjourn debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not debatable.

Mr. YOUNG. If it is, I wish to be heard a little while.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] insist upon his motion?

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw it.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard for a moment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is this debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 11, noes 72.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, when the gentleman from Illinois asked to dispense with the private business, his language was to "dispense with all private business for the day, except the evening session." Thereupon, following that, I moved that at 10 o'clock Friday night the House should take a recess until this day at 10 a. m., intending to call up the river and harbor bill. I appeal to the sense of justice of this House whether that was not practically the understanding in the House; and therefore, in view of that understanding, I ask unanimous consent to proceed in accordance with the expressed will of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, how many times has a gentleman got to object on the floor of the House to a proposition and how many times can it be renewed when gentlemen call for the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated expressly that debate, or any remarks in the nature of debate, could be had only by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] stood with the rest of the House listening until the request of the gentleman from Kentucky was repeated.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Maine objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair denies that it is in fault in the matter at all. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS]?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7655) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thomas D. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill the title of which has just been read.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, it was understood that the yeas and nays were to be taken upon that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. MATSON. I do.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope it will be voted down. This is a snap judgment, intended to defeat the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. By the agreement made in the House last night it was understood that there was to be five minutes' debate upon that bill on each side.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, this whole proceeding is in direct violation of good faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order, as the Chair has ruled more than once. Five minutes' debate on each side was to be allowed upon this bill, and the Chair is ready to recognize any gentleman who desires to be heard upon it. [After a pause.] The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and only 8 gentleman voted in the affirmative.

So the yeas any nays were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the use of killing this bill in this way? It will not take any more time to pass it than to kill it.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 48.

Mr. WASHBURN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. HOUK and Mr. MATSON.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 48.

Mr. HOUK. No quorum. I can not permit this bill to be defeated without a quorum in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to enter a motion to reconsider, and that motion to reconsider can go over until another time; and so we will be able to get out of this difficulty,

Mr. HOUK. With that understanding and in order that the House may go to public business, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So the bill is rejected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and I give notice that I will call it up at another time.

MRS. FRANCES L. THOMAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next bill coming over under the agreement at the evening session is a bill (S. 2547) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of $30 a month now received by Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, to $2,000 per annum, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In the twenty minutes allowed for debate by agreement last night I ask the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the Senate bill No. 2547, granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, having carefully considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

The proposition made by the Senate is to increase the pension of the widow of this illustrious officer from $30 per month to $2,000 per annum. It is said that General Thomas died owning but little property, and that his widow, though by no means in actual want, desires an increase of her pension in order that she may live comfortably. This committee has recommended in every instance when the appeal has been made that the pension of a widow of a general officer should be increased to $50 per month. This is to give a pension more than three times as large as that given to the widows of any of the general officers of the Army. There is one pension now granted by special act of Congress of $2,000 per annum. It goes to the widow of Admiral Farragut, so that we are not without a precedent. We should ask for no precedent for this proposition, because it can not be denied that General Thomas's service and career were in many respects exceptional. He stood in the front rank of our general officers during our greatest war, alongside of Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan, and yet by his modesty, or for some other unexplained reason, favors were never shown him. His whole life was one of work, faithful, unremitting service of the most difficult and trying kind. His military history furnished by the War Department shows this fact. During his lifetime he did not receive the lavish honors and favors that were given to others, but the impartial historian will place him as one of the most heroic and faithful characters in the history of our country, as great as the greatest in his achievements. For these reasons, believing it furnishes no precedent for action in any other case, we recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. PRICE. When this bill came up in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar last evening I raised objection to it and defeated its passage at that time solely on the ground that a single objection was fatal. I then agreed, because I disliked to apply that rule, that the question might be brought before the House this morning.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House twenty minutes were reserved for debate.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it in order to amend the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been ordered and amendment is cut off. The House has so ordered.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question. If the RECORD states it correctly, the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to control twenty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. That was the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that was the agreement.

Mr. PRICE. If gentlemen who are opposing my occupying the floor had been here last night, as they ought to have been, there would have been no necessity for these inquiries.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PRICE. No; I will not allow the gentleman to do anything. I asked a courtesy at his hands a few days ago and I was spurned.

Mr. RANDALL. I have to bear that.

Mr. PRICE. I had to bear a similar one the other day.

This is a bill to grant a pension to the widow of General Thomas of $2,000 per annum, and I rise to oppose it.

All the arguments that have been or can be urged in favor of its passage will be the gallantry and efficiency of General Thomas as an American soldier, and at the very outset I freely and cheerfully indorse all the eulogies that will be pronounced on General Thomas. I admit his skill, his bravery, his devotion to country. I know that he inspired his friends and the friends of civil liberty with a love, an admiration, and confidence equaled only by the dread with which he inspired his enemies. I know, too, that our revenues will never be large enough to remunerate him for his distinguished services. I know that his memory will be cherished as long as a spirit of patriotism shall find a place in the human heart, and that in after years coming generations will recognize his life as the finest type of a great and at the same time a good man.

It is because I would do honor to his name that I would oppose this bill. He fought and suffered and struggled that this might continue to be a free Government, by a free people; to preserve the right of every man, woman, and child to be the equal of every other before the law; that the benign and beneficent influence of its protecting arms might be thrown equally around all classes and all conditions of people; that the unworthy should suffer equal punishment, be he pauper or millionaire, and that equal meed of praise or reward should be extended to all who discharged equally well their social and political duties in whatever niche in life they might be placed.

He defended for us the principle that—

> Honor and shame from no condition rise;
> Act well your part, there all the honor lies.

And we are violating this principle when we select this or any similar case and make it a matter of special legislation, to the exclusion of thousands of cases equally meritorious—admitting for this case all the merit that can possibly be claimed for it—that appeal to us daily all over our land, not for alms, but for simple justice.

I will be met with the argument that a higher degree of skill or talent or aptness entitles its possessor to greater compensation. Admitting this, and then you have not demonstrated that this bill should become a law.

Elevation to places of command is not proof conclusive of extraordinary qualification. A hundred or a thousand untried men coming together, some must be selected as commanders, and in the absence of knowledge frequent mistakes were made and the fittest selections were not always determined on. Promotions were too frequently the result of political influences, and men were left to trudge on foot and carry a knapsack who could have rode on horseback quite as gracefully and commanded quite as skillfully and did exhibit as much bravery as the bravest of our most gallant leaders. They all, both officers and men, equally loved the flag; equally sacrificed home and ease and safety; equally endured, and in too many instances died, that the nation might live.

The compensation of pay and comfort or discomfort of camp or march or battles fought were all in favor of the officer and against the private. Thus we did compensate more highly, while in the service, officers, assuming that they possessed these rarer qualifications.

But should we continue these distinctions, when the service is over, to them or to their surviving relatives?

You, Mr. Speaker, or myself, being selected for a few years, out of 200,000 people, to occupy a place in this Chamber to discharge the high and responsible duties of a legislator, do we by that accident or circumstance put on a finer organization, either physical or mental, as that in after years when we shall become dependent upon others we must be treated differently from any other citizen who has filled to the best of his ability his place in the world? The idea is abhorrent to the principle of man's equality, and unless the disposition to thus discriminate is checked will prove destructive to the future of the Republic. I deeply deplore the tendency of the times in this direction.

Class legislation has been the bane of every country that has tried it. France pursued it until the pressure became so great on the under strata of society that it rose in revolt, and anarchy and confusion ran riot.

I have no sympathy with that communistic sentiment, based simply on a feeling of hostility to those who by thrift and economy have accumulated the means of surrounding themselves with the conveniences or luxuries of a higher civilization; but I have a deep and abiding sympathy with that feeling of unrest so plainly visible in almost every community which is superinduced by just such legislation as this bill proposes. The private soldier was as warmly attached to his family and home as the officer. If he fell in battle his nerves were as sensitive, his blood as red, his last gasp of agony accompanied with as much pain as the officer's. His wife and children mourned him as truly. Their destitution was as complete, their agony as intense and lasting. In most instances they were more poorly equipped for the battle of life; and yet we have thus far contented ourselves with giving them such poor assistance as may be derived under and by virtue of a general pension law blurred all over with crude and cruel conditions, many of which it is physically impossible to comply with. But if a major-general, or a brigadier-general, or an officer of any grade knocks at the door of this Congress, each one vies with the others who shall most promptly vote the largest amount, while hundreds as brave and as patriotic men as they, who rendered as important service as they, though in a humbler sphere, or their dependent wives or children, are to-day in a condition of helpless and hopeless poverty superinduced by their service as private soldiers.

If the Republic would live it must secure and retain the confidence of its citizens, and this monstrous discrimination is so plain, so unendurable, that it can not be regarded other than with abhorrence.

There is now a bill pending in this House, and has been since the first week of the session, by the provisions of which if passed every soldier of the Union would receive a pension. Substitute that bill for this and pass it, and then with a consciousness that you have shown yourselves worthy of the great sacrifices made by our defenders, you can have nothing to regret, nothing to apologize for, and you will have made our Government stronger in the hearts of the people, and sleep sweetly in the consciousness of duty well performed. I will be told that this is a "great country," and we should not be parsimonious in our dealings with our public men. I know it is a "great country," and I want it to continue great and to become greater, but that end can only be attained by making it and keeping it a just Government, and for a short time we are the custodians of its honor.

Let us then strike down for all time these special acts in the interests of a few favorites, and pass a broad and generous pension bill which will treat all classes and all grades alike. Do not tell me I am opposed to pensioning the widow of General Thomas. It is not that that I am opposing. My opposition arises from the fact that all our soldiers are not provided for, and every one of such cases as this that is relieved makes it that much more difficult to get what is demanded by every consideration of prudence, patriotism, and justice.

Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the pending bill the bill to which I referred, which pensions all soldiers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that no amendment is now in order.

Mr. PRICE. Then I desire to record publicly my desire to offer the bill as a substitute for the pending proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the previous question having been ordered on this bill it cuts off amendments.

Mr. PRICE. I agreed to give ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. PRICE. But I do not see the gentleman in the Hall, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires to be heard I will yield to him. I will extend to him a courtesy that he would not extend to me.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the gentleman has exhausted the twenty minutes with the exception of two minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk reports that two minutes of the gentleman's time remain.

Mr. REED. The gentleman commenced at twenty minutes before 11 o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. But the reading of the report took up a part of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Clerk reports the gentleman from Wisconsin has two minutes of the ten minutes remaining. There are consequently eighteen minutes of the twenty still remaining.

Mr. PRICE. Then I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, we are not without a precedent in this particular. The widow of Admiral Farragut received, by act of Congress, up to the time of her death, $2,000 a year. This lady has been living, from the date of the death of her husband up to the present time, on a pension of $30 a month; and I do not believe that any request would have been made except that it was with her a question of necessity. Ay, more. I want to say to this House and to the country that there was developed in the war but one George H. Thomas, and I do not believe there is any part of the American people, in any section of our common country, who do not desire to see the widow of that great soldier go down for the rest of her life with her pillow smoothed and her declining years free from want. [Applause.]

Mr. PRICE. Then make them all smooth. I yield five minutes to the gentlemanfrom Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, while I sympathize in the main with many of the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] in regard to the matter of making discriminations between those of lower and those of higher grades who equally served, who equally suffered, and equally died in the interests of the country, I do think that the case of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas is one that appeals so strongly by reason of his pre-eminent services, and towers so far above all others on which we are called to vote, that it ought to be made an exception. As was said by the distinguished gentleman on the left [Mr. RANDALL], the war developed but one George H. Thomas. He is one of the most eminent and most distinguished of all of the generals of the late war who have passed away; and I would place the widow of General Thomas side by side with the widow of our great sea admiral, Farragut, that so long as she lives she may know by the acts as well as the thanks of the American people that the supreme worth of her husband was fully appreciated by his country.

Mr. Speaker, there were single days in the history of our great civil war when the services of Major-General Thomas were worth uncounted millions to the people; and we can not now, without national disgrace and without dishonor to ourselves, refuse to put his widow beyond all possibility of want.

Mr. KING. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand twenty minutes are allowed for debate. Ten minutes have already been given to that side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana, as the Chair has stated before, that the twenty minutes by order of the House were given, the whole of it, to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KING. The whole time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore The Chair has stated it three times that such was the agreement of the House. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will proceed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. For these reasons and for other reasons which there is not now time to enumerate I shall give my vote for this bill, and I trust that it may be passed by such an overwhelming majority in this House as shall emphasize the appreciation of the American people for that great hero General George H. Thomas.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. PRICE. I do not yield to any one till I hear the request of the gentleman from Louisiana. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. KING. I want to have one minute.

Mr. PRICE. I will give it cheerfully if I can do so after fulfilling my promise to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. How many minutes have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] wants five minutes and I will cheerfully yield him that time; and then I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING].

Mr. REAGAN. There has been no time allowed for considering this bill. It was not reported, I am told, till last night. But that is not the point I rose to make.

Under our system of government it was never intended that there should be privileged classes—drones in society paid out of the labor of other people for doing nothing. Under the English Government, where privileged classes are preserved as a part of the nature and character of the government, high salaries are given to officers, and there are expensive pension-lists for the benefit of persons in various departments of life in order to sustain and keep up privileged classes. At the very foundation of our Government lies the declaration that there shall be no privileged classes, no aristocracy in this country.

We have, however, in recent years managed to pension the Federal judiciary, to pension the officers of the Army retired from service, to pension the officers of the Navy, to pension the officers of the marine service; and now there are pending before this House bills to pension twelve additional classes of people by putting them on the retired pension-list.

The whole of this means that there is to be established a class who are to be a privileged class, who are to live upon the labor of others. I ask this House if it is just in principle, because a citizen has received high honors and high emoluments, that therefore he and his family shall be pensioned upon the public Treasury? I ask if because he has been more fortunate than others, if because he has had superior position, social, political, military, or civil, this constitutes a reason for levying taxes upon the people to support him and his family when they are rendering no public service?

It is not to this particular case I am objecting. It is to the whole principle. I have not, I believe, voted for any case of this kind. I can not vote for a case of this kind, because I believe it to be violative of the principles and character of our Government and to be violative of the rules of right, unjust alike to all that are not pensioned.

It is said here that General Thomas died poor. Well, sir, thousands of men in this country die poor. It is said that it is desired his widow shall live in comfort. I wish that every widow in this land could live in comfort. But when you tax one part of the widows in this country to support another part, when you tax the poorer to support the richer, when you tax one part of the men in this country to support another part of the men in this country, when you tax the poorer for the benefit of those in a better position in life and society, I say it is a wrong, and it is a wrong that the American people should give attention to; because if these precedents should go on it will soon be the case that the parties who are benefited by this legislation and those interested in them will become an element so powerful as to create a privileged class, an order of drones upon society, who are to live upon the labor and enjoy the profits of the toil and sweat of those poorer and more suffering than themselves.

My hope, Mr. Speaker, is only in this five minutes, as far as I can, to direct the attention of this House, and if possible to direct the attention of the country, to the monstrous wrongs growing out of these precedents of paying people not for public services, but of pensioning them for life when they are rendering no public service, and of compelling people poorer than themselves to provide for them special and exclusive privileges.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRICE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] and the remaining one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. KING. I do not rise so much to oppose the pending measure as to call the attention of the House to a personal matter of fact. Yesterday this House took a recess until 10 o'clock this morning, for what purpose? For the purpose of considering the river and harbor bill. That, sir, among others, was the purpose of taking that recess, and now we are opposed by these pension bills. Do gentlemen who advocate this effort to strangle the river and harbor bill recognize the fact that this is bad faith? If this House is to be governed by anything in its deliberations, it must be governed by good faith. If we are to have no confidence in the pledges made between ourselves as to the discussion of great measures here, then certainly the public interests must suffer just in that proportion. I therefore appeal to gentlemen who are bringing forward these pension measures at this time to stop now and let us go back to where we began and proceed with the discussion of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOUK rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee has one minute.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, in one minute little can be said. It was my privilege to see and know a good deal of General Thomas during the war. I simply want to add to what other gentlemen have said here, that there were days, hours, and minutes as well, when even the life of this nation rested upon the action of that great man, and to refuse this tribute to his services by refusing to give this poor pittance to his wife would, I feel, be a national disgrace. That is all I have to say, as it is impossible to make a speech or recount his virtues in the time allotted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there was an understanding that the yeas and nays should be taken upon the passage of this bill, and of course that must be done if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] insists upon it; but I hope he will not insist, and that we shall now pass this bill, and proceed immediately to the consideration of other business.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRICE. The agreement was that the yeas and nays should be called on the passage of the bill, and I hope that we will immediately kill it and then go on with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill has been ordered to a third reading, and if the gentlemen intended to insist upon the understanding they ought to have made the point sooner; it is now too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that by agreement of the House the yeas and nays are to be called upon the passage of this bill. The question is now upon the passage of this bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] insists that the agreement of the House, in the nature of an order, that the yeas and nays shall be taken, shall be carried out, and the Chair can do nothing but execute the order of the House. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] has just insisted upon the execution of the order. It is not in the power of the Chair to change the order of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I insist that the understanding shall be carried out.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 144, nays 52, not voting 128: as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following-named members were announced from the Clerk's desk as paired, until further notice, on all political questions:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. COOK with Mr. LACEY.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. HEPBURN.

Mr. LAMB with Mr. KETCHAM.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. STORM with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. COBB with Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. PAIGE, with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

The following were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. FERRELL with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. DARGAN with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, was announced as paired with Mr. GIBSON on the bill granting a pension to the widow of General George H. Thomas.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIE LOUISE CRAVEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill coming over from last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1228) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be postponed for the time being, owing to the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] who is pressing the bill. I am opposed to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks that, on account of the absence of the gentleman from New York who has charge of this bill, it be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and pending that——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. The Chair is now trying to hear the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending that motion, I move that when the Committee of the Whole next enters upon the consideration of the river and harbor bill——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not want to be deprived of my right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not deprive the gentleman of any right, but will hear the motion already in process of statement.

Mr. WILLIS. That all debate upon the pending section and amendments thereto be limited to one hour and a half, with the understanding that an hour be given to the opponents and thirty minutes to the friends of the bill; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I make the point of order that we must take the vote on the Post-Office bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled that this is a prolongation of the session of Friday evening for pension bills. The order was that the Post-Office bill——

Mr. REED, of Maine. If this is a prolongation of Friday evening's session, then the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky can not be in order, because the business of the Friday evening session is limited by order of the House——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal shows that the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill was to be resumed after the reading of the Journal to-day. The Journal and the RECORD both so state it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then, if the Chair holds this is a prolongation of last night's session, nothing is in order except pension bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that everything that has come over from the Committee of the Whole House has been disposed of.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Chair holds this to be a prolongation of Friday night's session. Then nothing is in order but pension bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will state his point of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The point of order I make is this: the Chair has already decided, and repeated the decision, that this is only a prolongation of last night's session. By general consent, and under an order of the House, the business of that session is limited to pension bills of a certain class described in the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds, as it has held before, that this is a prolongation of the session of Friday evening for the completion of the work that came over under the operation of the previous question, and that under the rule this business can not be dispensed with except by unanimous consent. That work has now been completed, and there is nothing left upon which the previous question was in operation. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There is another bill that came over—the Thornburgh bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent that was passed over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there not one other?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk reports there is none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman, but first will state the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, which is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that, he moves that when the river and harbor bill shall be reached, all debate shall be limited to an hour and a half, with the understanding that one hour belongs to the opponents and thirty minutes to the friends of the measure. Pending that the gentleman from New York rises, as the Chair understands, for an inquiry.

Mr. HISCOCK. The inquiry I desire to make is this: is it not the order in reference to Friday evening sessions that no business shall be transacted except the consideration of pension bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled three times, and will rule again, that that was the only business in order until completed. It is completed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask to have the order read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the Clerk will report the order.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky by increasing the time to three hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I called the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky reminds the Chair of what it had for the instant forgotten, that he had demanded the previous question upon his motion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I did not hear that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had so stated it; and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Maine for the point of order. But the gentleman from Kentucky can not be swept off the floor after he has demanded the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I notice that he can not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He can not, because the rule will not permit it, nor will the Chair permit it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood that the committee will rise at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no such understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the previous question on his motion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is my motion ruled out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was never entertained by the Chair because the gentleman from Maine had not the floor to make it, the gentleman from Kentucky having demanded the previous question on his motion.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask whether if the order under which the session of last night was held has been executed, as I understand it has, and whether when there is no further business to be considered, we can go outside of that order so specific in its terms, and take up new business not connected with pensions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule for the third time on the same point of order substantially, and that is that the House having this morning completed the unfinished business coming over from last night's session under operation of the previous question, the work of that session has been finished and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask a question. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Thornburgh case went over, no quorum having appeared when the vote was taken.

Mr. KELLEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to lay that appeal upon the table.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Is it not too late to take an appeal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say no; and the gentleman from Kentucky moves to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. KELLEY. May I be heard to state the ground of my appeal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair waited to hear the gentleman until the gentleman from Kentucky had twice been recognized. The gentleman did not claim the floor. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WASHBURN. There was such a storm of disorder no one could be heard.

Mr. KELLEY. I can hear nothing that is going on, nor could I hear anything said by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair waited until the gentleman from Kentucky had twice been recognized to move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. KELLEY. I should have been pleased to have timed the period of the Chair's waiting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, to lay the appeal upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 132, noes 29.

Mr. KELLEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 132, noes 32.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. On what motion is that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, and pending that motion he moved that all debate be limited to an hour and a half, one hour to be given to the opponents of the measure and thirty minutes to its friends. It is on that motion the gentleman from Kentucky demands the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. The previous question then is on the motion to limit all debate.

Mr. ROWELL. Is that on all the sections or the pending section of the bill?

Mr. WILLIS. The pending section of the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There are twenty-seven pages of this section remaining; and do I understand the time of an hour and a half is only to be given to the entire twenty-seven?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated as plainly as he can that the proposition limiting the debate applies to the section and all amendments thereto, and not to the number of pages.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask whether a few members who may happen to get the floor and occupy the hour in opposition to the bill on the first of the twenty-seven pages we would not then be compelled to vote on the other twenty-six pages without debate at all?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If we are required to do that then this is nothing better than a gag.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. Under the decision of the Chair, this being a continuance of last night's session, would it not be in order now to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar?

Mr. REAGAN. It is not a continuance of last night's session but of yesterday's session under the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's parliamentary inquiry does not apply to the present status of the business of the House.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that all debate upon the section and amendments be limited to one and one-half hours.

Mr. KELLEY. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 33 voting in favor thereof and 136 against the call.

Mr. KELLEY. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, 14 members only voting therefor.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was then agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to limit debate was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Under the ruling of the Chair that we were in continuation of last evening's session, I make the point of order that the only motion which is in order is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider pension claims upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILLIS. May I interrupt the gentleman from New York for a moment? I think I can make a statement that will satisfy him that his position is not a correct one.

On yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moved that private business for the day, that is the legislative business of Friday, being the Private Calendar, be dispensed with except at the evening session fixed for the consideration of pension bills. Now, at the session of last night for the consideration of pension bills there were some two or three pension bills reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole with the understanding that they should be considered in the House this morning when a quorum was present. These bills have been called up and disposed of. That leaves operative the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to dispense with private business, and consequently the continuation of Friday's session, according to the order of the House, is to be devoted to such other business as may be taken up.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to have the RECORD read to which the gentleman from Kentucky alluded, showing in any way that we have dispensed with the consideration of private business on Friday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York send to the desk any portion of the RECORD he desires to have read?

Mr. HISCOCK. I refer to that portion to which the gentleman from Kentucky has alluded.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I wish to inquire whether the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York has not been already decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has more than once decided the question of order; but the gentleman from New York calls for the reading of the proceedings of the House with reference to dispensing with private business for Friday.

Mr. HISCOCK. The only interest I feel in the matter is that if by unanimous consent we have a given session in which a certain class of business only can be transacted, it seems to me that such an agreement should not be violated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not made the ruling attributed to it by the gentleman from New York. The Chair ruled, as the RECORD and the Journal both show, that this is a prolongation of the session of last night for the consideration of such business as came over under the operation of the previous question. That business having been disposed of, the House is now in session, and the Chair thinks that the resolution to which the gentleman refers does not and can not apply longer to this session of the House.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order of the gentleman from New York, as the Chair has done repeatedly before this morning. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KELLEY rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to raise the point of order under the language of Rule XXVI, which provides that Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote; that this being the continuation of Friday's session, only such business is in order as that rule provides for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the order of business was set aside by a two-thirds vote of the House, as the RECORD and the Journal show.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The question I desire to raise is that the House having laid aside, by a two-thirds vote, private business on yesterday, and then having taken up the Post-Office appropriation bill, that that bill is in order now for disposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the Journal shows, by order of the House, that the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill is to be resumed after the reading of the Journal at the opening of the next day's proceedings. The Chair has no power to order the Journal to be read at this time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. By unanimous consent it could be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it requires unanimous consent to execute an order of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK May I ask to have the Journal read on this point to which the Chair refers?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the Chair will state that the Journal is not presumed to be made up until the close of the session of the day to which it relates, which day's session has not yet terminated.

Mr. HISCOCK. I could appeal from the decision of the Chair; but I appeal to gentlemen on the other side that they had better withhold the objection, because if an appeal is taken I should be allowed time to debate it, and it will perhaps save time to have it read.

Mr. WILLIS. I make no objection to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman knows it is impossible to order the Journal of this day's proceedings to be read, for the reason that this day's proceedings have not yet terminated.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I understand the Speaker to say that the Journal shows a fact. Now I think the House ought to be in possession of the information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair referred to the minutes of the proceedings taken during the day.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I desire that the minutes of the proceedings be read to show what the motion was and the action of the House upon it.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope consent may be had to reading that portion of the minutes which relates to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLEY. I understand I have been recognized by the Chair, but I have been taken off the floor by other gentlemen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report that portion of the minutes which has been indicated.

Mr. KELLEY. Have I been recognized by the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KELLEY. I was about to say what seems to me to be pertinent to this business. I had been assured by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], and it has somewhat controlled my conduct, that there had been a resolution passed which made it legitimate when pension bills had been exhausted to go on with general business. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] seems to have had the same impression and calls for the reading of that resolution. I can not refer to it, for I have it only on the report of the gentleman from Kentucky who is managing this bill. I ask him to state when the resolution was passed and what it was, so that it may be produced for the satisfaction of gentlemen who do not remember it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that unanimous consent has been given to read that portion of the minutes which refers to that action of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I merely wanted to know if it was the same thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read that portion of the minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports, and with the consideration of private business for to-day, not to dispense with the evening session for private bills; which said motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand, we are now in the evening session yet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. The Chair has ruled three times upon the point of order the gentleman from New York is now seeking to raise again. The Chair held and still holds that this morning at 10 o'clock the House met in prolongation of the session of last night until the unfinished business coming over therefrom under the operation of the previous question should be disposed of. That has been done. And the Chair again rules that this House has completed the work of last night's session, and the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state under the order of the House all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto has been limited to one hour and a half; one hour shall be given to the opponents of the bill and one half hour to the friends of the bill. The Chair desires further to state that but a part of the pending section has been read, and that, in the opinion of the Chair, the remainder of it ought to be read before that debate shall be begun.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I would inquire whether in the execution of the order to which the Chair has just adverted it would be necessary to make points of order pending the reading of the section which the Chair has just ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, points of order can not properly be raised upon the section until the section shall have been read, and unless objection is made the Chair will allow points of order to be raised after the reading of the section.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. There being many paragraphs to this section, I submit to the Chair that if they be read through without objection, the right to amend whenever a paragraph is read would be lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the reading is simply to place the section before the committee for consideration, and that every item in it will then be subject to a point of order, or to amendment; there being no limitation except that prescribed by the House of one hour and a half for debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest as a matter of convenience that the section might be read by paragraphs after general debate is closed, for the purpose of amendments and points of order. And I suggest further that the reading of the whole section be omitted until general debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that it would be anomalous to debate a section that has not been read.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that it be understood that the section has had its first reading.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think it should be read. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make this inquiry: While there is to be debate for one hour to the opponents of the bill and thirty minutes to its friends, I understand nevertheless that debate is to be under the five-minute rule. It is not general debate. It seems, therefore, to me that this debate should be indulged in as we are proceeding with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. And I will say further that I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], who has charge of the bill, to indicate that he thought that was the proper course to be pursued.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The effect of that would be to exhaust debate on a portion only of the paragraphs, and there would be no debate at all on the subsequent paragraphs of the section.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand now, the whole section is to be read, and debate is to take place under the five-minute rule as the section is read by paragraphs.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the reading of the section under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WAIT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WAIT. If a member of this House offers an amendment to the bill, is he not to have time to explain that amendment and show to the House why that amendment should be agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this anomalous condition of things exists: General debate on the bill was limited and concluded; after the bill had been acted upon under the five-minute rule the House determined to conclude all debate on the pending section, including all these paragraphs, in one hour and a half. Taking the two things together, the Chair thinks that hour and a half will be treated as divided into periods of five minutes, sixty of the minutes to be given to the opponents of the bill and thirty minutes to those in favor of it.

Mr. WAIT. Then, as I understand the Chair, if a gentleman offers an amendment to the bill after the sixty minutes is exhausted his amendment comes before the House without his having an opportunity to explain or debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's understanding is perfect. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAIT. Then if a member is so unfortunate as to present an amendment after the sixty minutes for debate is exhausted he is to have no opportunity to explain its bearing or effect or the importance of it to the section of country he represents. I can only say that I do not think that course will facilitate the passage of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to know whether, when the reading of the bill is completed, an amendment to any part of the bill which is now to be considered and to be read will be in order during the progress of the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is limited simply on the pending section.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then will an amendment be in order during the progress of the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see why it may not be.

Mr. DINGLEY. I so understand, and I wish to have it distinctly understood that an amendment may be offered at any time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the hour which is to be given in the discussion to the opponents of this bill shall be distributed so that thirty minutes of it may be devoted to that part of the bill which contains the appropriation for the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no control of that matter.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose we can make an arrangement here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going on to say that if gentlemen will agree upon a gentleman whom the Chair can recognize to parcel out the time on that side the Chair will recognize him, and such an arrangement would be very agreeable to the Chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should be entirely willing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] should have the distribution of the time.

Mr. YOUNG. I am opposed to that. Mr. BAYNE is in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is entirely willing that any gentleman shall be designated.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, that side of the House (if there is to be a division by political lines) has occupied a good deal of the time that has been devoted to the discussion of this bill, and I think it is but fair that gentlemen who desire to offer amendments and have been endeavoring to do so ever since the bill has been under discussion, should have some control of the time to be devoted to debate.

Mr. WASHBURN and several other gentlemen called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the reading of the pending section.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I think some arrangement can be made such as I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to make a suggestion? It will take from ten to fifteen minutes to read this section of the bill, and during that time an arrangement can be entered into and the Chair informed of it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I would suggest right here that Mr. REED, of Maine, shall take charge of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and Mr. MCMILLIN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. VEST, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. MANDERSON.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1884, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, but that the eight accompanying memoirs be printed in quarto form, and that 4,500 additional copies of the report and memoirs be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the National Academy of Sciences.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of carrying out the foregoing provisions the Secretary of War shall, immediately upon the passage of this act, engage the services of James B. Eads as advisory engineer in the construction of said works, whose duty it shall be to prepare the plans, specifications, and estimates, and to make the necessary recommendations therefor, and to exercise a general supervision during the progress of the work; and for his services he shall receive the sum of $5,000 per annum, and the further sum of $3,000 for every additional foot of channel depth that may be secured: Provided, however, That no part of said sums of $3,000 for channel depths shall be due or paid until twenty-five feet of navigable depth of water throughout the channel shall have been obtained: And provided further, That said $3,000 payments shall be made by the Secretary of War when due, only on the certified statements of the Superintendent of the Geodetic and Coast Survey, whose duty it shall be to establish the plane of reference at mean low tide in the harbor of Galveston, and to survey and measure from said plane the depths of channel from time to time, and to promptly furnish to said Eads, when requested, such information regarding the depths of channel thus ascertained by his said surveys; and the compensation to said Eads above provided for shall be paid to him by the Secretary of War out of the sums appropriated by Congress from time to time for the improvement of Galveston Harbor and channel.

The Secretary of War shall detail for said works on Galveston Harbor and channel such officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army as he may deem necessary to disburse the funds and make the contracts and purchases incident thereto; and the officers in charge of said works shall make reports to the Secretary of War, as he may prescribe, of the progress of said works, and of their proceedings and expenditures, which shall be by him submitted to Congress at its regular meetings in December of each year; and said Eads shall report to the Secretary of War the yearly operations, plans, and estimates for this work, to be submitted by him in like manner to Congress.

It shall be the duty of the Superintendent of the Geodetic and Coast Survey, immediately after the passage of this act, if in the judgment of the Secretary of War it be necessary, to cause a survey to be made of the Galveston Bar and Harbor and adjacent waters. After the completion of such survey full and complete charts of the same shall be made, upon which shall be clearly shown the 30-foot contour line within the harbor and the 30-foot contour-line in the Gulf of Mexico. Said charts shall also show the location and depths of the best available channel existing at the date of such survey between the two contour lines aforesaid. The channel to be obtained by said Eads may be located by him on any lines between said 30-foot contours of the harbor and the Gulf that he may determine upon; and said contour lines, and the depths of water upon the bar in the best available channel then existing as aforesaid, as laid down on said charts and measured from said plane of mean low tide, shall be fixed and final as affecting all questions between the Government and said Eads as to the measurements of channel depths for payments of his services or otherwise. Three of said charts, when completed, shall be duly certified by said superintendent, one of which shall be retained in his office, another shall be given to said Eads, and the third transmitted to the Secretary of War. And the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used out of the money hereinafter appropriated for the improvement of Galveston Harbor to defray the expense of the aforesaid survey and measurement.

The material and plant belonging to the Government at Galveston, together with the jetty and other works now in progress, may be removed or used in carrying out the provisions of this act; and the sum of $750,000 is hereby appropriated to commence said improvement, to be immediately available.

The sum of $15,000 appropriated by the act of July 5, 1884, for the survey of the Missouri River above the falls are hereby required to be used in the survey of said river from its mouth to its headwaters.

For continuation of surveys of the Missouri River from its mouth to its headwaters, now in progress; to make additional surveys and examinations of said river and its tributaries; and to make such additional examinations and investigations, topographical, hydrographical, and hydrometrical, as are necessary for maturing a plan for the permanent improvement of the entire river, $50,000.

For removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions from the Missouri River, $30,000.

The sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for correcting the regimen and giving stability to the bank of the Missouri River along the Government reservation at or near Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the supervision and direction of the Missouri River Commission: Provided, That this specific appropriation shall not be so construed as to conclude or prohibit the Missouri River Commission from using more money for said purpose, if in their judgment necessary, from the general appropriation herein made for the improvement of the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City.

Mr. WAIT (before the reading had been concluded). I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] is out of order. The reading of the section has not yet been concluded.

Mr. WAIT. Very well. I only wanted to be in time, as it appeared under the ruling of the Chair we would have so little time for discussion.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but before it was concluded,

Mr. SINGLETON said: I desire to offer an amendment to come in at line 658.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not in order till the whole section shall have been read.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but was interrupted by

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, who said: I desire at this point to inquire whether it is the understanding that points of order may be made after the entire section has been read?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NICHOLLS in the chair). That is the understanding.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If that is the understanding, I will forbear to make a point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). During the confusion when the House first went into Committee of the Whole all the members may not have heard the statement of the Chair that all points of order could be made after the reading of the whole section, so that the reading might continue without interruption.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then I would inquire whether there will be any order in which points of order are to be raised, or can any of them be raised immediately after the reading of the section?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a matter for arrangement; but the Chair would suggest, as upon points of order time is sometimes taken in discussing the merits, it might be better perhaps to reserve points of order until the expiration of the hour and a half limited for debate.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph now about to be read—the paragraph in regard to the Hennepin Canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will note it; but to prevent misunderstanding from this reservation the Chair desires to say that there need not be any reservation of points of order until the reading of the section is completed.

Mr. REAGAN. As I understand, the reading of this whole section is to bring it before the House——

The CHAIRMAN. That is the object.

Mr. REAGAN. But the reading by clauses, as I understand, opens each clause to amendment, whether there be debate or not, and to points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is to be no further reading of this section by clauses.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it would be a convenient mode of procedure to have points of order disposed of before the section is disposed of on its merits, because if points of order are sustained it will greatly simplify perhaps the duties of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That suggestion may be a very good one; but the Chair desires to say it will be better, after this statement, to finish the reading of the whole section, and then the consideration of what is to be done can be resumed.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky [interrupting the reading]. I desire to to offer an amendment to line 926.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not in order until the section has been read.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. And then in what order?

The CHAIRMAN. That will be ascertained after the section shall have been read.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I simply did not want to lose the right to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will lose no rights.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the section.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. WILLIS. I have some committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to have the order of business understood. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the Chair now hear points of order to be raised on this section? That seems to be the first thing in order, unless some other arrangement be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest there may be amendments offered, which will obviate points of order that would otherwise be raised. Therefore the amendments had better be read and pending; and I submit that amendments proposed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should be first entertained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair first desires to let the committee understand the exact situation. All debate on this section is limited to an hour and a half, one-half hour to the friends and one hour to the opponents of the bill.

The Chair undertook to have that time parceled out by the gentlemen, who could arrange it in private. They failed to do so. Gentlemen have come to the Chair and asked their names be taken down for time until 12. Gentlemen's names have been put down in opposition to the bill, and six gentlemen's names have been put down as the friends of the bill. If these gentlemen have the time, five minutes apiece, they will take all the time, and all other amendments except those offered by them will be without debate either for or against.

But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] makes what the Chair supposes a good suggestion, that these amendments might now be read, in order that the committee in the discussion may understand what are the things likely to be voted on.

The only other question which remains for the committee to determine is whether points of order will be heard or whether they will be also postponed at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas until after the amendments shall have been read, the idea being as expressed by him that the reading of the amendments may obviate some points of order.

Mr. KEIFER. In order to reach a point where there will be an end to points of order and an end to amendments, I suggest that the bill by the direction of the Chair, and I think the committee will acquiesce in it, be gone over by paragraph, and as each paragraph is reached, should amendments be made, the discussion shall go on until all the time has been taken up. After that debate will not be in order, but it will be in order to make points of order. If you go back and forth over it you will never get through.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman understands me, I think, in a degree. My suggestion is that these amendments be read and considered as pending.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all right. But everybody will agree you must go over it by paragraph or you will never get through with it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask the Chair whether we are to understand the time for debate has already been pre-empted by those who have sent their names to the Chair, and that no others can be recognized to speak for or against the bill or upon amendments which may be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states the situation: simply to obviate embarrassment he tried to have an arrangement made, but that was not agreed to. Gentlemen from either side have declined to enter into any arrangement. All the Chair could do, therefore, when gentlemen asked for recognition was to put down their names. He has such list, but whether he will recognize it or not is for future consideration. If the Chair should recognize gentlemen to speak on individual amendments as offered, then the condition of things would be that there would be debate on individual amendments which would exhaust the hour and a half, and there would be no general debate during that hour and a half. The Chair understood this anomalous condition to be a new order for general debate on the bill, and that general debate was to be parceled out five minutes at a time. Therefore by the very order, as the Chair understands, there will be no time allowed for discussion on amendments except on amendments made by the gentleman who shall first obtain the floor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the Chair be controlled——

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a word. It seems to me exceedingly unjust before amendments are submitted the Chair should determine who shall be recognized. It may be possible——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no determination on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know, when the Chair will hear me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is simply stating the embarrassment he feels in trying to put a bushel into a peck measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rulings of the Chair generally on bills analogous to this, he has held that the discussion on a section, it having been read, waives the right to make points of order on that section. Now, by reason of the action yesterday we are in this anomalous condition, one I regret the more I think of it, that if we make amendments to that portion of the bill against which points of order can be made and they are discussed, I wish to know whether we are precluded from making points of order against paragraphs further on and which are subject to points of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee that this debate in no wise limits debate on points of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But does it preclude the possibility of raising a point of order when paragraphs to which they apply shall have been reached?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will reply, no paragraphs will be reached except by unanimous consent when the section shall be reread by paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that the House adopt this line of policy: That the hour and a half debate shall be first exhausted before points of order shall be entertained, because debate will not cut off points of order, but if they are raised during this hour and a half there will doubtless be confusion. By postponing the points of order until the hour and a half shall have been exhausted, then the points of order can be discussed as they are raised from time to time until disposed of.

Mr. REAGAN. But if my suggestion is adopted the debate on points of order may be avoided in many instances, because the amendments which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors propose may obviate the necessity of making points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to the House.

The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all points of order may be postponed and not made until after the hour and a half of debate shall have been made.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to that—because we will be debating and not know what we are talking about—for the reason that the modifications of the bill suggested by the committee may obviate the points of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In order to save time I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the regular order then is the hearing of points of order.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman I wish to make a point of order——

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to know whether or not unanimous consent has been asked that this section be read by paragraphs and considered?

Mr. KEIFER. Subject to points of order and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman if desired.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask then, Mr. Chairman, in order that the remaining portion of the bill may be considered and with some hope of reaching a satisfactory conclusion, that it shall be read by paragraphs, and as the paragraphs are read points of order may be made upon them, amendments offered and be pending in their regular order.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. That would facilitate business.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Can we have debate under the five-minute rule under that arrangement?

Mr. KEIFER. Of course, until the hour and a half is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state before putting the question, that all the time taken up in the discussion of points of order would be deducted, and the Chair would allow one and one-half hours for the discussion of other matters in accordance with the agreement in the House.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I insist that I cannot be taken from the floor by a motion of that kind. I am willing to yield for any accommodation of this matter, but I do object that the debate on points of order shall be taken out of the hour and a half allowed for discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that it would not; that that time would be deducted, leaving the hour and a half for the discussion, in accordance with the order of the House. Does the gentleman yield for the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I am willing that any arrangement shall be made for the accommodation of the business of the House, provided I do not lose my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will see that the gentleman does not lose his rights.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the reading of this section be resumed at the point where the reading ceased at the last sitting, and that as each paragraph is read points of order may be made or amendments offered thereto.

Mr. KEIFER. And also debate within the time specified.

Mr. REAGAN. That would exclude the amendments to the latter part of the bill to which the gentleman from New York has reference. If general consent is given that the committee shall present their amendments and they be read and then points of order submitted and disposed of, we will have no trouble. But this proposition would exhaust the time to no purpose. They will be limited to particular clauses as they are reached; but if you exhaust the time, as would probably be the case under the arrangement suggested, on the first two or three clauses, you deprive the gentleman from New York and others of the consideration of amendments which they wish to offer to the final clauses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the result of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would, in his judgment, be to exhaust the hour and a half on the first ten or fifteen amendments.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then I object to it.

Mr. BAYNE. Before objection is made I want to interpose a word. I made this suggestion upon an intimation given by the Chair that twelve names had been placed upon a slip of paper there at the desk of persons who were opposed to the bill and six who were favorable to it, and that no other could be recognized for the purpose of debate except the persons there named or those who submitted amendments. I perceive fully the difficulty which the Chair suggests if that course is to be pursued; and I take it the Chair would shut off debate except as to those who would be recognized for the purpose of debate in the manner I have suggested. I do not know, of course, how these recognitions will be arranged.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that the gentleman who offers the proposition to amend the first paragraph would be recognized for the purpose of making a speech and might address himself to any other paragraph that he saw proper, the Chair being unable to control him unless the question of order was raised.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I withdraw the request.

Mr. PERKINS. Allow me to make a suggestion which I think will obviate the difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest that we adopt the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, except that the amendments shall not be debated. Points of order may be discussed and amendments offered, but not debated until the entire section shall have been read through.

Mr. WILLIS. That I think is a sensible suggestion.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I should object to that as I now understand it.

Mr. PERKINS. My suggestion is to allow the amendments to be offered and be pending, but not debated until the entire section has been gone through with.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The amendments are all to be considered as pending?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; but not to be voted on or debated until points of order are disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a good suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition. The proposition now made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is that the section be reread by paragraphs; that as each paragraph is read all amendments thereto be proposed without debate; that all points of order be raised and remain without debate——

Mr. PERKINS. That the points of order be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. That points of order be discussed and disposed of. Is unanimous consent given to that proposition?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I object to that proposition. As I understand it, if the amendments are voted down you can not then substitute another amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes, you can.

Mr. MOULTON. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no power of avoiding the offering of amendments to any paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I understood from the statement made by the Chair that according to this proposition we would offer our amendments and they would all be pending; and I supposed that after the paragraph was passed the point would be raised that it could not be returned to for the purpose of offering another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A paragraph can not in parliamentary language be considered as passed while there is a pending amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then when that is voted down would it be in order to offer another?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order to offer as many as the gentleman wished.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I have no objection to the proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to know if I understand the Chair correctly that if one amendment is voted down you can then substitute another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees no reason why if an amendment is voted down another amendment to the same paragraph may not be offered.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then it is all right.

Mr. STONE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. We can not hear what is being said.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will suspend until order is restored. The committee will come to order.

Mr. STONE. I make this point: I understand the House has voted to give an hour and a half of debate on the pending section. But the House has not voted as to how that hour and a half shall be distributed. Now, if you take this section up as you propose to do and proceed with the consideration of it by paragraphs, when a particular paragraph is under consideration a member on this floor under the arrangement proposed can not take a part of the hour and a half to discuss that part of the section which is under consideration. In other words, the question is, how are we to reconcile the order the House has given that an hour and a half shall be allowed for debate on this section with an opportunity to members to take part of that hour and a half in discussing the particular paragraph which for the time being happens to be under consideration? That is the point I wish to raise. If that be competent, then I submit it will be competent for a member to take some portion of the hour and a half to deal with the particular paragraph, and then in effect that particular paragraph will be debated as well as amended.

Mr. BAYNE. I reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts that if the plan suggested be adopted an amendment may be proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts; the amendment will not be voted on at the time it is proposed; but when the gentleman comes to be recognized for debate he can then advocate that amendment, if he happens to be among the number of the gentlemen on the list for recognition. I think that settles it.

Mr. STONE. I do not consider that is any answer to my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition, as the Chair understands it, is a request for unanimous consent that the section be reread by paragraphs; that when so read amendments may be offered and points of order raised; that there shall be then no debate on amendments offered, but there shall be debate on the points of order raised; the time consumed on the point of order not to be counted out of the time limited for debate on the section by the House. Is there objection to that arrangement?

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, objected. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to hear any suggestions on points of order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] is recognized.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Did I correctly understand the Chair to state that the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] was that afterward the amendments might be debated at the close of the reading of the section or paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that after the close of reading the section, and after the disposition of the points of order, there would be an hour and a half for debate. What will be debated in that hour and a half the Chair does not know.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I withdraw my objection to the proposed arrangement.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to inquire whether a motion would now be in order to proceed according to the method which has been suggested and to which objection was made by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER], the objection of the gentleman from Kentucky having been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask again, is there objection to the mode of procedure suggested by the gentleman from Kansas? The Chair will restate it: That the Clerk shall begin to reread the section at the paragraph where he left off when it was being read by paragraphs for amendment; that he shall read it by paragraphs, and that amendments be offered to each paragraph when its reading is concluded, and that points of order may be raised on each paragraph when its reading is concluded; that there shall be no debate upon amendments offered, but there shall be debate on points of order offered; that after all of the amendments shall have been submitted the debate of one hour and a half according to the order of the House shall begin. The Chair again asks, is there objection?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky renews his objection, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] will proceed upon his point of order.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against that part of the bill which begins on line 813 and ends with line 842. The confusion which has taken place here in Committee of the Whole in the effort to execute the order of the House limiting debate upon this entire section before it was read is a fitting illustration of the trouble which always comes from a suspension of the rules or a departure from the settled practice of the House. To the better judgment of the House on the point of order against that action I submit, but under the permission now given I desire to appeal to the rules, I desire now again to call the attention of the House to the importance of preserving the rules in their integrity and of maintaining inviolate the boundaries which mark the partition of power between the different committees of this House.

There is a rule which specifies the different committees of this House, and there is a general rule of the House that requires that everything shall be done, in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, upon the reports of these committees, which stand as referees, if I may use a judicial illustration. One of those committees is a committee on rivers and harbors; another is a committee on railways and canals. I submit that the lines in this bill to which I have called attention confuse the jurisdictions of the two committees I have named and blend them in one measure. That is my first point of order, and it is a point which goes to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The next point of order which I make is akin to it, and is a question of privilege for the committee. I read from paragraph 8 of Rule XI, which not only defines the jurisdiction of the committee as I have stated it, but adds this matter of privilege to that committee:

> And the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills.

Under that clause of the rule which gives the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the privilege to come in here and report a bill on rivers and harbors the same as the Committee on Appropriations can do with a general appropriation bill, where do gentlemen find the power or authority conferred upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report a proposition to construct a canal? Now, mark my proposition, Mr. Chairman: In the first place, on the question of jurisdiction, I demur to this paragraph of the bill as outside of the power of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and in the next place I say that when they reported this bill, or this paragraph in the bill, they exceeded their parliamentary privilege, which is a special privilege and can not be extended by them in any way—the House itself could not extend it, except by a two-thirds vote on a proposition to amend or suspend the rules.

My next point of order is (not intending to consume the time of the committee by a needless amplification of these considerations, which I know are entirely familiar to members of the House) an appeal to another rule of the House which I will now read, and I ask the attention of the Chair:

> No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the committee.

I find in the files of the House a bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and calendared as House bill 1975, entitled "A bill to provide for the construction of the Michigan and Mississippi River Canal and to cheapen transportation." On reading that bill it will be found that not only the substance of it, but the bill literally, with the exception of two or three sections at the end, is copied into the provision of the river and harbor bill to which I have called attention and upon which I have made this point of order. If the Chair, or any gentleman interested in the question, will examine that bill he will find that it is grafted literally, word by word, into the provision of the river and harbor bill as to which I have raised the point of order. Finally, Mr. Chairman, I revert to that well-worn point of objection, that this is new legislation, increasing the amount of expenditure covered by the bill, and doing it by a clause not germane to the bill. I now take leave of this subject by saying that under the partition of power among the committees of this House to which I have referred a proposition of this kind is no more germane to this bill than it would be for the Rivers and Harbors Committee to report a bill to construct an elevated railway from ocean to ocean or to construct the Nicaragua ship canal, or to graft upon this bill the interstate-commerce bill reported by the Committee on Commerce.

I have now briefly and succinctly stated the objections which I have, under the rules, to the consideration of the lines of this bill which I have specified, and I ask that they be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as to the objection last made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] it certainly can not apply to this bill. This is not an amendment to the river and harbor bill; this is part of an original bill reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the improvement of rivers and harbors and for other purposes. The paragraph of Rule XXI to which the gentleman from Georgia referred relates to amendments offered to bills and resolutions under consideration in the House. The paragraph of the rule read by him is as follows:

> No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

Now, if this provision were not in the bill, and I should propose it as an amendment, then I concede the point of order would be well taken. But most assuredly it is not well taken when this is an original bill reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and every proposition in it is a part of the bill.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Does not the gentleman perceive that the narrow construction which he now gives to the rule just cited would land him at this conclusion—that the Committee of the Whole has less power than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Not by any manner of means. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the embarrassment suggested at all. This bill was reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; the House received it, and referred it to the Committee of the Whole for the express purpose of its consideration, including every one of its provisions.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. But the gentleman forgets that points of order were reserved.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I understand that perfectly well. But what points of order could possibly be reserved?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. That is the question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. As to the question of jurisdiction, it may be that if this question had been raised at the proper time, when the bill was reported from the committee to the House, it would then have been competent to raise the question. The only instance in which, so far as I am aware, a question of this kind was raised and sustained is the one referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] in the last session of Congress. In that case Mr. Andrew Johnson, then a Representative from the State of Tennessee, reported from a committee on expenditures in one of the Departments a bill to grant homesteads. The point or order was raised at that time that the committee reporting the bill had no jurisdiction to report the bill, and that point was sustained. But suppose instead of that point being raised and sustained the House by its own action had referred the bill to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it, would not any question of jurisdiction have been thereby waived?

Mr. Chairman, this question was decided at the last session of Congress by the then chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who held that the question of jurisdiction was waived by reason of the bill having been referred to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of its consideration. On that ground the point of order was overruled. An apr peal was taken; and the Committee of the Whole sustained the Chain his ruling.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois will permit me to ask him one question. Does he not see that if the construction for which he contends were placed upon the reference of a bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole, it would virtually prevent the sustaining of any point of order upon anything in the bill after it had been referred to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think there is no point of order that can be raised, unless it be raised under the rules of the House; and when you come to ascertain what points of order can be raised, they are confined to bills of a different character from this one. This is an original bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. As the gentleman from Illinois refers to a ruling made on this subject last session, I wish to inquire whether that ruling was not based upon the ground that the bill had been referred to the Committee of the Whole without any reservation of points of order?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. No, sir; I submit not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think if the gentleman will examine that decision he will find that such was the case.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The point of order was raised at the last session. I discussed it, and it was discussed by other gentlemen. I took the ground that when the House referred that bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it referred it to that committee for the purpose of consideration, and that it was too late to raise the question of jurisdiction after it had been so referred. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] and my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] also took the same position. I desire to refer the Chair to the decision then made.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman proposes to read from the RECORD he will oblige the Chair by naming the page and volume.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I will do so. I read from page 5014 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last session, being volume 68:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark simply in reference to this that the paragraph objected to is not an amendment, but is a part of the original bill, and therefore obviously not obnoxious to the clause of the rule which has just been read.

With reference to the third ground, the want of original jurisdiction in the Committee on River and Harbors, the Chair will say this: the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is asked to withhold from the consideration of the committee a particular clause in an original bill on the ground that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors reporting the bill to the House did not have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the particular clause. In the view which the chairman of this Committee of the Whole takes of the question it is not necessary to decide whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this particular clause or not. Whether it originally possessed that jurisdiction it is not necessary for the Chair to decide in the view which he takes of this question. Hence the Chair will not take the time to express any opinion in reference to it.

Now, this is the point to which I ask particular attention:

The view of the Chair is this: The action of the House in submitting this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration does not leave it within the province of the Chair to pass upon the question of original jurisdiction in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The bill has been committed to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of consideration, and the chairman of this committee believes that he is but executing the order of the House when he decides that the bill shall be considered. The committal of the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the Chair thinks was not a submission to the committee of the question whether or not the bill should be considered, but an express direction to the committee to consider the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Whose ruling is that?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The chairman at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But who was the chairman?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. WELLBORN, of Texas. He continues:

To hold that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on a point of order could go back and inquire into asserted irregularities and errors in the stages of the bill which preceded its reference to the Committee of the Whole would be either to clothe the chairman of the Committee of the Whole with power to review and reverse the order of the House in the matter of the reference or place the House in the anomalous position of having expressly directed the Committee of the Whole to do a particular thing and at the same time left the committee to determine whether the thing directed should be done or not.

Now, that is the decision of the chairman, and I maintain there was nothing said by the chairman to the contrary of that. It is like a lawyer who comes into court and omits to put in his plea in abatement or to the jurisdiction of the court at the proper time. He waives the question of jurisdiction by omitting to do it, and there is no rule of this House except, as I think, the rules which apply to general appropriation bills—and this is not a general appropriation bill—which would justify the chairman in ruling out this provision of the bill.

I want to say further, Mr. Chairman—I said before I did not know whether with propriety or not, but this whole question was discussed at length in the Senate, and upon a yea-and-nay vote they held a provision similar to this was not only in order but was germane to the bill.

In regard to the general remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] I want to say, if I may be permitted to do so, there is not a canal in the country which was constructed by the aid of the General Government that has not been carried on under river and harbor bills. We are constructing the Muscle Shoals Canal on the Tennessee River; we are constructing a canal around the Cascades of the Columbia River; the Sault Sainte Marie Canal has been completed; but all these canals have been constructed and taken care of under river and harbor bills. What gentlemen want is this: that we shall be relegated to a committee that never reported a bill hardly in all its existence which has had the consideration and determination of the House of Representatives. You may take the history of the Committee on Railways and Canals, and I think they never originated or reported a bill of any importance that has received consideration at the hands of Congress. That is what gentlemen wish to do, to drive us to a course where we could never get any consideration.

I say there is no more impropriety, that it is just as germane to this bill to incorporate a provision like this in it as it is to construct a canal anywhere else in any other part of the country; and that, sir, we are doing and have been doing, and there are provisions of that character in this bill.

I know it was regarded as a narrow view before, but I say this is the improvement of a river in the highest and best sense of the term. It makes the river more valuable and more useful to the people interested in it.

I have already said, Mr. Chairman, this question was decided at the last session of Congress. An appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, and that decision was sustained, I am told by my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], by 103 ayes to 63 noes, the vote being taken by tellers. So it seems to me this committee should not reverse its own decisions. It was this very House of Representatives in Committee of the Whole which sustained the chairman in his decision at that time and by a very decided vote.

I wish to say, in addition to that fact, that since then there have been petitions referred in the ordinary and usual way to this committee, thereby giving it jurisdiction. It has never been denied that it was competent for the House to refer petitions to any committee and thereby vest it with jurisdiction. Petitions have been received and referred, as will be seen by reference to the RECORD, asking for the consideration of this canal. So that the point of order can not be based on the ground that there has been no reference of any petition to the committee authorizing its action. I repeat, therefore, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this question was decided at the last session of Congress.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the decision of the point of order made by the Chair at the last session of Congress was placed distinctly on the ground that points of order were not reserved on the bill. The question is now presented upon a bill where points of order were expressly reserved when the order was asked for referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole, and in order that the House may hear the language of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole when the question was decided I ask the paragraph marked be read at the Clerk's desk. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] read from the remarks of the chairman, but stopped before he got down to that point.

The Clerk read as follows:

The decision of the Chair is based on the assumption that points of order were not reserved upon the bill when it was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OATES. Now touching the question of jurisdiction I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 8 of section 9, which defines the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and also to paragraph 17 of the same section, which defines the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railways and Canals. Now will the Clerk read from the rule as marked?

The Clerk read as follows:

8. To the improvement of rivers and harbors: to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have the same privilege in reporting bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting general appropriation bills;

17. To railways and canals, other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. OATES. The bill was introduced, as has been stated, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress and referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. Although the title differed somewhat the substance is the same.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OATES. For what purpose?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. To read further from the remarks of the chairman on the occasion to which I have referred.

Mr. OATES. Not at present. I merely asked that the decision of the chairman be read and the ground upon which he based the decision, and I will not yield now for any further reading.

Not only was the bill referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, but that committee reported that bill, report No. 339, which is now upon the Calendar.

It is important, sir, that we shall maintain the distinction in regard to the jurisdiction between these committees. The jurisdiction attaching in this matter, having by an order of the House been properly made under the rule, obtains; and under the rule the jurisdiction of that Committee on Railways and Canals still continues over the subject-matter. Unless, therefore, there was a reference, mark you, under that rule of this House, or by a vote of the House, of this matter, thereby conferring jurisdiction upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I submit that that committee has not jurisdiction.

The gentleman from Illinois contends that petitions were referred to that committee touching this canal. Well, sir, if petitions, which the Chair knows under the rule are placed merely in the petition-box and their reference is a mere clerical matter under the rule, happen to be sent to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, all that can be said is that it was an improper reference, and in the absence of a vote of the House thus directing, jurisdiction would not be thereby conferred upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois to have the further remarks of the chairman at the last session, to which he referred, read.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. On page 5015 it will be found——

Mr. OATES. Let it be read from the desk.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read what is marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair meant simply this: That if points of order had been reserved upon this bill at the time it was committed to this Committee of the Whole—in other words, if it had been put in the custody of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with points of order reserved—then the most that could be done, and whether this could be properly done or not the Chair doubts, would be to report this particular point of order back for decision by the House. But the Chair is advised that no such reservation of points of order was made; and the Chair, while he would be quite willing to have the opinion of the Speaker of the House on the question, is confronted with the discharge of a plain duty—the duty of deciding the question—and can not rightfully shift this responsibility which the rules place upon him.

Mr. OATES. Now, that is perfectly consistent with the portion of the decision of the chairman during the last session which I had read a short time ago.

I have but a word further to add, and that by way of repetition. I say that the jurisdiction of the subject-matter here involved having been placed in the hands of another committee of this House, under the rules of the House jurisdiction of it can not attach in the hands of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by the mere placing of the petition or petitions in the box and their reference under the rules of the House, which is evidently an erroneous reference, because those petitions do not belong to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If this is a subject touching a canal, it belongs to the Committee on Railways and Canals; and unless a petition or a bill covering this matter was referred by a vote of this House to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or such reference made by the Speaker of the House in open House, I submit that it has no jurisdiction. It can not in the nature of things have jurisdiction by a reference through the petition-box because at the instance of some person interested perhaps in the measure there be indorsed upon the petition a request that it should go to that committee. Such a reference could not give jurisdiction.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, being somewhat interested in this enterprise I hope I will be excused if I state narratively and succinctly what has been done, I having been the author of the action.

I do not believe it is necessary for me to say to this House as a humble representative of my people that whatever action I may have taken, whether regular or irregular, was taken in accordance with their wish and as they believe in the interest of the commerce of the Northwest, which is much interested in this great improvement. It is true, as stated, that I introduced the bill and referred it to the Committee on Railways and Canals. Why did I do so? Is it because, as stated by some gentlemen on this floor, that I supposed there was no other remedy? I did it believing that it was the best; simply because I thought we could get a larger appropriation for the construction of the Hennepin Canal by a report from that committee than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but what are the facts? While I introduced that bill in December a year ago, and was pleased to note that it was reported in January following, and found a place upon the Calendar christened No. 20, I am sorry to say that its position to-day is the same upon the Calendar that it was on the 20th day of last January a year ago. Now, then, what next?

When I learned last June that there was no possibility of getting independent action I then went before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and they saw proper to give it consideration and took jurisdiction, as it was decided by this House in its last session that it might do, and they incorporated it in the river and harbor bill. It was stricken out. I will not occupy the time of the House by reciting the action of the committee or how it was taken out of the river and harbor bill, because it is before you on the record and you can read and perhaps more fairly understand the question from that reading than from any statement that I could give from memory. But what I do desire to say is this, that notwithstanding this House decided at the last session that the point of order was not well taken, the position then was stronger on the part of the opponents of the measure than they can make now. And why? Since that time memorials and petitions from various cities have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that reference, I am proud to say, was made by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether those references were through the petition-box.

Mr. MURPHY. Those references were through the petition-box, and for the reason that that course was required by the rule of the House. I had to take the rule of the House to guide my action; I knew of no other.

Why did I refer those petitions to that committee if it was not for the purpose of consideration? And did I not act as required by the rule prescribed by this House? If I acted in any other way, I do not know it. If I knew of any other way in which I should have acted, I would have so acted. If I am wrong, then the rule is wrong and not my action.

I believe I might rest my case entirely upon that; but I want to say something further to the Chair. I have here a list of some eight canals: the Louisville and Pittsburgh Canal, the Des Moines Rapids Canal, the construction of the canal around the Cascades, the Green Bay and Mississippi Canal, the Saint Mary's Canal, the Saint Clair Flats Canal, the Ship Canal to the Chesapeake Bay, and the Tennessee Muscle Shoals and Chattanooga Canal. Now, will this House say that these are not just as much canals as the Hennepin or the Mississippi River Canals? Here are eight canals which have been considered by this committee and for which appropriations have been made. If the committee had no authority to recommend those appropriations why did they do it? This bill already contains three or four appropriations for canals. Are you going to make an exception of the Hennepin? If you do, on what ground?

Again I say, if I understand the object and purposes of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors since its organization it is in the interest of all kinds of internal improvements so that commerce may be aided and assisted. Why, sir, I can remember well, because I learned it when I was a boy in the history of my country, that the strictest constructionists under Jefferson and Jackson improved the highways of the Alleghanies in the interest of internal improvements, and the action was had by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and it does not make any difference whether it is Hell Gate in New York so that the New Yorkers can have a free access for escape, or whether it is opening up the canal in the West so that the State of New York can have an opportunity of enjoying what we produce. If it is an improvement in the interest of commerce it is entitled to legitimate consideration at the hands of this committee.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary for me to say anything further, except to recall your attention to this one fact, and I state it in all plainness, for I believe it is the fact that will decide this question: Why do we refer those petitions to that committee if it be not for consideration? What is the result of that consideration? This report. Why was that order made? What are these petitions for? If they were to be referred to some other committee, why did we not say so? But having referred them to that committee, that committee was bound to consider them, and this report is the result of their consideration and action.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair promised to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for a minute. The Chair will afterward recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say but a word on the point of order. I desire to confine myself simply to the point of order and to avoid any consideration whatever of the merits of the proposition. It is very clearly of the highest moment to a proper administration of the business of the House that more careful observance should be had of the lines of jurisdiction established between the various committees.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that a reference of a subject-matter to a committee by the House, notwithstanding it may not be the appropriate committee under the rule, does confer jurisdiction upon it. That has always been held. But it has never been held that a reference under the rule of a petition through the petition-box conferred such jurisdiction. That act being purely clerical, it has never been held, and can not be held, that it confers of itself jurisdiction.

Under the rules the subject-matter of this paragraph belongs, of course, to the Committee on Railroads and Canals. It does not belong to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. And I submit, Mr. Chairman, the only possible question that can arise is whether or not this subject has been referred to that committee in such form as under the rules of the House would confer jurisdiction. If it has not, that committee certainly has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter. And it is certainly of the highest importance that the Chair in ruling upon questions of this character should bear in mind, as I have no doubt the Chair will bear in mind, the importance of preserving the jurisdiction of the respective committees, to the end that there may be no confusion resulting from the disregard of the rule on the one side and no conflict of jurisdiction on the other, and that the House may take it for granted that a subject coming from a committee to the House comes through the recognized and proper channel.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress this identical question of order was presented. The question of order was made upon a similar section or provision in the river and harbor bill; and upon that occasion I addressed some remarks to the Chair on this question of order embracing an important decision, which I will send to the Clerk and ask him to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not wish to trespass on the time of the committee, the question of order having already been elaborately discussed. During the general debate on this bill on Monday last I invited the attention of the committee to the clause authorizing the construction of this Hennepin Canal, and attempted to show that it was improperly in this bill, and that at the proper time I would move to strike it out, and would offer additional reasons to those that I then gave to this committee why this should be done. Now, I simply desire to read to the Chair a decision embracing a similar proposition which was made by the Speaker of the House in 1850, upon which an appeal was taken and the decision sustained by the House. In the first place I assert that the doctrine is laid down in the Digest of the Rules of this House that it is not competent for any committee of the House to report a bill or resolution where the subject-matter embraced has not been referred to the committee by the order of the House or by the rules of the House.

I will now read the decision to which I have referred. It is to be found in the Journal of 1850, page 590, and is as follows:

"Mr. Andrew Johnson, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, reported a bill, which was read for information, by its title, as follows: 'A bill to provide a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain for every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, or any widow who is the mother of a minor child or children, who may become permanent occupants and cultivators of the soil.'

"Mr. Vinton objected to the reception of the bill on the ground that the subject-matter of the bill had not been referred to the committee which had reported it by the House, either by resolution or by the rules or otherwise.

"The Speaker sustained the objections raised by Mr. Vinton, and decided that the said bill was not in order from the Committee on Public Expenditures.

"From this decision of the Chair Mr. Andrew Johnson appealed.

"The question was stated: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

"It was decided in the affirmative.

"So the bill was not received."

This is a decision of a similar question to the one now under consideration, and is, I think, conclusive.

It has been shown to the Chair that the rules give no jurisdiction to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over this subject. Its jurisdiction is over the natural water ways and harbors. The jurisdiction over canals is expressly given to a different committee, the Committee on Railways and Canals. There is no concurrent jurisdiction. It is separate and distinct, and is exclusively given to that committee. This Committee on Rivers and Harbors has reported this bill, embracing this canal proposition, which has never been referred to them by the order of the House, nor have they jurisdiction under the rules; and if there ever was a palpable violation of the rules of the House it is embraced in this proposition. For the Committee on Railways and Canals have already acted on this matter in pursuance of their jurisdiction and under the express order of the House referring the bill to them. They have examined the Hennepin Canal bill and reported it favorably, although I believe their decision was wrong and that the bill ought not to pass, and I voted against it on that committee.

That bill is on the Calendar of the House, and stands there awaiting the consideration of the House. But though it stands there for consideration the gentlemen favoring the measure are not willing to have it considered on its own merits, but have gotten it into this bill in violation of the rules. And we are forced to resort to a question of order to strike it out, so that this bill shall not be encumbered by a bill now pending on the Calendar. If this measure shall be permitted to remain in the river and harbor bill I think it will be one of the most dangerous precedents I have ever known. I hope the Chair will rule it out.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the question now presented is identically the same, and I do not deem it necessary to add anything to the argument which I then made and which has just been read by the Clerk, as the Chair is familiar with all the arguments that were made on this question of order at the last session. If I recollect right the Chair itself participated in discussing this very question, and is, of course, familiar with the arguments that were submitted. The only additional remark that I will make is this: My friend [Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois] is mistaken when he undertakes to state the grounds of the decision of the Chair at the last session of Congress. When that bill was originally reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors all questions of order were reserved. The bill was then recommitted and when it was reported a second time there was a failure to reserve the points of order, and it was upon that ground that the Chair decided that it had no right to rule the matter out in regard to the construction of the Hennepin Canal upon a question of order.

The ground of the decision was that when a bill was reported a second time from the committee there must be a reservation of points of order made. There had been a failure to reserve the points of order upon the second report or substitute. Upon the point of order now made the right of the Chair to decide the point of order is different, because the questions of order were reserved the first time, and then also when the bill was recommitted and when it was reported back the points of order were reserved by myself and several others, as the Journal will show. Owing to that fact, the Chair is not now confined to the point which controlled the Chair when the question was up at the last session. This House has exercised its jurisdiction upon this subject-matter. It referred the bill in regard to the construction of the Hennepin Canal to the Committee on Railways and Canals. They exercised their jurisdiction, considered the question, and reported the bill back to the House at the last session, and the bill is now upon the Calendar awaiting its consideration when reached under the rules.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had no jurisdiction over the question at all. They have no jurisdiction whatever over canals or artificial water ways. Their jurisdiction is confined under the rules to the improvement of rivers and harbors. This bill ought not to have been encumbered by the provision for the construction of this canal. This work will involve the expenditure of perhaps forty millions or more. I have heard it variously estimated. If this project has merit in it let it rest on its own merits when the bill for the construction of the Hennepin Canal on the Calendar is reached. It was stricken out of the river and harbor bill at the last session by a vote of this House, and it ought not to have been put in this bill to be passed on the merits of other provisions in the river and harbor bill which are right and proper. I hope the Chair will rule it out on the point of order, and if not, I hope it will be again stricken out by the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created by this Congress; the Forty-eighth Congress created that new committee. Prior to its creation the duties which now devolve upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were performed by the Committee on Commerce. The argument made here that jurisdiction could be conferred by the reference of a bill from the Chair, or from the Clerk's desk, and not from the petition-box, I regard as untenable, because the rules of the House direct that all bills of this character shall be delivered to the Clerk like petitions and memorials and thence referred. It is quite a frequent thing for a bill to be wrongly referred even from the Clerk's desk—referred to a committee not having jurisdiction of it.

Now, to return to the point of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I claim that that committee has the same rights and duties pertaining to the care of rivers and harbors and their approaches that originally belonged to the Committee on Commerce. It is well known to this House that the Committee on Commerce have reported all the bills for the creation of canals, the purchase of canals, the investment of Government bonds in canals, making the canals free, and determining the expense and appropriating the money to keep them in repair and carry them on after they have been acquired by the Government. That was so as to the Louisville Canal and all the others, and there is one case to which I ask special attention, because it bears directly upon this point. It came up in the Forty-sixth Congress. I read from the Statutes at Large, volume 21, page 189, where I find in relation to the improvement of the Saint Mary's River and the Saint Mary's Falls Canal the following:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States from the State of Michigan the Saint Mary Canal and the public works thereon, provided such transfer be so made as to leave the United States free from any and all debts, claims, or liabilities of any character whatsoever. And said canal, after said transfer, shall be free for public use: And provided further, That after such transfer the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to draw from time to time his warrant on the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the actual expenses of operating and keeping said canal in repair.

There, Mr. Chairman, is a direct precedent for the recognition by this House of the right of the Committee on Commerce to report a bill of this character, and I claim that the authority which at that time belonged to the Committee on Commerce is to-day vested in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I believe they have the same authority in this respect that the Committee on Commerce had at that time. The precedents are all in that direction, and I know of no more appropriate committee to which a question of this kind could be referred than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because the work in question is not merely a canal, but is also part and parcel of the connection between the great Mississippi system and the lakes, and therefore properly belongs to that committee.

The other point raised by the gentleman from Georgia, that another bill containing this provision is on the Calendar or in another committee, does not, I believe, hold good, for the reason that, if I am correct, the ruling of the Chair has been that to exclude a proposition under this rule it is necessary that the bill pending should be identical, and not merely similar in substance. This is all I have to say.

Mr. BLAND obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] proceeds, the Chair desires to state that gentlemen of the committee are anxious to reach a conclusion in this argument. The Chair has indulged members thus far in this discussion because he desired to hear all the considerations pro and con that could be presented. But it is fair to state that the Chair would not think it proper, unless the Committee of the Whole should force him to do so, to deliver an opinion upon this point this evening. There are other points of order to be raised. The Chair would like to have the debate on this point closed early, so that the other points may be presented and considered, and that the Committee of the Whole may go into the general debate to-day, the Chair being informed that such is the desire of members generally. The gentleman from Missouri will now proceed.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the main objects of our rules concerning appropriation bills is that no committee shall report any measure or provide an appropriation for carrying it out unless that committee has specific and unquestioned jurisdiction of the subject-matter. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the first clause of Rule II, which reads as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows.

In the enumeration which follows is this paragraph:

To the improvement of rivers and harbors—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Chair will notice that the requirement of the rules in regard to the reference of propositions for their appropriate committees is specific, and it is provided expressly that subjects relating "to the improvement of rivers and harbors" are to be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. But there is no provision that this committee shall have jurisdiction of any proposition affecting railways and canals. On the contrary, the jurisdiction of such subjects is expressly given to another committee, for subdivision 17 of Rule XI embraces this provision:

To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. Chairman, my point is that when in this case the petition went into the petition-box and was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors it was in violation of the rules, not in pursuance of the rules. The rules provide that particular propositions shall be referred to specific committees; and when by placing a petition in that box a member sends a subject to a committee not having jurisdiction of that matter, it is a violation of the rules of the House. This petition did not go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in pursuance of the rules. The rules provide where that petition should have gone; and if it has gone to any other committee than that specified in the rules, it has gone there in contravention of the rules.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman will permit me to suggest that if such a practice were tolerated, if the committees could acquire jurisdiction in that way, infinite difficulty and confusion would arise.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Alabama very properly suggests that if subjects can be referred to an inappropriate committee in this surreptitious manner—meaning no offense whatever by that language, but using it only to describe a supposed proceeding—if this can be tolerated by the House, in what confusion should we be thrown! Committees having no jurisdiction under the rules of a particular proposition could in this stealthy way acquire jurisdiction under a pretense of conforming to the rules here. Of course I impute nothing wrong.

Mr. NEECE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLAND. I will yield for a question only.

Mr. NEECE. Supposing the petition had been referred by the House directly to this committee, would that have given the committee jurisdiction?

Mr. BLAND. Had the attention of the House been called to this petition, had it gone to that committee by a vote of the House, that would have been the action of the House. But when a single member puts a petition into the petition-box and sends it to an inappropriate committee, it is not the action of the House, but is in contravention of the rules which the House has provided for its government.

Mr. MILLS. Does my friend hold that it is competent for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report in their bill a proposition for the improvement of the Tennessee River by cutting a canal around Muscle Shoals?

Mr. BLAND. Any proposition that looks mainly to the improvement of a river presents a different question, the consideration of which is not necessary in this discussion.

I started out with the broad proposition, that according to the spirit of our rule no appropriation committee, unless it has specific jurisdiction, should be permitted to report a measure or provide appropriations to carry it out. These rivers are subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by the rules of the House; but a proposition that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall assume jurisdiction of a measure for building a canal, a matter belonging properly to the Committee on Railways and Canals, presents a different question. The naked question is whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over railways and canals. This committee might just as well have reported in this bill a provision for constructing a railroad as for constructing a canal; for both propositions by our rules go properly to the same committee.

The rivers and harbors of this country are specifically given to this committee. We have rivers and harbors enough to consume our revenues and empty the Treasury if we improve them all without entering upon these schemes of building canals.

The Chair having admonished us that he did not desire a great deal of time taken up or consumed in this discussion, I make the point that that petition has not gone to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in pursuance of the rules of the House, but in violation of the rules of the House and the rights of the House over it.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, we are proceeding in Committee of the Whole, and this committee, if I understand it, has no more power than other committees of this House. I deny that this committee has power to pass upon the jurisdiction of other committees. I deny we have the right to sit in judgment over the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I maintain that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have jurisdiction of this question, and that original jurisdiction by the action of the House was given to that committee.

It was conceded here that petitions have been referred through the petition-box to this Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is conceded here in the argument that if this House had referred such petitions to that committee it would have jurisdiction. If that be true, then the committee acquired jurisdiction, because when a petition was placed in the petition-box and referred to that committee a record was made of that fact, and that record was not approved until the next day, when the attention of every member of the House was called to that record which showed the disposition of such petition; and when that record stands approved by action of the House it is too late in the Committee of the Whole or in the House to say the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of the question.

Therefore I claim, Mr. Chairman, placing the petitions in the petition-box is in obedience to the rule of the House, and when such a thing is done a record is made of the fact, and that when that record has been approved it is too late to say here in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that that action is not binding upon it as well as upon the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and of the gentleman in charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, time should be used sparingly in this debate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, there is one phase of this question which has not yet been presented in the discussion on this point of order, and I have risen for the purpose of presenting that phase of the question. This is not the first time nor the second time that a proposition looking to the digging of a canal to connect the great Mississippi and the lakes has been presented in a river and harbor bill. During the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, when the Committee on Commerce had charge of the preparation and presentation of a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and upon which committee was my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. HORR], that committee presented the first proposition, so far as I am informed, looking to the inauguration of the enterprise of the construction of this canal.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, on the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce—in other words, the river and harbor bill of that year—when the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], who made this point of order, was a member of Congress, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER], who spoke on that side of the question, was also a member, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who also spoke on that side, was likewise a member, not one of them rose in his seat to make the point of order on the proposition embodied in that bill in relation to the initiation of this enterprise. I will send up to the Clerk's desk, for the purpose of being read, what was embraced in the bill of that year on this subject, without a single point of order being raised, and which became a part of the law of that session.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to survey and locate a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, with a branch canal or feeder from the most practicable and convenient point on Rock River to the most practicable and convenient point on the main line of said canal. Said canal and said branch shall not be less than seventy feet wide at the water-line, and not less than seven feet in depth of water, with locks not less than one hundred and fifty feet in length and twenty-one feet in width, and with a capacity for vessels of at least two hundred and eighty tons burden; and for that purpose the Secretary of War shall have power and authority, by engineers and agents employed by him, to enter upon any lands for the purpose of making the necessary preliminary examinations and surveys; and the cost of construction, the annual cost of maintenance, and economy of use of said canal, when completed, shall be estimated and accompany the said surveys; and the Secretary of War shall cause to be made by skillful engineers of the Army a survey of the Illinois and Michigan Canal connecting the Illinois River with Lake Michigan at Chicago, and estimates of the cost of enlarging the same so as to correspond in dimensions with the proposed canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River, and to report to the next session of Congress the cost of enlarging said canal, and the construction of the canal between Hennepin and the Mississippi River and the right of way therefor; and for the purposes of this paragraph the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Gentlemen around me say that it is no argument against the point of order now raised to cite the fact that in the Forty-seventh Congress a similar proposition was embodied in the bill of that year. I say, sir, that in that Congress, in the bill which was reported for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the committee charged with the preparation of that bill saw fit to embody in it that provision which the Clerk has just read. Since that was done, and since it passed both Houses without any point of order being raised, then I submit that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the present Congress, when they saw fit to follow that example, are hardly amenable to the criticism passed upon them by my friend from Georgia.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman from Louisiana, I hope, will not assume that I made any criticism on his committee, as I meant no such thing. As to the provision of the statute passed by the Forty-seventh Congress, to which the gentleman refers, it may afford justification for the course his committee has pursued in supporting this proposition. But I submit whether or not that is proper to a discussion of the point of order when no point of order was made on that proposition to which he refers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I cited that not so much in the way of an argument against the point of order made by my friend from Georgia, but in order to let the House know that the same question was presented to the House on two occasions before this. In the bill of the last session of this Congress relating to rivers and harbors the same proposition was embodied, and the point of order was then made as it is made now, and it was not ruled out on that occasion on the point of order. But before that, I submit that in a similar bill this House had, in part, committed itself to the proposition that a measure of this sort could be embodied in a river and harbor bill, because a clause relating to the initiation of this measure had passed a former Congress without objection or criticism.

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair agreed to hear the gentleman from Illinois on the left for one minute, and will then conclude debate upon this point.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. One word, Mr. Chairman, as to the question of jurisdiction of this committee. I desire to say that the estimates, the report of the engineers, come from the Secretary of War and are submitted to this House. They were appropriately referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The House had jurisdiction of the question of reference, and could have changed that reference had it so desired, or it could have discharged the committee from the consideration of that matter after it was so referred. But failing to do so, then this proposition comes before the House by a direct order of the House on this subject and in conformity with the rules of the House——

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the Chair delivers an opinion I desire to call his attention to the other clause of Rule XXII I refer to, which provides that where there has been an improper reference of a petition it is the duty of the committee to report it back for proper reference through the petition-box. There is no such reference here. Therefore, the reference to the committee must stand as the action of the House under that clause of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as this is a very important question, and as no progress will be made in the bill by delivering an opinion now upon the point of order, the Chair thinks best not to decide the question at this time, both because the Chair would like to place his views in proper shape and also because it would be an unnecessary consumption of time. The Chair would ask, therefore, if there are any other points of order to be raised on this bill? The Chair was informed by some gentleman, Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, that he had a point of order on the bill. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to make the point of order on this part of the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I want to raise a point of order on the sixth section of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that that will be in order when we reach that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe that we have not yet reached that section, being now in consideration of the first paragraph. The sixth section has not yet been reached.

If there be no further points of order the general debate will begin.

The general debate begins at twenty-one minutes past 2 o'clock, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that this general debate is to begin now? I think there was a distinct understanding that there should be debate under the five-minute rule, and that gentlemen should occupy the time when certain portions of the bill were read which they desired to discuss.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that there would be general debate, but the speeches would be limited to five minutes, and the first of them will begin now.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that we are compelled to occupy our time before questions are reached which we desire to discuss?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair endeavored in various ways to get an understanding on this point, but the committee refused to have the bill reread. We are in the condition of allowing gentlemen to go on in this way because no other way was allowed. The bill will not be read any more.

Mr. NELSON. I would inquire when the Chair will allow amendments to be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. When the debate is ended, the hour and a half which has been allowed.

The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for a motion.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Arkansas yields to me to make a motion that the committee do now rise for the purpose of permitting the Committee on Appropriations to go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to reconsider the vote by which an order was entered that the consideration of the Post-Office bill should be resumed after the reading of the Journal to-day.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, which is that the consideration of the Post-Office bill shall be resumed immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. That requires unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. The motion to reconsider has been agreed to, and the question recurs on the original motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman can withdraw his motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now call up for consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill, the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union have reported the Post-Office appropriation bill. It comes up as unfinished business. The previous question has been ordered on the bill, on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and also on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk will report the amendments in the order in which they were reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as follows:

On line 28, page 2, strike out "$5,100,000" and insert "$5,300,000;" so that it will read:

"For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $5,300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

After line 28, page 2, insert the following:

"And postmasters are authorized, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, to assign at any time any clerk or employé of their respective post-offices to duty in any branch thereof: Provided, always, That any employé shall be paid from money-order funds for such time as he is engaged in money-order work."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as follows:

In lines 30 and 31, strike out "$4,100,000" and insert "$4,535,000;" so that it will read:

"For payment of letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system, $4,535,000."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for a vote upon that amendment. There is an increase of——

Mr. HORR. I object to debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I simply want to state the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is operating, and debate is not in order.

Mr. HORR. What is the question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The question is on increasing the appropriation——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Chair will state the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 91, noes 76.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order to save time, I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 47.

Mr. COX, of New York. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 107—the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. HORR. I call for tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays. I make the demand for the purpose of saving time.

Tellers were not ordered, only 7 members voting therefor.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 96, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—152.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. HORR (interrupting the roll-call). Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have said to me that they do not understand the amendment that is being voted upon. I wish the Chair would have it reported. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEWITT, of New York). The House will be in order, so that the Clerk may hear the responses of gentlemen. The Clerk will proceed with the roll-call.

After the completion of the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HERBERT] is absent on account of sickness in his family.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HURD with Mr. BREWER, of New York, for this day.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, for this day.

Mr. WOODWARD with Mr. HOWEY, for this day.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, with Mr. OATES, on the Post-Office appropriation bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. SUMNER, of California, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported was as follows:

In lines 45 and 46, strike out the words "but no lease shall be made," and after the word "term," in line 46, insert the word "not;" so that it will read "to be paid quarterly for a term not exceeding five years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported was as follows:

In lines 61 and 62, strike out "$15,265,000" and insert "$14,010,000."

Mr. HORR. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported was as follows:

After line 66, insert "for railway post-office car service, $1,765,026."

Mr. HORR. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported was as follows:

After line 153 insert:

"For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $236,764."

Mr. REAGAN. What does that mean?

Mr. HORR. The fast mail.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to know about it.

Mr. HORR. You are right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLACKBURN). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported was as follows:

In line 164, strike out "$700,000" and insert "$900,000;" so that it will read "for inland transportation by star-routes, $5,900,000."

Mr. HORR. There is no objection to that.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 51.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, on this star-route proposition I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 35, noes 127—a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—yeas 154, noes 94, not voting 76; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HORR, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. WOODWARD with Mr. HART, for this day.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6816) for the relief of Nathan J. Sharp.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BREWER, of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, from Monday, the 16th instant, on account of important business.

Mr. FINDLAY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until Wednesday next, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD additional remarks on the compensation for transporting the foreign mails.

Mr. MCCORMICK, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the subject of pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that at 10 o'clock to-night the House take a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. on Monday next, with the understanding that I will move to adjourn at or before 12 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the House to the fact that under a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House the regular hour of meeting on and after Monday will be 11 o'clock. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] now moves that at 10 o'clock to-night the House take a recess until 10 a. m. on Monday next.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like it understood that the gentleman [Mr. WILLIS] will move to adjourn at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is understood.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, does this motion mean that we shall continue in session from now until 10 o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not. It means that when the House takes a recess to-night it shall be at 10 o'clock, and shall be until 10 o'clock a. m. on Monday, with the understanding that before 11 o'clock on Monday the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] shall move to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I have consulted with the gentleman in charge of the legislative bill, and he does not desire to go on beyond 10 o'clock.

Mr. SLOCUM. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that next Monday will be the last day when committees can be called upon for reports.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House will adjourn so as to save that hour.

Mr. SLOCUM. I give notice that I desire to call up on Monday next the bill to retire General Grant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. All in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] will say ay; those opposed no. [After a pause.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WILLIS. I will not press the motion.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

In line 165, strike out "482,300" and insert "682,300;" so that the clause will read:

"For railway post-office clerks, $1,682,300."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am not in favor of this proposition; but I will not consume time by calling for a separate vote upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection this amendment will be considered as agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote just taken, and also moves that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. In the absence of objection the latter motion will be considered as agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

After the word "thereof," in line 192, insert:

And drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 2 cents per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and 1 cent for each ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carriers is not established.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

On page 9, after the word "thereof," in line 192, strike out all that follows down to and including line 202, and in lieu thereof insert:

"That all publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act, when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication to bona fide subscribers, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall, on and after July 1, 1885, be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound, or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That publishers of second-class publications may mail sample copies of such publications at the rate of 1 cent for each four ounces, or fractional part thereof, to be prepaid by ordinary stamps affixed thereto, and all acts, so far as they fix a different rate of postage than herein provided upon such first and second class matter, are to that extent hereby repealed on and after July 1, 1885. And any article or item in any newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage.

"That at the future lettings of contracts for the manufacture of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to submit bids for the manufacture of said stamps, stamped envelopes, postal cards, and other postal securities, by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, which bids shall be considered in competition with bids from private parties; but provided that the Postmaster-General may reject any and all the bids of private parties and award the contracts, or any of them, upon the bid of the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment it shall be for the best interests of the Government to do so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having thus far been reported and disposed of in the order of their submission in the bill, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has now been reached.

Mr. HORR. Before that question comes up the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole striking out the provision in reference to the payment of American vessels for carrying the mails should be voted upon. If this amendment be not adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is not pertinent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair only desires to ascertain whether the House desires to vote upon all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole before voting upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments to the bill should be considered in their regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has reached in regular order the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HORR. Oh, no; I beg pardon of the Chair.

Mr. ELLIS. Ought not the amendments to be voted on in the order of their adoption? The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was simply read and considered as pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union are entitled to precedence of consideration; and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, although it has been reached in its regular order in the bill, can not be voted upon, in the absence of unanimous consent, until the amendments of the Committee of the Whole have been disposed of.

Mr. ELLIS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will pass for the present the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and proceed to read the remaining amendments reported as adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HORR. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana should be voted on directly after the vote upon striking out the provision in reference to the payment of American vessels for carrying the mails.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HORR. Nobody can object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the votes should be taken in regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 228 to 243, as follows:

"For transporting the mails of the United States in American steamships between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports of the Pacific touching at any foreign port, an amount not exceeding $600,000 of the net revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail matter sent to foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the date of the contract for said service: Provided, That the contract for said service shall be entered into by the Postmaster-General only after legal advertisement with the lowest responsible bidder, for a term not exceeding four years, and at a rate not to exceed 50 cents per mile on the trip each way of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal ports for each trip actually made, which shall not be increased on account of expedition or increased number of trips."

Mr. HORR. In order to save time I call for the yeas and nays on this proposition; and I hope the Chair will state it again to the House.

Many MEMBERS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has reported to the House an amendment striking out the clause just read. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment striking out this clause. On this question the gentleman from Michigan calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 131, nays 112, not voting 81; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with Mr. SPRINGER, on this vote. If Mr. HEWITT were present, he would vote no and Mr. SPRINGER would vote ay.

Mr. JOHNSON with Mr. DIBBLE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. RICE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE with Mr. POTTER. Mr. POTTER, if present, would vote no and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE would vote ay.

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. GOFF, for the rest of the day.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. VALENTINE, on this vote.

Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. BREWER, of New York, for the rest of the day.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. MORRILL, for this day.

Mr. FINDLAY with Mr. ATKINSON, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question next recurs on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Is there objection to giving unanimous consent for its consideration?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

For transportation of mails on foreign steamships, and for foreign administration, for intermediary territorial and sea transit of foreign mails, $370,000.

And in lieu thereof insert:

For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $425,000

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman who offered this amendment whether it covers $370,000 for transportation by foreign vessels and $55,000 by American vessels?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is far better in the other form, for this money is under control of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. American vessels will only get $55,000.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman from Maine is correct—American vessels will get only $55,000, while foreign vessels will get four times as much.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This only proceeds by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the following amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union:

Insert the following:

"SEC. 7. That the Postmaster-General be directed to instruct his subordinates to publish on the foreign bulletin boards in the corridor of the post-office building in the city of New York the news of the sighting or arrival of foreign mail steamers, to the end that the public shall have such news in advance; and provided also that no cost or charge to the Government shall be incurred in consequence of such instructions."

The amendment was agreed to

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the yeas and nays will be taken on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 246, nays 1, not voting, 77; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. KEAN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to record my vote upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall?

Mr. CULLEN. I had been called out temporarily before my name was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to entertain a request for unanimous request.

The announcement of the vote was then made as above recorded.
